For instance, toasting his Nigerian counterpart at a White House dinner, President Carter said America shared Nigeria's deep commitment to promote majority rule, to end apartheid, and to end racial discrimination.

President Shagari himself has forcefully and repeatedly expressed the view that South Africa must be forced out of Namibia as soon as possible—and has hinted that Nigeria might just shut off its oil to America in the process.

It is believed President Shagari carried to his private talks with President Carter the sentiments he expressed to the United Nations earlier this week when he said Nigeria deeply deplored the "collusion" between South Africa and its "Western allies" over Namibia.

There are strong forces within the administration which would prefer America to consolidate its links with Nigeria and Zimbabwe—at the expense of sanctions against South Africa, if necessary.

They have a powerful argument.

Nigeria is the most populous and potentially the most powerful country in Africa. It is America's second biggest oil supplier and it is a vast potential market for American goods.

Zimbabwe, on the other hand, is seen as the key to Southern Africa, and President Carter has been greatly impressed with the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe—seeing him as a statesman of world calibre and a man who might one day become a major African influence.

In addition, in an election year in which the President needs every black vote that he can get, he is doing everything in his power to exploit improved United States links with Black Africa.

In the months ahead, Nigerian and Zimbabwean considerations could play a vital role in influencing American decisions on Southern Africa.

AWSU SECRETARIAT TO BE SET UP IN MONROVIA

Monrovia THE REDEEMER in English 30 Sep 80 pp 1, 7

[Article by J.M. Cassell]

[Text]

THE AFRICAN Water Supply Union comprising 30 African countries is to set up its general secretariat in Monrovia shortly, it was disclosed here yesterday.

AWSU was formed in February this year in Abidjan, Ivory Coast, by eighteen countries in East, West and Central Africa.

This decision was unanimously taken during a congress of the AWSU held in the Ivorian capital of Abidjan.

The General Secretary of the Union, a Togolese, is to arrive in Monrovia soon with his staff to occupy the third floor of the E. J. Roye Building which was once occupied by the erstwhile True Whig Party.

Making this disclosure during an interview, the Acting Managing Director of the Liberia Water and Sewer Corporation, Mr. Francis Broh, said the union was formed with the aims and objectives of exchanging technical information regarding the status of water supply services among member states.

He said that the union will also be used as an entity for improving means through which water services in member nations could be improved.

The Union will also institute training programs for employees of the various water supply organizations of member states, he indicated.

He said the idea of an African Water Supply Union which was conceived by the Ivorian Government some years ago has met the unanimous approval of the People's Redemption Council.

Through such a union, the Managing Director noted, his corporation could derive immense benefits such as pipse, chemicals, meters and other accessories for our corporation," adding "those are all materials that are common in member countries".

ACP-EEC ASSEMBLY MEETING DESCRIBED

London WEST AFRICA in English 6 Oct 80 pp 1947-49

[Article by Peter Suffern: "Taking Stock of Lome Convention"]

[Text] THIS YEAR'S meeting of the ACP-EEC Consultative Assembly was held in the splendid new "hemicycle" which Luxemburg has built for the European Parliament. Mr. Tandeng Muna, President of the National Assembly of Cameroon, and Madame Simone Veil, President of the first directly-elected (as distinct from appointed) European Parliament, presided together over the theoretical 18 representatives of the 59 ACP countries -- actually there were some countries not represented — and what should have been an equivalent number of Members of the European Parliament, but rather more of them were absent. Indeed, it must be reported that the MEPs gave less time to the Assembly's sessions than did the ACP representatives, who were mostly punctilious in their attention.

There were many more women among the MEPs than among the ACP representatives: the European Parliament takes a certain pride in the fact that it has a higher percentage of women members than any of the national Parliaments of the nine member countries of the European Economic Community.

The Assembly has a rather pleasant habit of seating its members alphabetically, or at least the members from the European Parliament with the ACP members being placed in twosomes as the name of their country falls into alphabetical order. This helps to introduce a wide range of the ACP members to a diverse selection of their colleagues from the EP. Occasionally swathes appear, such as Surinam being flanked by Sudan and Swaziland or the unbroken sequence of four women, Carettoni Romagnoli, Cassanmaynago Cerretti, Castellina and Castle. The last was notable by her absence, but then Barbara Castle has long been professionally opposed to Common Market activities and there are, even longer established, suspicions that her vociferousness about the affairs of developing countries have been prompted more by partisan interests than genuine concern.

The main item of the Assembly's work was debating the excellent report by Mrs. Katharina Focke on the practical results of the first Lome Convention and the lessons these offer for the second Lome Convention which, regrettably, still awaits ratification by some EEC countries to bring it into effect.

With such a subject it was to be expected that there would be many speakers, and almost all of them spoke most glowingly of Mrs. Focke's report. Take, for example, the words of Nigeria's representative, Chief Peter Afolabi — several ACP countries were represented by their Ambassadors to the EEC rather than by members of their Parliaments — who said, "The report in its style of presentation, in quality, in factual substance, in elegance, in being unbiased, will ever remain one of the best reports produced for the Assembly . . . she deserves . . . the gratitude of the two arms of the Assembly."

But before Mrs. Focke spoke of her report there were formal introductory speeches, among them one from Mr. T. Z.

Onyonka, Kenya's Minister for Economic Development, who is President of the ACP Council of Ministers. He warned that enlargement of either the EEC or the ACP should not prejudice rights already acquired; present advantages should be maintained. He said that he had in mind the accessions of Greece and Zimbabwe. Negotiations for the admission of the latter were still under way because of difficulties about granting quotas for some of Zimbabwe's exports. The ACP countries were unable to agree with an EEC proposal that these should be made up by shaving portions of those granted to other ACP countries. It has been hoped that Zimbabwe would have been able to take part in the Assembly.

Before introducing her report, Mrs. Focke suggested that the transitional phase between Lome I and Lome II was a good time to take stock of past experience and look at the challenges of the future, especially as negotiations between the industrialised and the developing countries were currently in a state of deadlock. Difficulties had arisen in the recent UN Special General Assembly because of the inflexible approach adopted by countries such as the USA, the UK and her own country, Germany.

The world situation, however, was characterised by a state of crisis which hit developing countries particularly hard. Problems of absolute poverty and hunger were getting worse and the rising price of oil had aggravated the balance of payments difficulties of the developing countries.

There were, however, some rays of hope, she said. The Brandt Commission, for example, had made courageous and constructive proposals for action in the food and energy sectors. The recent OAU meeting in Lagos had established a short- and medium-term plan which could lead to the setting-up of an African economic community.

Taking stock of Lome I she said that whatever criticisms might be made of the Convention — and she herself offered plenty — it was still the most progressive North-South agreement yet.

People seated in the gallery of the "hemicycle" were on the same level as the glass-walled boxes from which interpreters were delivering almost simultaneous translations of the speeches from the floor. It was amusing to compare styles during Mrs. Focke's speech. The French interpreter sat absolutely motionless save for his lips, the Italian was a little more animated but the Englishman punctuated his translation with far more, and more expansive, gestures than Mrs. Focke herself used as she made her points.

One of her first was that the generous intentions of the EEC in giving free access to its market for most ACP products had been more spectacular than effective. In fact, the EEC had improved its balance of trade with the ACP countries each year until the increase in oil prices last year, which turned Nigeria's 1978 deficit of 1,310m. European Units of Account into a surplus of 1,784m. EUA and the overall ACP account from an 800m. EUA deficit to a 3,010m. EUA surplus. Mrs. Focke pointed out that this turn-round was due to prices rather than volume changes and so could hardly be read as a good omen for the future. During the lifetime of Lomé I the structure of EEC-ACP trade had remained largely in the old colonial pattern.

Clearly the trade promotion measures included in Lomé I had been ineffective, they had indeed been little used. Lome II clauses had been modified in the light of this and trade co-operation will now cover national and regional marketing as well as EEC and non-EEC markets, including ACP-ACP trade. [It is worth noting that any increase in a developing country's trade can help to enlarge its quota entitlement at the IMF.]

Mrs. Focke said that it would be reasonable to expect the Centre for Industrial Development to have a more significant effect under Lome II than it had had under Lomé I, now that it had garnered some experience and was now better able to frame industrial policy objectives in ACP countries. There had also been a failure to restructure EEC production to allow for goods from ACP countries and, of course, there had been a growing atmosphere of protectionism.

Ghana plea on cocoa

Obviously more money needed to be spent under Lomé II to produce the success that could be achieved but almost equally important, said Mrs. Focke, was more imaginative thought about problems and solutions. She mentioned imagination specifically when talking about rural development, technical aid, the least favoured nations and the place of women, especially in agriculture. Mrs. Focke had clearly, herself, given a lot of thought to her report and it soon became clear and she had stimulated a lot of thought.

A particularly incisive speech came from Senegal's Ambassador, Mrs. Seydina Sy, who pointed out that both the Lome conventions and the resolution on world hunger passed by the European Parliament were reminiscent of a team playing most elegant football when the purpose of the game is to put the ball in the net. So far there had been no goals scored. He also suggested that the EEC appeared to talk three separate languages, one to the ACP, another to the UN and similar bodies — strong feelings about the failure of the UN Special Session to agree on a clear time-table for negotiations were apparent in Luxembourg but were kept well reined back — and a third at home. Mrs. Sy thought that more frequent meetings of the Assembly should be considered.

There was a marked stress from Italian MEPs on the need to develop proper scientific and technical links, with less Eurocentricity. Mrs. Focke had pointed out that the excellent studies initiated by CILSS had been little pursued in Europe.

The number of speakers on Mrs. Focke's report — and the number of amendments offered for its concomitant resolution — squeezed the time for other business, which included a report from Mr. Jaquet on what might be regarded as house-keeping matters of the Assembly, a report from Mr. Michel on proper protection for the rights of migrant workers and also students and resolutions on fishing and cocoa.

Resolution on Fishing

The resolution calling for more co-operation in developing fishing, moved by Sierra Leone's Ambassador Kanu, was passed unanimously. Fishing was obviously highly regarded by members of the Assembly, being first spoken of in the formal opening ceremony speech of Mr. Boldendorf, President of the Parliament of Luxembourg, a land-locked country. It was, of course, mentioned in Mrs. Focke's report and Mrs. Ewing, in her speech on the report, revealed that the Highlands' and Islands' Board was devising a scheme to offer the skills of Scottish fishermen to help in training ACP fishermen. This should have pleased Mr. Ganga-Zanzou of Congo, the first speaker after Mrs. Focke, who had concluded an admirably brief speech by suggesting that the time had come to move on from words to more practical action.

Imagination needed

Ghana successfully moved a resolution, tabled by seven ACP cocoa producers, urging the EEC to "assume its full responsibilities (towards) conclusion of a new International Cocoa Agreement". This was another topic which had been mentioned by several speakers, including Mr. Claude Cheysson, the EEC Commissioner for Development. Mr. Cheysson had made the telling point that if the industrialised countries are so anxious to have some degree of certainty about the future prices and supplies of petrol then they must surely apply the same reasoning to cocoa. Mr. Cheysson had finished his speech by observing that for him the Lomé Conventions were an advance guard and an advance guard is useless if the main body of troops does not follow it, "Lomé will only have a real value if there is progress in the North-South Dialogue".

WEST GERMAN INTEREST IN AFRICA EXAMINED

London WEST AFRICA in English 6 Oct 80 pp 1959, 1961, 1963, 1965, 1967-69

[Reported entitled: "West Germany and West Africa--Aid and the Mercedes Status Symbol"]

[Text]

PROBABLY the most ubiquitously visible symbols of West Germany in West Africa are Mercedes Benz cars. Their further significance as high status symbols is also probably helpful to sales of other West German goods: if having a Mercedes is a visible sign of material success isn't having a Grundig hi-fi set, or even just a Braun cigarette lighter, (albeit designed by an Englishman), a clear indication that one is on the way up the ladder? And that one has the good sense to pick quality and get value for money?

The proliferation of German-made consumer goods owes nothing to a colonial link which ended more than 60 years ago and was later overlaid by Anglophone and Francophone influence for 40 years before independence: how many people in Ghana's Volta Region and in Togo remember Togoland or in eastern Gongola State and the United (Anglo and Francophone) Republic of Cameroon remember Kamerun?

Germany first came to Africa in the "scramble" of a century ago and staked its claim, in the course of which she added the word hinterland to the vocabulary of geographers and politicians. Having been despatched from the continent Germany paid little attention (apart from a deep, even if numerically small, academic attachment) to Africa south of the Sahara until about 20 years ago when the possibilities of trade and the opportunities of development attracted German businessmen back to places in the sun.

Since then, German engineers have helped to shape modern Lagos with their fly-overs, are developing Nigeria's steel industry and have recently started building Mercedes Benz cars — those symbols again — in Anambra State and, of course, German bankers have taken an active part in Nigeria's ₦1000m. loans. Not that Nigeria is the only place where Germany is in evidence though of course the size of the country means that it is likely to attract most attention. Only last month West Germany announced that it was granting Sierra Leone Le13.7m. worth of development assistance and another Le21.8m. to the Mano River Union which groups Sierra Leone, Liberia and, soon, Guinea in an economic union. At another level, a fortnight ago 560 German tourists made a day trip to Banjul!

Germany's interest in Africa is not, however, purely a matter of selling and buying goods and services. Last year it provided $3,400m. worth of Official Development Assistance to Third World countries, second equal in cash terms with France among the OECD countries (the US gave $4,600m). In terms of the percentage of its GNP given as ODA this was 0.44 percent, compared with the target of 0.7 percent. Under Germany's current medium term plan, however, allocations to the Ministry of Co-operation are to rise by 12.5 percent annually until 1983, which is double the planned percentage increase for the budget as a whole.

It has to be recognised that the ordinary German in the street, concerned by a rising inflation rate (even if it is much lower than in most other countries) and an increase in unemployment (again lower than other countries), and a mounting national debt, feels that perhaps the Government is being over-generous in its aid policies with his tax mark.

A political analyst at one of West Germany's numerous research institutes recently pointed out: "Those developing countries who expect Bonn generally to liberalise its trade and aid policies as a result of the Brandt Commission report are going to be sadly disappointed. Certainly Brandt still has an important influence over foreign policy within the social Democratic Party, even though his influence outside the party is negligible today. But Schmidt and other party bosses know that the electorate already feels they have been too generous.

"Remember that our capital aid is the only one in the world not tied to the purchase of the donor's products. The US, Japan and others only give money to countries who buy their goods with it — we don't make that demand (Germany is reasonably confident that the quality of its goods will bring much of this "untied" aid back to it, but the fact of being "untied" does make it harder to sell aid policies to the voter). Our aid will only increase significantly for political purposes, and our trade policy will always stay in line with the rest of EEC".

This is not an isolated view. The general consensus among West German politicians and businessmen is that the Brandt Commission's findings may have been quite morally and practically correct but it is not up to West Germany alone to implement them outside the framework of a concerted worldwide effort by the industrialised nations. (That, most of them feel, is a very unlikely prospect for some time to come).

This policy of "staying in line with the rest of the EEC" at times causes the government embarassment, for example over trade restrictions. Government spokesmen become decidedly uncomfortable when confronted with questions about their continued support of quotas, attempting to parry them with answers about trade being an EEC matter rather than solely a West German question.

The truth is that West Germany finds itself in a cleft stick over quotas. It has an extremely strong, increasingly export-oriented economy and most businessmen and politicians like to call themselves free traders. But its EEC partners, particularly Britain and France, do not have the benefit of an efficient industrial machine and see quota restrictions as a quick and easy answer to the dangers of foreign competition--and semantically distinguishable from overt protectionism.

This belief in the benefits of free trade--which is reinforced by what it has done for Germany in the past 35 years--has also led to confrontations with developing countries over international commodity agreements, when Germany has felt that the case being put by the developing countries is likely to produce distortions in markets rather than stabilise secular trends.

By and large Germans do not want to gain short-term advantages by impoverishing suppliers, since they see almost everybody as a potential customer and a would-be customer without sufficient money to pay is no help to them. Also they want to get the repeat orders which mean continuing business, as has been clearly shown by some of the tender prices submitted by German concerns.

Besides trade and aid Africa has another part in West Germany's scheme of things, namely in its foreign policy. The formulation of West Germany's current foreign policy probably involves the resolution of more conflicting internal and external elements than that of any other Western nation.

The least mentioned but most pervasive of these is the divided country's history. In its foreign policy, every West German government for the past 20 years has been looking over its shoulder at its Nazi past (the election of a West German as President of the current session of the United Nations has been greeted in Germany as a sign of global forgiveness for that past) and at the same time looking sideways at the Eastern half of the country, which West Germans regard as only temporary under foreign domination. Some 20 per cent of West Germans were refugees from the East and more than 40 per cent have relations in the East.

So Germany both wants friends abroad and must seek them delicately, which may explain why to West Germans the cardinal virtues of diplomacy are discretion and consensus. Recent indiscretions and apparent aberrations by allies whom West Germany has stood by, at some inconvenience on occasion, have encouraged the Germans to venture a little more independently both in seeking and offering friendship. This is a point which African governments should perhaps keep in mind and turn, discreetly and agreeably, to their own benefit when encountering West German overtures.

Although Chancellor Helmut Schmidt maintains that West Germany plays only a modest role in world politics he has brought his country a long way from former Chancellor Willi Brandt's description of West Germany as "an economic giant but a political dwarf." Indeed it might be more appropriate to suggest that what Schmidt should claim is that Germany plays its role modestly. Africa has surely had enough of bombast to relish a touch of modesty, and pragmatically to note that it was Goethe who said "The deed is all, and not the glory"--Die Tat ist alles, nicht der Ruhm.

Frankfurt Looks Towards Africa

THE FOCAL THEME of the Frankfurt Book Fair, which opens on October 8, is "Africa -- a continent asserts its identity". Between 30 and 35 African authors and journalists are expected. One hall will contain some 2,500 books, newspapers, magazines and journals containing works of African literature published during the past ten years. A parallel exhibit will display literature written about Africa by non-Africans.

Before the Fair opens a three-day seminar is to be held on African literature, four sessions being held to discuss African literature's communicative function, historical function, political function and pedagogic function. Among the West African writers expected to take part are Mongo Beti, Chinua Achebe, Cyprian Ekwensi, Sebène Ousmane and Abiola Irele. During the fair itself there will be a full programme of readings, discussions and lectures on aspects of African literature. On October 7 a formal presentation will be made of $3,000 Noma Award, which has been won this year by the Senegalese writer, Mariama Bâ with her novel, Une Si Longue Lettre. John Pepper Clark, the Nigerian poet and playwright, receives a special commendation for The Ozidi Saga.

This is the 32nd Frankfurt Book Fair and the event has developed into the major event of the European book trade. This is the third to have a "focal theme". In 1976 it was Latin America. In 1978 the theme was "The Child and the Book". The idea of the two-yearly special emphasis, according to the Book Fair Director, Peter Wiedhaas, is "to open the door for themes and areas which occupy only a peripheral place on the book market and do not have strong lobby — books which otherwise might be lost in the great flood of literature being published."

The organisers have a generally educational aim — to raise the consciousness of the population about Africa — and also a hard commercial intention — the book fair is big business first and foremost. The goal, according to the Director, is to create a market for African books — "to interest our publishers more in works from Africa, to translate them and get them into the book stores here".

"Up to now Africa has only been an exotic outsider, little noticed in the bustle of the literary marketplace," said Herr Weidhaas. He hoped that Frankfurt, because of the world-wide reputation of its book fair, would increase the interest in African publishing and writers not only in Germany but throughout the world. Every effort has been made to bring to Frankfurt as many African publishers and authors as possible. Many private, religious and international publishers have been invited to the Fair at the expense of the German Foreign Office.

The organisers hope through the use of music and films to create a "visual and aural image of Africa" during the Fair, to achieve a broader cultural spread than with the Latin American Theme. The fringe activities are designed to place the African book in its proper cultural setting and to provide cultural reverberations. The aim, Herr Wiedhaas says, is that "even after the stands are dismantled and the exhibitors gone, that something of Africa will remain with us".

However, Herr Weidhass emphasised again that the Fair was more of a hard-driving business event that a cultural festival. The object was trade. Therefore a meeting point would be set up at the Fair where African trade visitors would be advised on making proper contacts and doing business deals. Herr Weidhaas considers that mistakes were made with the Latin American theme four years ago, and to help to avoid a repetition a Third World literary agency has been at up, initially with the backing of the German Protestant churches. The agency is to monitor and evaluate African book production during the entire year. Books suitable for publication in Germany are to be translated and steered through the proper literary channels. The agency would assume the task of negotiating rights and licences. A bulletin is to be published regularly and sent to publishers and the media

Herr Weidhaas has been assisted by Mr. Said Mzee, a Tanzanian who was formerly deputy chief editor of the East African Publishing House in Nairobi. It was hoped to employ another African, but the Fair, according to Herr Weidhaas, "has almost no money for such events". The problem of integrating the areas which publish books in English, French and Portuguese was difficult. Many African exhibitors demanded the right to have a hand in decision-making about the Fair and not to be represented through European "experts". The Director of the Ife Book Fair, Mr. Wunmi Adegbonmire, was one of the African representatives advising the organisers. In addition a team, including Herr Weidhaas and Mr. Mzee, went to the Ife Book Fair in March to learn about African points of view. There was also an exhibition of 600 West German books at Ife and three West German experts conducted a special workshop on aspects of book design, production, and marketing; more than 50 participants came from eight African countries.

A special double number of the African Book Publishing Record, edited by Hans M. Zell, is being published to coincide with the Book Fair. It includes a Who's Who of African publishers at the Fair and a long interview with Maiama Bâ.

West Africa, in the issue of October 20, will publish an extended Matchet's Diary from Frankfurt.

Exporting to Germany

[By Dr. Helga Henselder]

EVERY West African country was able to increase substantially at least part of its exports to the Federal Republic of Germany during 1976 to 1979. This applies particularly to their agricultural exports and to semi-finished and finished goods.

Total exports by Nigeria rose during this period by 61 per cent, agricultural exports by 28 per cent, exports of semi-finished goods by 221 per cent and those of finished goods by 461 per cent. Without Nigeria, total exports rose by 31 per cent, agricultural exports by 29 per cent, exports of semi-finished goods by 46 per cent and those of finished goods by 484 per cent. These growth rates are all the more remarkable as they relate largely to the export efforts of four out of a total of 18 West African nations.

In spite of these noteworthy growth rates, West Africa's share in total German imports and in imports from developing countries is insignificant. In 1979, including Nigeria, the proportion of total imports amounted to 2.1 per cent, of agricultural imports 2.5 per cent, of raw materials 11.4 per cent, of semi-finished goods 0.3 per cent and of finished goods 0.1 per cent. Without Nigeria, the figures are 0.6 per cent of total imports, 1.6 per cent of raw materials, 0.1 per cent of semi-finished and finished goods.

In 1979, West Africa's share in total goods imported from Africa was 35 per cent including Nigeria and 10 per cent excluding Nigeria. Seventy per cent of West African exports to West Germany in 1979 came from Nigeria, owing to the high proportion of mineral oil in total exports.

West Africa's share in total imports into Germany in 1979 from developing countries was 11.4 per cent including Nigeria and 3.6 per cent excluding Nigeria. The proportion of total imports from Africa, including Nigeria, was 35 per cent, of agricultural imports 47 per cent, of semi-finished goods 16 per cent and of finished goods 36 per cent. Excluding Nigeria, the figures are 10 per cent, 40 per cent, 8 per cent and 35 per cent respectively.

The structure of West African exports to West Germany, excluding Nigeria, developed positively since the high proportion of oil in total exports from Nigeria conceals the structural change taking place in West African exports. The proportion of raw materials in West African exports to West Germany (excluding Nigeria) dropped from 1976 to 1979 by 57 per cent to 38 per cent while, including Nigeria, the proportion certainly fell but only from 81 per cent to 79 per cent.

The proportion of agricultural exports in total exports in 1979 was 46 per cent (only 16 per cent, including Nigeria) and the proportion of semi-finished goods 4 per cent (3 per cent including Nigeria), and that of finished goods 15 per cent (5 per cent including Nigeria). However, the substantial increase in the proportion of finished goods between 1978 and 1979 was due to supplies of uraniaum and uranium compounds from Niger and not to any substantial rise in the export of consumer goods or durables. Noteworthy — albeit on a humble basis — is the continuing rise in the export of semi-finished and finished goods to the Federal Republic of Germany in the past five years.

The most successful exporting country was Ivory Coast, which in the period under discussion was the only West African country whose exports to West Germany rose and diversified continuously. If we ignore oil from Nigeria, the Ivory Coast is West Germany's largest supplier amongst the countries of West Africa.

The Ivory Coast is the largest agricultural exporter in the area, increasing its agricultural exports to West Germany by 82 per cent between 1976 and 1978 and by 58 per cent between 1976 and 1979. The proportion of agricultural exports to total exports from the Ivory Coast to West Germany in 1979 totalled 75 per cent, a proportion of finished agricultural products was the highest by comparison with the other West African nations. The Ivory Coast is also the area's largest exporter of finished goods and, up to 1978, its largest exporter of semi-finished goods as well, together with Ghana. Since 1979, Nigeria has taken first place as exporter of semi-finished goods at DM75m.

West Africa is primarily an exporter of agricultural and industrial raw materials. Its export structure, with the exception of the Ivory Coast, is barely diversified: the greater part of the countries are the poorest amongst the developing nations. The unsatisfactory internal infrastructure is a major obstacle to the development of exports. Agricultural exports in 1979, excluding Nigeria, amounted to 2.1 per cent of total imports into West Germany, and to 8.5 per cent of imports from developing countries and 39.8 per cent of imports from Africa.

The Ivory Coast is the leading agricultural exporter in the area. In 1979, it accounted for 22 per cent of total agricultural exports by Africa to West Germany and 47 per cent of agricultural exports from West Africa. Cameroon's share in agricultural exports from West Africa in 1979 was 19 per cent and Ghana's 11 per cent.

The Ivory Coast is the only West African country whose agricultural exports to West Germany increased steadily in recent years, thanks to the country's very dynamic and market-oriented trade promotion policy. The exception was 1979, when agricultural exports dropped by 16 per cent. The Ivory Coast also has the most diversified of agricultural export structures. Finished agricultural products already account for 7 per cent of total exports to West Germany, as against 0.6 per cent from Ghana and 0.3 per cent from the Cameroon. Amongst the other West African countries, agricultural commodities still dominate total exports. After the Ivory Coast, Cameroon, Nigeria and Ghana are the area's strongest agricultural exporters.

Particularly noteworthy is the increase in agricultural exports from Liberia, from DM2.1m. in 1975 to DM17.5m. in 1979 (833 per cent) and from Nigeria, from DM45.7m in 1975 to DM163.5m. in 1979 (358 per cent). However, in 1977, Nigeria's agricultural exports totalled DM235.6m.

The countries experiencing a major reversal in their agricultural exports were The Gambia, Sierra Leone, Senegal, Togo and Niger, while agricultural exports from Mauritania, Mali, Upper Volta, the Cape Verde Islands and Guinea-Bissau to West Germany are insignificant.

Even the strongest supplier countries display sharp fluctuations in the export of semi-finished goods. The Ivory Coast's exports are the most constant but show no increase. The chief exporters are the Ivory Coast and Nigeria. In 1978, their shares in the exports of semi-finished goods amongst total exports from West Africa were 37 per cent, 25 per cent and 5.9 per cent. In 1979, the picture shifted in favour of Nigeria, whose exports between 1978 and 1979 rose by 1,286 per cent, from DM5.9m. to DM75.8m. Nigeria's share of West African exports amounted to 48 per cent in 1979.

In 1979, West Africa's share in the import of finished goods into West Germany was 0.1 per cent, that of developing countries as a whole 2.5 per cent.

Supplies by even the largest exporters fluctuate substantially from year to year, here as well. In 1976, the Ivory Coast was still the largest exporter, with a 38 per cent share of exports from West Africa. In 1979, the Ivory Coast lost its position in favour of Niger and Nigeria, who succeeded in increasing their exports of finished goods appreciably from 1978 to 1979. Similarly, Ghana increased its exports from 1978 to 1979 by 537 per cent, from DM1.7m. to DM10.2m., and Benin by 380 per cent, from DM0.5m. to DM1.9m.

Exports of finished goods from Niger rose from 1978 to 1979 by 457 per cent, from DM18.0m. to DM82.2m., but this increase does not reflect any radical change in the exporting structure, and can be attributed to uranium compounds.

Basing ourselves on the overall view, it would appear that the majority of the West African countries — with the exception of the Ivory Coast — have not succeeded in consistently diversifying their exports, particularly in the semi-finished and finished goods range. What they lack is an offensive export strategy and integrated, aggressive export marketing oriented on the particular features of the target market concerned. Each of these countries certainly has a five-year plan for its economic development, but what is lacking is a concept of long-term export promotion with export priorities. No government of these countries — with the exception of the Ivory Coast — has so far been able to earmark products having export priority. Language barriers and a traditional orientation on the French market are preventing regional diversification of West African exports within the EEC.

A special obstacle to exports, however, is the attitude that the export market must accept output unexamined. Production aligned on export markets is played down. Production is simply not aimed at exports. Aggressive export marketing is too troublesome, and there is still a feeling that they can wait for customers to appear.

The Ivory Coast's success, however, shows that the African countries can be successful on the German Market if they analyse it and offer products that the market can take because the product corresponds with consumer requirements.

What German importers expect from their suppliers are reliability, deliveries consistently to the agreed standard and pattern, good quality and finish, and adherence to delivery dates and contract terms. The majority of the exporting countries of West Africa still have great difficulty in achieving these criteria.

"Trade Without Aid"

A SIMPLE WAY to bring a slightly pained look to a West German exporter's face is to suggest, "Of course you get a lot of export aid from your Government". The simple fact is that German exporters get remarkably little help from their government: they proudly say they get none and maintain that government's job is to keep out of the free market economy, intervening only as much as is necessary to maintain a free market.

Undoubtedly, governments — some more often than others — subsidise exports. This can take place directly, for instance, in the form of cheap credits, or indirectly through government-backed trade promotion schemes. The West German Government, however, has a remarkably clean record for not interfering in the free market export process. Their embassies do not even have the trade promotion responsibilities which occur at British, and other embassies.

In Germany's case this burden falls directly on industry itself. At the heart of the West German business and industrial system are their chambers of commerce and the industrial trade associations. These, not the Government, are the organisations responsible for fostering trade and providing expert back-up for the country's smaller companies. All companies are obliged by law to be members of their local chamber of commerce: this obligation could be looked upon as a (very) indirect form of Government aid to industry.

Ironically, though, the idea is not German. It was forcibly reported by Napoleon from France in the course of a lot of other administrative reforms he imposed. The Germans discovered that the system had a lot of virtue and kept it going after Napoleon had moved on into history.

Compulsory membership ensures that the chambers have an assured income. Companies have to contribute to the chambers of commerce on the basis of turnover. The larger a company's turnover, the bigger its contribution. As the chambers are also responsible for many of the functions performed by Britain's Companies House, West German companies have little chance of minimising their contributions by prevarication or trying to pull the wool over the eyes of harassed officials. The figures are at hand and the only course is to pay up and look pleasant.

The result, however, is that most companies take an active interest in the work of the chambers and what they offer to members. If they have to pay for the service in any event, they might as well get as much as they can out of it, seems to be the general view.

Naturally the bulk of a chamber's work goes towards helping the smaller man. Major companies have wide resources of their own and rarely require the detailed help that the chambers of commerce network provides.

There can be little doubt that this encourages smaller businesses to venture into exporting. This not only helps to expand the country's trade but also to broaden the base of growth. All West German governments for the past 30 years have operated on the basis that government should stay as far away as possible from direct involvement with industry. Most leading trade unionists also strongly subscribe to this belief.

The role of government is seen more as referee between industry and the electorate for example setting environmental standards and introducing pollution control legislation. Although the state does have a small direct share industry, these holdings were acquired with great reluctance and it is firmly averse to extending them. Responsibility for helping companies in trouble remains firmly in the private sector's hands.

The owner of a small light engineering company expressed his feelings thus: "You cannot put the responsibility for trade promotions in government hands. The development of markets requires continuity of policy, but political expediency often requires policy changes that can affect the businessman greatly."

"Just look at the past decade," he said, "there have been a number of major changes in budgetary policy and usually politicians who all have their eye on getting re-elected tend to take the short-term view.

"It is all very well, for example, to claim that old age pensioners need a pay rise more than industrial companies need export services. Certainly, this is the way most politicians would look at it. The trouble is that, when it comes down to it, industry has got to earn the money to pay for increased pensions."

One way to earn that money is by expanding exports which the Germans have done with remarkable gusto over the past three decades. But while the chambers of commerce, directly supported by the businessmen's cash contributions, provide a spring-board for the exporter's travels it is the quality of goods which he offers and the attention that he pays to his customers that earn the sales and the growth of sales which have been such a remarkable feature of German trade — as West Africa well knows.

But even if there is no direct aid for exporters from the Government the trade makes sure that the Government does not neglect its interests, as a special correspondent explains.

West Germany's wholesale and export trade has its top representatives at the centre of the country's equivalent to Whitehall — right opposite the Federal Prime Minister's office.

The co-operation of each department of the Association's organisation within the export and wholesale trade gives individual companies an opportunity of benefiting from a many sided and multifold package of services and putting them to good use in their business. They range from expert and regional services for companies to supra-regional representation of joint interests.

The BGA, as the central association of the wholesale and export trade, permanently represents and safeguards the interests of this branch of industry in Bonn and also in Brussels.

The BGA promotes contact and an exchange of information with the Federal Government and Government Departments, with the Federal Council, the political parties, committees and members of parliament, and with the appropriate experts amongst the Federal Authorities. It represents the topical interests of the wholesale and export trade on 145 national and international bodies.

By means of proposals, expert reports, submissions and lobbying, the BGA takes part in the process of preparing decisions of economic policy in Government and Parliament, particularly on matters concerning policy of economic measures, competition, small firms and structure, on currency, financial and tax policy, on labour and wage policy, on traffic policy, and on foreign trade, agricultural, European and development policy.

The BGA information services emphasise the importance of the wholesale and foreign trade within the economy as a whole.

"Ich bin ein Afrikaner"

Ad'Obe Obe offers some advice, based on enjoyable experience, about being a student in Germany.

I REMEMBER my first Lufthansa flight from Lagos to Frankfurt, during which I realised that all my German added up to the single expression 'Das buch' as uttered by the dying German in John Buchan's Thirty-Nine Steps. Knowing the word for book was not a bad start, I thought, given that my mission was studies. Putting it differently, I was after the 'Golden Fleece', according to Chinua Achebe, in his No Longer At Ease. The truth was I felt very ill at ease.

Not all Africans go to Germany completely ignorant of the language as I was but most would confess to a culture shock which extends far beyond the usual one of being outside one's home territory. After all only a handful of old folks in countries like Tanzania and Cameroon can remember Germany's colonial presence which terminated with the First World War. The Afro-European cultural affiliation, as through the educational systems, becomes well defined when one goes to a country like Germany — one becomes aware that there are Europeans and there are Europeans. In short, the full force of the colonial heritage hits one. Beginning life in Germany is like re-living the Partition of Africa.

The shock is enough to make a number of Africans turn away after a few months: some go home others go to more familiar environments like Britain or France. But those who stay usually do not regret it: they eventually become proud of their 'Made in Germany' qualifications.

The language barrier is easily broken down in the very efficient language schools. The best known of these are the Goethe Institutes: something like the British Council these institutes exist to propagate German culture within and outside Germany. Those who look ahead to studying in Germany and are fortunate enough to live in a city with a Goethe Institute would be able to take German lessons in their home countries. Many African students, like myself, came to Germany without having heard of a Goethe Institute.

The experience of learning a completely new language within a few months is worth going through, even if only to agree with the African student who discovered that he had not regarded English as a second language until he started learning German. He said he realised that he was tri-lingual when he met German expressions for which he had not known the equivalent expressions either in English or his mother tongue. There are Africans in Germany who feel more competent in their new German language than the two previous languages they arrived with.

The Goethe Institute method assumes that all beginners are like children learning to speak and the students are treated accordingly. The method is so efficient that you are guaranteed to speak German — some of it — after the first course of two months. Even those with some previous knowledge would appreciate the difference when they learn it within Germany, where the lessons do not end in the classrooms. In Germany the lessons bear direct relevance to everything around you and you can apply them directly to listening to the radio, reading road signs and — if you are ambitious — newspapers and books.

Compared with the number who want to study in Britain, the USA or France, relatively fewer Africans think of Germany as a natural choice when it comes to going abroad. But, as the German Embassies would tell you, the queue has been lengthening, mainly due to Germany's growing economic presence but also because of the increase in the number of Africans who have studied in Germany.

The majority of African students are sponsored either by the German government or by German companies operating in Africa; a large proportion are post-graduate students. The main fields of study are the sciences, medicine, engineering and agriculture. Of the 498 Nigerians enrolled in German institutions in 1976, 231 were engineering students, 74 were studying medicine, a further 74 were studying sciences. In the culture-bound subjects, only five were doing arts, and not a single one was enrolled in law — a far cry from the picture one would get from examining the British Law Society's lists.

To gain admission into German institutions the prospective student has to provide proof of linguistic ability, which usually means a certificate from a recognised language school. And, of course, the student has to be academically qualified. Most institutions have now catalogued and calibrated foreign school-leaving certificates. Fortunately for Anglophone Africans who would normally have done 'O' and/or 'A' Levels this British tradition is well regarded and recognised by the German authorities. Those not suitably qualified may be required to do a preliminary course, of up to a year, to bring them to German entry standard.

Unlike the British tradition, however, those wanting to study engineering will be required to do up to six months pre-university industrial training. This would normally be in a factory or a similar set-up. This detour could be of enormous advantage in consolidating one's grip on the language.

The better your language the less harrowing the experience of commencing studies. Every African student has a story to tell about how traumatic it is to attend lectures in the first semester. A Gambian student said the action was one of simultaneous translation, and he was often undecided whether to take his notes in German or in English. "Because I was busy translating," he said, "I could only capture parts — the head, the arms or the legs — of the lecture, but never the whole body of the lecture." A smart solution to this problem is to record the lectures and translate at home. Eventually the phase of conscious translations passes, and the African can listen like the German students — how long this period lasts depends on one's linguistic aptitude.

Africans used to the British system are likely to find oral examinations rather intimidating, especially in the first few semesters. The German schoolboy cultivates the art of orally answering questions on all subjects at very early stages. Personally I grew to like it so much I began to wish all exams were oral — facing examiners while trying to talk knowledgeably about a topic on which you know next to nothing involves a psychological game which can be very exciting to play.

Recent students may hear about the revered German academic freedom but they will not have much of it because of Parliamentary acts on higher institutions passed a few years ago. While students were able to make use of the freedom, they studied for as long as they liked, as there were no fixed times for taking exams. It was not uncommon to find students in students' paradises like Heidelberg who have been studying for up to 10 years, especially in philosophy. Ten years ago, a contemporary Nigerian student said the academic freedom not only allowed him to be fed up with studying but he could stay fed up for as long as he liked. A German who fought against the new laws argued that the laws turned the institutions into factories where students are processed as rapidly as possible. "With pressures of exams," he said, "students don't have the time to do anything but be 100 per cent students by definition, which means continually ingesting lecture notes and reference books." Whereas with academic freedom the students had time for other dimensions of life, "they were living students — not just students".

Even with the restricted freedom studying time is generally longer than at British universities. Where the British stipulate three years the Germans say a minimum of four years, which is only accomplished by the very industrious students, the majority stay longer, up to a maximum of five years.

The social life varies according to individual taste and style, but it also depends on the university town. There are definite university towns like Tübingen where the ratio of student population is so large the town more or less shuts down during the long vacations. The situation is rather different in larger towns like Frankfurt, Hamburg or Berlin where there is stronger international flavour to the atmosphere.

But wherever the African student is there is always the possibility of enjoying the thrill of belonging to the little minority group of 'Die Afrikaner' — not to be confused with the more noxious label used in the Republic of South Africa. There are enough African students feeling comfortable among Germans to pose problems for the immigration authorities whose tasks are not made easy by the support which the ubiquitous fräulein gives the foreigners.

Up till the sixties African authorities could not quite make up their minds about how to categorise German qualifications. This was mainly due to ignorance, which has diminished as Germany has become more economically prominent on the continent. These days German certificates are as good as any of the other foreign ones and in some subjects, like medicine, they have a particularly high rating. Besides if the 'ex-Afrikaner' is not employed by his home government there is a big chance of being employed by a Germany company.

On the whole those who studied in Germany would find it extremely difficult to quantify the merits of doing so. The 'Golden Fleece' à la Deutschland could yet be the leitmotif for several novels — if 'Der Afrikaner' can overcome his dilemma on which language to write.

More Than Just Words

THE GOETHE INSTITUTE is most easily explained as West Germany's equivalent of the British Council or the Alliance Française, but obviously it goes about its operations in a way which reflects the German character. Goethe could be described as Germany's Shakespeare and the use of his name for the Institute indicates that its primary purpose is to spread a proper knowledge of the German language. But now its activities range much wider than just word-spinning.

The Institute was started early this century to teach foreigners visiting Germany the German language, after a few years it expanded its activities to other European countries. But it was closed in 1933 when Adolf Hitler decided there were better ways of imposing German culture on Europe.

It was not until 1952 that the Institute restarted. Since then the scope of its activities, and its budget, have progressively expanded until today it has a DM185m. (US$106m.) annual expenditure and operates in 65 countries.

Although direct language teaching remains the backbone of its activities, the Institute also co-operates with foreign educational authorities to improve the standard of local German teachers, arranges and presents cultural events abroad, provides information about West German cultural life and increasingly co-operates with cultural and academic institutions abroad to promote German ideas.

"We address ourselves to elites," says the Institute's secretary-general, Dr. Horst Harnischfeger, of its non-language activities. In these, the term culture is interpreted in its widest context. In addition to promoting German authors and composers, the Institute will also find speakers or instructors in virtually any field where foreign members express interest.

"We don't draw any line," says Dr. Harnischfeger. "If people are interested in learning skills — say silk screen printing — then we send a silk screen printer — a craftsman not an artist."

Science and technological subjects are also covered. Last year the Institute sponsored a lecture tour by a West German scientist who had developed new theories concerning the age of the world. "He was a specialist in this field, but on the other hand his findings were of more general interest," explains an Institute director.

When showing German films abroad, prints with subtitles are usually preferred — the West Germans are less sensitive than the French, for example, about using translations — and video presentations use a second channel in the local language. "We must be realistic and see what information is required. If the recipient doesn't speak German we must give the knowledge he seeks in another language. We don't think this is treason," says an Institute executive.

Although language teaching remains high priority "there are areas in which there is no demand, and it would be no use artificially creating a demand", says Harnischfeger. "But language is our main aim, because in the end you can't really promote a culture without language."

The ways in which the Institute promotes German language and culture vary widely between different regions of the world and even between individual countries within a region. The Institute sees itself very much as a reactive body, responding to requirements of foreign countries as expressed to local institute branches. Because of budgetary constraints it can seldom produce its own material, so it acts essentially as middleman, finding individuals or materials within West Germany to satisfy foreign demands.

Finding staff, however, is never a problem as a position in the Institute is highly coveted; each year some 400 applications from qualified West Germans are received for the 20 vacancies offered and the standard is extremely high.

Perhaps this betrays a desire to serve within the German character that is, appropriately, one of the central themes of Goethe's writings. As Harnischfeger says: "We are prepared to work anywhere we feel we can make a contribution."

Tale of Wurth

THE STORY behind the Wurth Group — now setting out to establish itself in Nigeria — is a fascinating study of the determination of one man and his son in the Germany of the immediate post-war period. It was actually in 1945 that Adolf Wurth first formed his company to manufacture and distribute high quality engineering parts and products for the construction and automotive industries.

Four years later he was joined in the business by his son, Reinhold, as a trainee. Just five years later, the father died, but had by then set the company firmly on course for the future.

The first foreign company was set up in 1962 in Holland, this was the beginning of the establishment of a world-wide network. Today there are 17 such separate companies, set up between 1962 and 1977, which averages just over one new company every year.

In 1980 Wurth markets some 30,000 different items, from modern door frame installations to nuts and screws.

The red shield of Wurth is a well established and well-known symbol of high quality and excellent service, because it is on these two characteristics that the whole of this remarkable business has been built, maintained and expanded. It will not be long before the red shield is equally well known and recognised in Nigeria.

BOTSWANA-SWA RAIL LINK CONTEMPLATED

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 30 Sep 80 p 19

[Text] A rail link between Botswana and South West Africa is entering a detailed feasibility study and details of the proposed railway are expected to be put to the Botswana Government before the end of the year.

The area of study was previously look at by the P/E Consulting Group in South Africa around 1977, but no evaluation or feasibility study was conducted.

At present the line envisaged would cover a distance of 860 km between Francistown and Gobabis in South West Africa near Grootfontein where it would join the main line.

In a second though related study, a South African mining house is evaluating coal deposits in Botswana.

Trade sources point out that the proposed line makes excellent geographic and political sense, but are concerned that the line will not be able to economically justify itself. They believe that the line will definitely get the go ahead, particularly as the feasibility study is being backed by the Western Five and the UK.

They believe that the line can be built within three years as no natural problems on the projected route are foreseen. Others, however, believe that in keeping with the time needed to build the Tazara line, it could take until the end of the decade.

Trade sources have been expecting the line for some time principally as it creates a further outlet for Zaire and Zambia to the West Coast which, assuming the independence of South West Africa/Namibia in the not too distant future, would lessen the dependence of these two copper producers on the South African route and the South African Railways.

Currently Zaire exports about 240,000 tons of copper a year through East London while Zambia has given the freightage contract to Rennies to transport up to 200,000 tons of copper through South Africa.

They believe that the chances of the Benguela line being fully reopened are extremely unlikely as Unita sabotage of the line has been increasing and the port of Lobito was severely damaged this month by Unita guerillas.

Zaire is still expected to keep open the South African route as it is their policy to keep as many transport options open as possible.

MANO RIVER UNION MUST ADOPT COMMUNAL APPROACH TO PROBLEMS

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 3 Oct 80 p 2

[Editorial by Mike T. James]

[Text] EXACTLY seven years ago, the seemingly insignificant town of Malema in the Republic of Sierra Leone received two very unusual guests for a rather unusual occasion.

The two visitors were the Heads of State of the sister states of Sa Leone and Liberia. The event itself was the signing of the Mano River Union Declaration forging an organization designed to formalize the historic fraternal ties between their two peoples.

Today, as people in the two countries along with their brothers and sisters in the neighbouring People's Republic of Guinea swing in a festive mood to celebrate that memorable event, there is little doubt that their respective leaders feel justifiably proud for having had the foresight of bringing this great organization into existence.

The 7th Anniversary of the Mano River Union is especially significant not only because of the tremendous progress and economic fulfilment which the union now holds out to the people, but also because this year saw the entry into the union of a very essential member — the People's Revolutionary Republic of Guinea.

Until the road was finally paved recently by the union's Ministerial Council for Guinea's entry, the Mano River Union could be said to have been like an eligible bachelor: virile but incomplete.

That is not to say that the union was ineffective in the course of its seven year bilateral existence. Far from it! The union had in fact succeeded somewhat a little beyond the scope of its initial objective of creating a customs union. Even more important perhaps is the fact that the foundation has been laid for a very prosperous future through economic integration and cooperation. Nonetheless, the admission of Guinea at this crucial stage apart from being a tacit acknowledgement of the bright prospects of the union, holds the promise of having a refreshing impact on those prospects.

More than anything else, Guinea's entry completes the re-union of the family which was carved up and divided in the course of the colonial "scramble" for territorial gains in Africa.

With Guinea now entering the union, backed by its wealth of experience and an abundant supply of skilled manpower, the union now, more than ever, stands on the threshold of a brighter and more prosperous future.

On the other hand, while the conversion of the union into a tripartite organization is rightly an occasion for rejoicing, it should also be considered as a signal for officials of the member states to adopt a more communal approach to the solution of both their individual and regional problems.

This matter can not be overemphasized. Although the peoples of the three states share a lot of long standing social and cultural similarities, it must not be forgotten that they have all been through diverse colonial experiences, following which they branched off on different political and ideological paths. The states, thus, have political and ideological differences, even if they all share the common goal of building a better society for their peoples.

In coming together into a union, the individual states must seek to emphasize not their differences, but their similarities which are the only basis for a lasting friendship. In this regard, they must be willing to sacrifice a little of their sovereignty in the interest of a better society for all.

FOREIGN MINISTER ACCUSES EGYPT OF INTERVENTION WITH U.S. BACKING

Kuwait AL-RA'Y AL-'AMM in Arabic 7 Sep 80 p 18

[Article by Suhayl al-Khalidy: "Foreign Minister of Chad: 'Egyptian Imperialism Is Fighting Us; I Carry Letters to the Kings and Presidents of the Arab Nations'"]

[Text] Tripoli--The Chad problem is certainly a problem created by the great powers on the borders of the African Arab community. It used to be possible for Arabs to look at it strictly on this basis, but the following meeting I had with Mr Acyl Ahmat, foreign minister of the Goukouni Weddeye government of Chad, brought new facts to light. It appears from what he said that several Arab nations, chiefly Egypt, are getting involved in this problem. Acyl Ahmat said:

"If the Arab world knew the truth about the Chad problem, it would play a major role in solving it, in view of its friendship with both East and West. The plans of the imperialists are to stop the advance of Chad's Arab Islamic culture. I am now carrying several letters to kings, princes and presidents of Arab nations."

[Question] Could you give us any information about the contents of these letters?

[Answer] They definitely speak of Egyptian intervention in Chad.

[Question] Egyptain intervention! Does Egypt have any interest to intervene in Chad?

[Answer] Egypt supports the rebel Hissein Habre. Regrettably, Mr Muhammad, the Egyptian consul in the city of Abeche, which is controlled by Hissein Habre, is a coordinator in this matter. Egyptian aircraft are landing twice a week in this city, carrying weapons, equipment and advisers. We ousted Hissein Habre's forces from (Abouko) and we found Sudanese, Moroccan and Senegalese weapons, in addition to the Egyptian weapons. We shall fight Egyptian imperialism, which changed its position after the Freetown conference. Egypt's peace with Israel puts

Israel near us, practically on our borders. Thus, Egypt is interfering in Chad in the interest of Israel, with the cooperation of all nations in the region which have been recruited into the service of imperialism. [end of answer]

Since I knew that before he became foreign minister of Chad, Acyl Ahmat was trying to establish relations with certain groups of the Palestinian Resistance, I asked him about relations between the Goukouni government and the Palestinian Resistance.

[Answer] We do not know exactly where the headquarters of Yasir 'Arafat are, but I am commissioned by President Goukouni to meet with him in any Arab capital I find him in, and explain to him the latest developments in the situation in Chad. We welcome all Palestinian movements which are struggling for freedom and dignity.

[Question] Do you mean that Egypt's entering the war means that it is America which is fighting you?

[Answer] Of course, the nations which are fighting us in Chad are receiving support from the great powers. These nations which have united and formed common markets are interested in tearing Africa to pieces. They have made Chad the first victim, in order to move later on Nigeria, Cameroon and others.

[Question] You recently refused to meet with Hissein Habre in a private conference.

[Answer] We met previously in many conferences, including the Lagos conference. Hissein Habre signed agreements, only to violate them immediately afterwards. He refuses to remove the French forces, and he refuses to dissolve his army. He refuses to release the prisoners and observe a cease-fire. These were conditions for establishing the National Unity government, which were signed by all parties. The government was established and Hissein Habre carried out only one condition--the condition which made him minister of defense. He then attacked the government and rebelled against it. Therefore, we cannot come together on the basis of [coalitions]. We do not trust him. He deceived Tombolbay, (Khan Maloum) and Khan Goukouni. I ask you: How is it possible for us to meet with this man for the purpose of signing agreements which he does not take long to violate?

[Question] Does Hissein Habre hold any trump cards?

[Answer] He has tried his hand at several tricks. He first played the Libyan trump. Then he played the Muslim-against-Christian trump. After that he tried the card of north against south. The imperialist media publicized his moves, but none of his cards are winners now.

[Question] How come? Do you feel that you are stronger militarily?

[Answer] I invite you and I invite all free reporters to visit (Anjamina) and see the true military situation. We are on the verge of concluding the war which French colonialism created in our country. Chad's revolution is now standing on its own two feet. It will pulverize insubordination and will not yield to anyone. The Libyan people have supported us strongly in our continuous struggle. We will never permit the presence of a United Nations force, nor the conversion of the Chad problem into an international problem, as desired by the forces supporting Habre.

MOVE TOWARD RECONCILING REVOLUTION'S CONTRADICTIONS NOTED

London WEST AFRICA in English 6 Oct 80 pp 1952-1954

[Text]

On October 10 Brazzaville celebrates the centenary of the treaty between Pierre Savorgnan de Brazza, France's Italian-born answer to H. M. Stanley, and King Makoko Ilo. It took place at a location called Mfoa which later became Brazzaville, and gave France sovereignty over much of what was to become the Congo. With deft timing the celebrations which are being organised by the Mayor of Brazzaville will coincide with President Giscard d'Estaing's official visit to Congo.

Congo's political life has been an exciting one and the latest venture in warming the relation with Paris deserves careful analysis. As with the example of Guinea, one answer is that a change in policy certainly suggests the acknowledgement of dissatisfaction at a path hitherto followed. But it does not necessarily mean a weakening in the structure of power in either country, nor may it mean a weakening in ideological resolve.

In fact the Congo, especially under Col. Sassou Nguesso, shows all the signs of a stability domestically which has at last permitted the authorities to take steps towards narrowing what had become an embarrassing gap between ideological Marxist-Leninist rhetoric and an economic policy which one authority analysing from a radical perspective called "neo-colonial".

Why is it that successive regimes over the past 17 years in the Congo, each faithfully producing Marxist rhetoric, have failed to rid themselves of the one symbol of colonial oppression: the name of their capital, Brazzaville? The name stirs more hearts in France than almost any other in Africa, the jewel of the former central Africa empire, once the "capital of Free France"! Yet the Congo swept away a regime — Fulbert Youlou's — in 1963 which was seen to be oppressively pro-western. So vigorous was the public denunciation of Youlou that the French troops stationed in Brazzaville did not make a move against the demonstrators. Massamba Debat took over and the French moved their military out.

The youth movements — the Congo has always had a very high education rate — the trade unionists and Youlou's more radical political opponents formed an alliance which kept them in power until 1968 when the army, recruited mainly from the north, felt that the south had been too favoured in power and moved against Massamba Debat's regime.

Quixotic leader

From 1968 to March 18, 1977, the Congo was under the optimistically radical, but in retrospect, one can say, quixotic leadership of Marien Ngouabi. Under Ngouabi, the army became part of the Congolese political scene and as a result was politicized along the recurring dividing lines of the Congo: the north suspected the south and was currently in the ascendant; radicals opposed the less radical bureaucrats; the army came into conflict with civilians. Ngouabi had to steer a course through these divisive obstacles.

By 1973 two vital things had happened in the Congo. The first, that is often overlooked, is that the true radical leadership in the country had been destroyed. Successive attempts against Ngouabi's leadership by radicals and then military elements that were losing their patience and were seeking more authoritarian methods of government were successfully dealt with. As a result Ngouabi became personally more isolated than ever, and his rhetorical camouflage was becoming a little thin.

The discovery of oil a year earlier and the first successful production in 1973--the second important development of the year--was an opportunity which could not be ignored. The revolution had lost its political impetus but at least oil revenue could keep up an expanding but unproductive state sector; for that had become an important political constituency from which the leadership drew support or hostility. Meanwhile, the one area which had never been successfully tackled, or rather, had been swept under the carpet, was the private sector.

Ngouabi veered to the left between 1974 and 1976. Brazzaville became a vital transit for aid coming from the Eastern bloc for the MPLA in their struggle against the western-backed UNITA and FNLA in Angola. Domestically, the economic situation deteriorated and oil production, in which so much hope had been placed, failed to meet expectations. In 1975, with production at only 5m. tons, the government produced a development plan that would have required production of oil at the rate of 15m. tons annually if the costs of the plan were to be met. By late 1976, there is evidence that Ngouabi, at a loss to know what to do, was thinking seriously of calling upon the politicians who were thrown out in 1968. He summoned the Third Extraordinary Congress of the Parti Congolais du Travail, which had been formed after he came to power as the country's only party. But on March 18, 1977, a matter of weeks before it was due to take place, he was assassinated. Shortly before his death, it was known that he had been consulting Massamba Debat. Within weeks Massamba Debat was summarily tried and executed along with other former politicians.

Ngouabi's death made him a martyr, though there is much reason to believe that his name was later to be invoked by the very people who may have had a hand in his death. The story of the assassination has never been fully told, apart from oblique references to a palace coup. The subsequent trials and killings bear all the hallmarks of a settlement of political accounts, especially by a clique of northern soldiers who felt that under Ngouabi, the Third Congress might have gone against their interests.

For the next two years, the Congolese lived under the harsh rule of a military committee led by General Yhombi Opango. His antipathy to the prospect of setting an example through personal sacrifice in the name of the revolution and its hero, Ngouabi, soon became cynically evident. His positive statements about the need to establish a rapport with the private sector elevated him in the eyes of western investors, though they still remained pessimistic about the economic prospects of the country. During his two years in power, oil production was disappointing and the potash mines, which had never attained the production levels which were required by the investors, closed after they were flooded in early 1978.

In March 1979, General Yhombi Opango was thanked for his services to the party and the country, but the Third Congress, which was finally called in the face of growing discontent, relieved him of all his important posts. He was replaced by

Col. Denis Sassou Nguesso. Trained in Cuba and the Soviet Union, the new leader was immediately seen as the complete antithesis to his predecessor, both in temperament and politics. He was marked as pro-Soviet and as a hardliner. Instead, he has emerged as a skilful leader who has established a control over the country.

He has called for a democratisation of the political life which, in the Congo, means decentralisation. This has been written into the constitution, the sixth since Congo became an autonomous self-governing entity. The constitution provides for a Prime Minister and a ministerial team which will see to the co-ordination of policy execution while the President is the "incarnation" of the people's will and of national unity. For a country which has not previously enjoyed that type of government, these provisions have been generally welcomed and give cause for optimism for the Congo under Col. Sassou Nguesso.

The government contains civilians and soldiers and represents the regions in a balanced manner. It also has a mixture of the reputedly radicals and the technical experts.

Diplomatically, there has been a gradual move towards a modus vivendi with all neighbours. Ideologically they are opposed to the Congo but, as appears to be happening in many other parts of the continent, it is being realised that local squabbles cannot be allowed to become obstacles to the absolutely essential need for regional economic co-operation.

The balance that is emerging in Congolese internal politics is reflected in a relaxation for border tension and also a degree of pragmatism. While French troops protect President Dacko's fragile regime in Bangui, Congo is about to welcome President Giscard d'Estaing on an official visit. This is not so much a contradiction of Congo's ideological stance but the application of certain priorities.

Troops in Chad

Brazzaville has been a vociferous critic of foreign intervention in Africa though never pointing a finger at any particular country. It still remains the regional soulmate of Angola. On the other hand it took a laudable step, though in the event an unsuccessful one, towards assisting in the solution to the Chadian conflict. Of the three countries which were meant to send troops to keep peace in Chad in accordance with the Lagos agreements of August, 1979, only the Congolese troops arrived in the Chadian capital. The others, from Guinea and Benin, failed to appear in Chad, because the facilities were not ready for garrisoning their men. Congolese forces had to be withdrawn in March this year when fighting broke out again in N'Djamena.

The importance of regional relations cannot be underestimated for Congo. Brazzaville was the capital of French Equatorial Africa. It therefore found itself in a position that was similar to its counterpart in West Africa, Dakar. Before independence arrived, the capital was the centre for investment and all the communications networks converged on the city. After independence the Congo found itself with all these facilities but was the object of far less attention. The revenue that could still be derived by commerce from the Central African Republic and Chad was significant and Brazzaville was aware that as soon as stability could return to both these countries, the Treasury in Brazzaville would see the benefit. Gabon's manganese is exported through the Congolese port of Pointe Noire. Across the river there is Kinshasa, the capital city of a regime with which good relations have been sporadic. Again economic logic dictates that some sort of mutual tolerance has to be applied. Recently delegations from the two countries have met and various infrastructural links are to be set up, according to the official announcements.

Congo has never been a closed country in the manner of Guinea some years ago. It has not been able to afford that political luxury. Nor has any regime had the internal strength to impose itself in such a way. What is more, there has been a movement until 18 months ago in which political pronouncements bore little relation to the realities of economic life in the Congo. Regimes were caught in a spiral of internal rivalries that detached them both from the people (this happened even to Ngouabi) and from an adequate attention to the economy. Under Col. Sassou Nguesso's leadership the rhetoric has not changed in any dramatic way but the signs are that there is a gradual move towards reconciling some of the more glaring contradictions in the revolution.

TOURE ADDRESSES MESSAGE TO BANI-SADR, KHOMEYNI, HUSAYN

Conakry HOROYA in French 27 Sep 80 pp 1, 7

[Text] To Their Excellencies Ayatollah Khomeyni, leader of the Iranian Islamic Revolution; Abolhasan Bani-Sadr, president of the Iranian Islamic Republic, Tehran.

To His Excellency Saddam Husayn, president of the Republic of Iraq, Bagdad.

In recent days, international events have been dominated by the existence and aggravation of a state of war between Iraq and Iran, two neighboring countries whose people share their history and culture, as well as progressive aspirations. This war opposing two sister countries creates an extremely dangerous situation for their peoples, their economy and for the entire sub-region whose stability and development activities are seriously compromised.

The Guinean revolution considers it its militant duty to address you an urgent request for the cessation of the military confrontation in order to spare lives and preserve the two peoples' moral, economic and material gains.

The revolutionary government of Guinea joins with all other regimes, states and international organizations worried by the dangerous situation opposing Iraq and Iran to launch this sincere appeal and ask the two governments concerned to resolve the causes of the conflict through a dialogue and to search for a just solution by definitively renouncing the use of weapons, which always leaves in its wake deep consequences liable to prevent a fraternal cooperation between two neighboring countries which have opted for nonalinement and the anti-imperialist struggle.

The Iraqi revolution and the Iranian Islamic revolution spring from the same ideals and claim similar progressive principles; they are thus destined, by their very common options, to establish between them militant ties imbued with fraternal solidarity.

We fervently ask you, in the name of revolutionary ideals and in the name of Islam which unites us, to take our urgent appeal into consideration by ordering an immediate cease-fire and engaging in negotiations arbitrated by countries, organisms or personalities of unassailable morality.

Please accept, Your Excellencies, the expression of our deep trust and profound esteem.

ATTACKS ON MP'S FAMILY ATTRIBUTED TO MOKHEHLE GROUP

Johannesburg THE VOICE in English 24-30 Sep 80 p 3

[Article by Vuyani Mrwetyana]

[Text]

MASERU: Guerilla attacks here claimed the lives of two daughters of a Lesotho Member of Parliament of the ruling party, led by Prime Minister Dr Leabua Jonathan. The Premier's brother was almost shot and wounded during last Friday night's attacks.

Mr Leloko Jonathan is in lying in the Queen Elizabeth II Hospital with a bullet buried in his left shoulder.

A hospital spokesman said that Mrs M Chakela, an MP in the opposition BCP internal wing, who was injured during the attack on her home, is not aware that her two daughters — both under 21 — were killed.

It is believed that the two Friday night attacks occured almost within hours of each other. Mrs Chakela was saved by ducking under the bed.

Mr Leloko Jonathan is president of the Men Commission of Inquiry into the aliens' legal position in Lesotho.

The commission is at present conducting hearing between Leribe and Teyateyaneng.

Tsikoane area where the Prime Minister's brother comes from Hlotse, where Mrs Chakela comes from, are heavily-patrolled by the military police.

According to our sources last month, Mrs Chakela received a note from the guerillas notifying her about their impending attack 'visit'.

And that she should prepare them a meal.

Since then police guarded her until recently when they relaxed, hoping it was just a hoax.

After Friday's attack, the attackers left another note saying they were coming back.

Police got there late as the attack took place at about 11.00pm.

According to a spokesman, Mrs Chakela is serious in hospital too.

She is not aware her daughters are dead, it was learnt here.

A villager says three men were seen on the RPT verandah on Friday night.

Then a blast and screams followed. Neighbours arrived and found Mrs Chakela unconscious and her daughters dead. The house was completely damaged.

Details about the attack are scant as nobody seems to even talk about it, for fear of being associated with the attack.

Both attacks are at Leribe but different localities.

Political observers here attribute these attacks to banned Ntsu Mokhehle's Lesotho Liberation Army.

ALIENS

The commission is under fierce criticism from the Indian community, which sees it as a persecution commission on minorities.

Earlier the Indian community complained that they were the only aliens now under surveilance.

NORTH-SOUTH RAILWAY WOULD HELP LESOTHO, NEIGHBORS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 8 Oct 80 p 7

[Article by Cas St Leger]

[Text]

A NEW railway line linking Swaziland north to south would have the effect not only of making Swaziland Railways viable but also of assisting South African Railways by diverting goods from the heavily-used Ermelo-Richards Bay coal line.

The building of the "missing link" from Lavumisa in the south to Mananga in the north and then onwards to Komatipoort was discussed by Mr P H Davies yesterday in a paper presented to delegates at the SA Institute of Civil Engineers conference on transport held in Rustenburg.

Estimated cost of the link to Swaziland Railways is R36,2-million and to SAR, for the 65 km section from Mananga to Komatipoort, R23-million.

"While undoubtedly Swaziland would benefit most from a north-south route . . . it would also benefit South Africa by relieving the coal line between Ermelo and Richards Bay," Mr Davies said in his report.

"At the moment, considerable improvements to this line are contemplated and it is believed that it will shortly become the most heavily trafficked 1 065 mm track in the world."

Total expected tonnage would be initially about 1,9-million, rising to 5-million tons a year by 1987.

With this traffic, the line would be a viable proposition with expected profits of R1-million two years after the line was completed, increasing to R3,7-million about five years later.

The proposed new rail link would have the effect of turning Swaziland Railways' expected deficit of R3-million a year into a profit, bringing rail heads close to Northern Swaziland coal deposits and considerably reducing the distance between Northern Transvaal and Richards Bay.

Meanwhile the Federal Republic of Germany has made its technical cooperation with the Liberian Government felt in various areas of Liberia, including the construction of modern water supply for the countries.

Currently, the cities of Gbarnga, Voinjama, Sanniquellie have modern water facilities, while German funds have been made available for the supply of water in Buchanan and Zwedru.

ROLE OF STUDENTS IN REVOLUTION POINTED OUT

Monrovia THE REDEEMER in English 30 Sep 80 p 4

[Editorial by Nikoi Kotey]

[Text]

IT IS REALLY encouraging and appreciative that the students of this nation have come out publicly to support the revolutionary government headed by young Master/Sgt. Doe. This is not unnatural since the students are one of the most knowledgeable and articulated groups of our society. What one is tempted to ask is, what our students can offer in furtherance of the revolution.

THE CHANTS of "we want Doe" in unison is not enough. This chanting, as a friend aptly remarked, can be rendered more beautifully by a trained parrot. It is not enough to show support for the revolution by chanting; it is not enough to welcome the Head of State to their campus with roars of jubilation.

WE EXPECT our students to move out of their Ivory towers of academia and be directly involved in the revolution. We expect the students of University of Liberia to comment in a positive and realistic way on issues of national import. They should tell the younger students that it is unrevolutionary to take the laws in their own hands.

WE EXPECT the students under the leadership of the Student of University of Liberia to organize themselves to help clean our cities and urban areas to educate our less fortunate brothers and sisters on the aims and objectives of the revolution; we expect them to volunteer to work in farms confiscated from the officials of the ousted government; we expect these and more from them. We are tired with their chantings. Let them channel their youthful exuberance in to more productive areas.

WITH SUCH POSITIVE contribution, the students will be buidlng unperishable monument to their fame. I hope to meet them in the fields. Over to you dear students, action speaks better than words.

OCCUPANTS OF CONFISCATED HOUSING ORDERED TO PAY RENT TO PRC

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 10 Oct 80 p 8

[Text] Occupants of confiscated houses of former government officials should now pay their rents into Government's revenue instead of their former landlords, Armed Forces Commanding General Thomas G. Quiwonkpa has ordered.

General Quiwonkpa said the rent collected from these houses would be used by government to boost the economy which was in a very bad shape when the revolution came about.

General Quiwonkpa, who is PRC Chairman on Confiscated Properties, gave the order at the Barclay Training Center in a statement to the press on Sunday last.

He said the committee on confiscated properties were aware that some soldiers were in the habit of "occupying these houses," illegally. He called on them to stop this act.

He described the act as "bad and illegal," adding that government needed these houses "intact and not spoiled."

General Quiwonkpa warned that "rigid military discipline would be imposed on any military personnel found, taking the laws into his own hands by illegally occupying any of the confiscated houses."

He said he would issue out orders and assign revolutionary squads to take complete inventory of all occupied confiscated houses.

"Those who occupy these houses illegally, be it military personnel or civilians, will be made to vacate immediately until government finds it necessary to have them occupied," he added.

General Quiwonkpa also warned soldiers to stop acting as judges in law courts.

Soldiers, he said, were not judges or politicians. Therefore, they should not involve themselves in legal investigations and other matters.--LINA

COAST GUARD CUTTERS DEDICATED

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 29 Sep 80 p 3

[Excerpt]

Any counter-revolutionary and reactionary element found in the service of the national coast guard would be dismissed, Head of State Doe has warned.

Master Sergeant Doe gave the warning Saturday at the dedicatory ceremony of three new coast guard cutters at the Coast Guard Base on the Bushrod Island.

He told members of the Coast Guard to be disciplined, honest and devoted to their duty, and that they should make maximum use of the cutters to protect Liberia's territorial waters.

Master Sergeant Doe emphasized that government would continue to increase the efficiency, strength and capacity of the Coast Guard in addition to providing training programmes for all defense and security forces in the country.

The three new cutters were named in honour of the Head of State, Army Commanding General Thomas Quiwonkpa, and political activist Albert Porte.

They were built by the Karlskrona Varvet Ad Shipyard in Sweden at a cost of $6,759,900. Each cutter is 26.72 meters long with a fuel capacity of 2,753.25 gallons. It has a load capacity of about 20,000 pounds, and accommodates a crew of 12.

PRC TO IMPLEMENT IMCO STANDARDS, PROMOTE SEAMAN TRAINING

Monrovia THE REDEEMER in English 2 Oct 80 pp 2, 6

[Editorial]

[Text]

TWICE LAST WEEK the Maritime Policy of the PRC Government was underscored: First, in a major Policy Statement issued by the Head of State himself and secondly, when the government christened three Coast Guard Cutters to ply and protect our coastline.

IN HIS POLICY STATEMENT, Master Sergeant Doe declared that his government would continue to implement the highest possible standards set by IMCO (International Maritime Consultative Organization) along those regulations that were in the conduct and pursuit of its own Maritime programme.

AS A LEADING Maritime nation, whose flag has always been castigated as a "flag of convenience" the Head of State hoped that the Liberian flag would be considered a "genuine flag of service, friendship and cooperation among all nations in the world"

THE HEAD OF STATE then went on to speak about Liberia's plans along with some of her neighbours and regional organizations for instituting training programmes to maximize our participation in the seafaring business.

HE SAID DEVELOPING countries will not fail to make inroads in the world of shipping once they received increased training assistance from developed nations and world organizations, and cited the Mano River Training Institute, which is likely to get under way shortly in Marshall Territory, as an example of Liberia's emphasis on training of seamen, and also negotiations to regionalize the Ghana Nautical College for West African English-speaking countries.

THUS, WE SEE in his Statement the Master Sergeant laying stress on three essential elements: "Standard, Service and Training".

THE LIBERIAN GOVERNMENT is not only pledging to continue implementing the highest possible standards set by IMCO in furtherance of its efforts for international cooperation on the seas; but it is also moving forward with a training programme geared towards providing quality service through trained Liberian seamen who will man the ships flying the Liberian flag of service.

SINCE THIS NATION embarked on a maritime policy, she has been castigated, falsely accused and ridiculed, simply because powerful nations preferred to see the revenues which this policy earned for us deposited into their own coffers. This was notwithstanding the efforts we made to improve our shipping regulations, hence we are today a leading maritime nation.

SOME OF THESE nations, however, consider us their friends and have always expressed their genuine desire to help in our training programmes.

IN THE LIGHT of the Master Sergeant's three essential elements relevant to this Government's Maritime Policy, we think the time is ripe for those who have expressed their desire to help in our training programme to come forward now and make the MRTI not only a reality but a reliable and quality breeding ground for trained world seamen.

This is a vital element of international co-operation which the Head of State referred to in his statement.

THIS CHALLENGE and opportunity should be matched also by the enthusiasm of Liberian Seamen to prepare themselves for training and quality service in international waters.

WHEN THE HEAD OF STATE declares his hope that the Liberian flag would "truly be considered a genuine flag of service, friendship and cooperation", he is not limiting this to the registration of vessels alone, but to the broader concept of personal service where a ship flying the Liberian flag would be manned by Liberian seamen who will extend the Liberian hospitality of friendship and cooperation to peoples of other lands.

THE LIBERIAN SEAMEN's Union should therefore seek to take advantage of the opportunities ahead and revolutionize their involvement in seafaring. They should take maximum advantage of the training facilities to be afforded and help raise and protect the standard of Liberian ships.

BESIDES BRINGING GREATER revenue to the country, it will reap greater employment benefits to Liberian seamen, who, by their exemplary action and performance wherever they go, would be referred to as "those Liberian seamen on the Liberian ships — they got name".

FOREST CONCESSIONS TO BE RESURVEYED

Monrovia THE REDEEMER in English 30 Sep 80 p 1

[Article by Joe K. Roberts]

[Text]

THE government of the PRC has directed the Forest Development Authority to re-survey all forest concession areas in the country, according to a Ministry of Justice press statement issued last Tuesday.

The decision to re-survey forest concession areas comes five months after the Bell Timber Company (BTC), which operated in Grand Gedeh County, fled the country without settling its $3.1 million liabilities to creditors, workers, and the government.

The press statement said that government has however awarded the forest area to Contimba (Liberia) Ltd, another logging company, which has agreed to settle the $3.1 million debts owed by Bell Timber Company.

The press statement also attributed the artificial lack of suitable forest areas for logging to the fact that "many logging companies occupied vast acreage of forest land in excess of their contracts".

"This", the statement concludes, "makes it necessary to re-survey all forest concessions" and that the surplus land will be re-leased to companies "which are able and willing to participate in the resource development of the country".

UN TEAM'S MISSION APPEARS NOT LIKELY TO SUCCEED

Windhoek WINDHOEK OBSERVER in English 4 Oct 80 p 14

[Text]

NEW YORK: A Security Council meeting to consider the South West Africa question will not precede the expected arrival of a high-powered United Nations team in Pretoria in the next few weeks.

There was pressure to have a specially convened Security Council meeting before October 15 to consider the further delay in the implementation of Security Council Resolution 435 for the holding of internationally supervised elections in South West Africa. The last move came from Pretoria in a letter of August 29, and it dashed all hopes for a speedy implementation of Resolution 435.

A few days later, as a result of moves made by SWAPO abroad, an international conference convened in Paris and in a declaration at the end of the meeting, which was attended by delegations from various countries, it was decided to call on the Security Council to convene before October 15.

It now appears most unlikely that such an extraordinary session will proceed. The team to be sent by Dr. Kurt Waldheim, the United Nations Secretary General, is to include Mr Martti Ahtisaari.

Dr. Waldheim wanted to send his team in the early days of October, but the South African Government informed him that this was not possible because the new Cabinet in Pretoria must be installed. There is to be an extraordinary session of Parliament, and the South African Prime Minister, Mr P. W. Botha, accompanied by his Foreign Affairs Minister, Mr Roelof Botha, will make a visit to Taiwan in October. Thus, the United Nations mission is not expected before the last days of October.

Apart from the usual meaningless talks about technicalities of deployment of the United Nations Transitional Assistance Group, the main factor that will step to the fore, once the team had arrived in Pretoria, will be South Africa's pressure that the team must proceed to Windhoek to talk to the Turnhalle's Ministers Council and the so-called internal democratic parties.

That again poses a tricky problem. South Africa's persistence cannot be interpreted as an act to close the door on the Western initiative to find an internationally acceptable solution for South West Africa; but an effort to compel the United Nations team to have discussions with the Ministers Council is tantamount to international recognition of Mr Mudge and his colleagues.

Diplomatic observers are more than cautious and do not show too much optimism. At this stage, it looks like yet another abortion.

AFRICAN INITIATIVE SEEN AS SOLE ALTERNATIVE TO UN PLAN

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 20 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

AN AFRICAN-ORIENTATED initiative was the only viable alternative to the present UN plan for a settlement in SWA and it would be more acceptable to the African states than the continuation of the complicated and involved negoitations with the UN.

This opinion was expressed by the outgoing AG, Dr Gerrit Viljoen, at his last Press conference in Windhoek yesterday.

Dr Viljoen said the African States had a direct interest in the return to stability of Southern Africa and it was likely that the frontline States, SA and SWA would be able to find a mutually acceptable solution in a Lancaster House-type conference.

An all-party conference for SWA has been suggested and at the recent Swapo/Unesco conference in France, Swapo President Sam Nujoma gave his blessing to Zimbabwe Prime Minister Robert Mugabe's offer of hosting a round-table conference.

Dr Viljoen pointed out that the SWA situation was at present saddled with a settlement agreement that was drafted more than two years ago under circumstances completely different to those prevailing now. He also suggested that there might be a certain degree of resentment among African States to the solving of an essentially African problem through Western mediation.

There was greater understanding among Africans of the practical implications that would have to be faced under the implimentation of UN-supervised elections. The Africans were more pragmatic in their concern with obtaining a settlement — unlike the "white faces from abroad" who were more ideologically and dogmatically involved in obtaining a solution, Dr Viljoen said.

He exprssed the opinion that the UN would accept a solution that had already been approved by the African States and said it would be extremely difficult to implement Resolution 435 on a settlement in SWA because of UN partiality towards Swapo.

Under the present circumstances the UN would have to prove its impartiality beyond all doubt before free and fair elections could take place, for, under the current bias of the UN towards Swapo, it would amount to capitulation to Swapo, Dr Viljoen said.

MUDGE ISSUES CALL FOR UNITY

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 6 Oct 80 pp 1, 2

[Text]

THE NATIONAL Party has called for White unity in SWA but in actual fact it is only prepared to manifest this under the flag of of one language and one culture.

This was spelt out by RP leader Mr Dirk Mudge at an RP meeting in Swakopmund on Friday night.

The meeting was attended by about 230 people, predominantly German-speaking.

Mr Mudge said that if the country is to unite against a common enemy, it is absolutely essential that the three White language groups respect each other as well as accept other ethnic groups as fully-fledged countrymen.

"It is essential that we create unity out of diversity", he said.

Mr Mudge said he has been accused of dividing the Whites and said it was true that he caused a split in the National Party but he believed he brought unity to the various White language groups in SWA. The NP was a party in favour of one language and culture group only.

Mr A H du Plessis was aware of the differences in the NP months before the actual split but his only reaction was that the "patient was too ill to be operated on", Mr Mudge said.

He gave the assurance that the Republican Party would give equal status to Afrikaans, English and German. It was of great importance that the people of SWA were able to communicate with one another as well as with the outside world.

English and German were necessary to communicate with the outside world and Afrikaans, being the lingua franca in SWA would be important in future communications between the various population groups.

In reply to a question concerning the name Namibia, Mr Mudge said it wasn't of great importance to him personally but if there was any danger of an official name for the country threatening co-operation between Black and White, there was no doubt in his mind as to what his decision would be.

It was more important to save the country than to save a name, he said. It would be of little consolation to see the name South West Africa written in the history book if the country was lost.

Referring to the settlement negotiations Mr Mudge said the international negotiations on SWA has reached a stage where no progress was being made. He stressed that although the political leaders in SWA accepted Resolution 435 and were still in favour of a one-man-one-vote election, they would not allow a repetition of what happened in Zimbabwe, Angola or Mocambique.

SWA would not be cheated in an election, he said. The election had to be free and fair and the authorities would insist on complete demilitarisation during the election so that the threat of intimidation could be ruled out completely.

Mr Mudge repeated his previous offer of having the books of the RP and DTA checked for traces of foreign money and said he could guarantee that this election was being fought without one cent from outside the borders of SWA.

Mr H Schneider-Waterberg, RP candidate for Swakopmund said that the same meeting that the lack of certain facilities, such as a proper operating theatre for Swakopmund, was proof of the present administration's incompetence.

He said a DTA government would prove to the moderates in SWA that there was a viable alternative to Swapo. It was in our own interest to insist on equal opportunities for all, he said, for that would diffuse the present situation.

The ideal solution for the political problems in SWA would be to bring together the various population groups in SWA without overemphasising or understanding ethnicity, he said.

Mr Schneider-Waterberg directed a stern warning to the authorities at the Rössing mine to restrain from practicing racism in reverse. It could be counter-productive to overcompensate for the present situation by simply putting the opposite of White racism into operation, he said.

NNF WILL SERVE ONLY AS ELECTORAL ALLIANCE

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 7 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

THE NAMIBIA NATIONAL FRONT would in future exist only as an electoral alliance and then only for a one-man-one-vote election supervised by the United Nations Mrs Nora Chase, Secretary General of the NNF, told The Advertiser yesterday.

The decision to alter the present status of the NNF was taken at a meeting of the Central Committee on Saturday.

The NNF was formed as an electoral alliance during the latter half of 1978 with a possible UN-supervised election in mind. Since then it developed gradually into an umbrella organisation for the South West Africa National Union (SWANU), the Namibian Independence Party (until recently the National Independence Party), the Progressive Party of Namibia, the Mbanderu Council and the Damara Council of Chief Justus Garöeb.

The change within the NNF is believe to have taken place because of a decision by Mr Garöeb to take part in the November ethnic elections — contradictory to NNF policy.

A senior member of the NNF pointed out last week, prior to the meeting where a decision on the future of the Damara Council and Mr Garöeb who was President of the NNF was to be taken, that there was a serious contradiction in NNF policy.

It vehemently rejected ethnicity, he said, but at the same allowed Mr Garöeb as ethnic leader of a specific population group to participate in an ethnic election.

Mrs Chase said yesterday that the Central Committee decided it would be more advantageous to all the parties concerned if the NNF was disbanded in its present form — and with it any ideas of forming one political party out of the individual parties within the NNF framework.

This would give more freedom to the individual parties, she said and stressed that Mr Garöeb and the Damara Council would be taking part in the November election as an individual party and in compliance with decisions made by the NNF.

Mrs Chase said the necessary changes would have to be made to the existing constitution of the NNF to make provision for the changes in policy and structure.

IMPORTANCE OF WHITE ELECTION IS ANALYZED

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 9 Oct 80 pp 6-7

[Article by Leon Kok: "The White Election is Important Despite What the Cynics Say"]

[Text]

IS THE forthcoming White election important? What is it all about? These questions are answered in this article by LEON KOK. It has been written in response to those who have said they don't know what the election is about or who to vote for. The writer discusses both the real and imaginary issues and attempts to present them in a clear-cut way.

THE WHITE election which is due in this country next month is being described in some circles as a side-show, but it will be anything but that.

On the contrary, the election promises to be the most important since the National Party came to power in 1950, superceded perhaps only by the 1978 one-man-one-vote internally-supervised election.

Republican Party leader Dirk Mudge has reportedly said that the constitutional process will continue to go on as it has done during the past two years whether his party wins the election or not. That however should not be construed as an under-estimation of the issues at stake.

Mudge knows only too well that the moderate Blacks and Browns are looking to the Republican Party to see:

- Whether the majority of Whites in SWA are genuinely prepared to move along the path of cooperation with other population groups or whether they are still hamstrung by apartheid;
- Whether the majority of Whites really favour a broad Namibian nationalism or whether they want to remain an appendage of the SA White establishment;
- And whether Dirk Mudge is a White leader in his own right or whether he is merely being propped up in the National Assembly by Black and Brown support.

The leader of the NP Mr A H du Plessis and his supporters feel equally strong about the importance of the election, if not more so. It was indeed du Plessis who requested former AG Judge M T Steyn 18 months ago to call a White election as soon as possible to clear up who really leads the Whites in SWA.

The issues that seem to be the most important in the NP campaign are these:

- To show that the Mudge breakaway from the NP in late 1977 had no real electoral substance;
- To show that the Whites of SWA have not accepted the existing dispensation, involving three-tier government, a redistribution of constitutional functions and "enforced" integration;
- To make it clear that constitutional development which does not have the support of the majority of Whites could precipitate racial confrontation and even an exodus of Whites from SWA, with disastrous socio-economic consequences for the country;

- And to convince the Whites that the demise of the NP will be synonomous with the demise of the Whites in SWA, particularly the Afrikaner.

The RP in turn naturally refutes all these points. While on the one hand it desperately wishes to fulfil the aforementioned expectations of the Blacks and Browns, on the other hand it is not oblivious to the interests of the Whites.

On the contrary, it also champions the cause of the Whites, except that it believes that White survival is an impossibility unless there is compromise and cooperation among all the country's peoples.

Not that the NP doesn't go along with that formula, its just that the NP takes a far more exclusivist view of the situation and has made demands of the other population groups that are found to be largely racist and unacceptable.

Significantly, the leaders of the RP are all former members of the NP and their general outlook was reasonably in step with that of the NP until three years ago, having been rooted in the Turnhalle Conference between 1975 and 1977 and in separate development prior to that. If there were differences at all in the past, these were probably more approach-orientated than principle-orientated.

The differences in approach however have developed into differences of principle more recently, and particularly since the 1978 one-man-one-vote election and the emergence of first-tier government.

The NP which traditionally focused on exclusive White interests, particularly Afrikaner interests, liberalised its approach during the Turnhalle Conference, but since the break in its ranks in 1977, has returned partially to the laager approach again.

It could of course be argued that the NP as it is presently constituted never did in fact liberalise during the Turnhalle Conference period, but that those who did show more liberal tendencies then were the ones who were to ultimately break away in 1977.

Be that as it may, the RP strongly maintains today that no party nor policy is worth anything unless the party can win the confidence of the majority of voters in a national one-man-one-vote election, set up a workable constitution and implement its policies.

This approach naturally stems from the broad acceptance in the country of UN Security Council Resolution 435, involving a UN-supervised election with Swapo as a participant. In the long term this cannot be avoided.

Mudge has said on a number of occasions that the policies of the DTA are not necessarily the most suitable to any one population group but at least they have the greatest acceptance amongst all the population groups.

The RP rejects the NP's idea of returning to the original Turnhalle principles, arguing that while these had merit in the mid seventies, they have since been overtaken by time and events.

In particular the original Turnhalle principles placed too much stress on ethnic interests, they placed too much power at the second level of government, they were merely one step away from apartheid, they were too inflexible and they no longer enjoy the full support of the Black and Brown people.

Significant in the changed spirit that has emerged during the period since the Turnhalle Conference, and particularly since the emergence of the National Assembly last year, is the gravitation of both power and constitutional functions to the first-tier of government, far in excess of what was ever envisaged by the conference.

It has been argued that a major reason for this development is that the DTA is largely an alliance of minority political parties at the second-tier, but predominant at the top. The change in axis has thus been a natural one, precipitated by the DTA wanting to concentrate power at the first-tier, particularly when it realised that it could have difficulty wielding power at the second level. The White legislative Assembly is perhaps a good example, having lost many of its former powers to the National Assembly.

In all fairness to the DTA, on the other hand, some of the Black and Brown second-tier governments have felt that they don't have either the expertise or the financial means to run say health or education at their level, rather than their being against the operation of these constitutional functions at their level as a matter of principle.

A major premise of course in RP thinking is that White interests will not be threatened by an increased concentration of power at the first-tier because of, firstly, goodwill between the population groups, and secondly, White indispensibility in the political, administrative, technical and economic structures of the country.

In addition the DTA, unlike other Black and Brown political groups in SWA, recognise the existence of ethnicity per se and is prepared to grant each and every cultural and language group the right to protect and promote its own cultural, language, educational and health affairs.

The issues that have so far generated the most heat in the campaign have been these:

● The NP has objected to "enforced" intergration of public facilities; the RP holds that it is the ultimate indignity to bar a man from a restaurant, shop or swimming pool because of the colour of his skin. The RP has largely adopted a meritocracy approach while it points out that few if any Whites have been driven from their traditional stomping grounds because of alleged Black or Brown swamping or bad behaviour. The Windhoek Show last month perhaps showed that the Whites were the ones who behaved worst in open public places;

● The NP has raised suspicions about the RP concept of open schools, alleging that this policy is the first step towards enfored integration in schools.

The RP has rejected that emphatically, saying that parents will have the right to choose whether their children should go to open schools or whether they should go to mixed schools. This in effect means that both integrated and segregated schools will exist and parents will have the option of sending their children to either;

● And the NP has argued that there should be land apportionment on an ethnic basis and that Blacks and Browns should be prohibited from purchasing existing White-owned land. The basis of this argument is that at present Blacks and Browns may purchase any White-owned land but Whites may not purchase land in the traditional areas such as Owambo, Kavango or Caprivi. This is regarded as discrimination in reverse.

The RP retorts that in time Blacks in the traditional areas will be given title to the land they occupy and they will then be able to sell that land to whomever they please, including Whites.

The RP furthermore maintains that if there is to be land apportionment on an ethnic basis, it has to be just, and this could pose considerable problems for the country. In the first instance the State will have to buy out thousands of White-owned farms and that land might have to be handed over to unproductive Black or Brown farmers. Similar action in terms of the Odendaal Commission proved to be an utter disaster for the country's agricultural sector.

Among other things the platteland became depopulated of Whites and their money left the country.

Ironically not one of these latter issues will be substantially affected by the outcome of the election: public amenities and land are first-tier issues while the status quo will be maintained as far as exclusive Whites schools are concerned if the RP wins the election.

Mention should be made that many German and English-speakers hope that if the RP does get into power next month, they will be able to play a bigger part in the affairs of White second-tier government. Not that the NP has actually discriminated against them in the past, but they certainly haven't felt at home in what was clearly an exclusivist Afrikaans atmosphere.

There has also been considerable suspicion among German and English-speakers that the NP is bent on using the White Administration to Afrikanerise what were traditionally strong German or English-speaking strongholds. The take-over of the Conservatoire of Music by the Windhoek College of Education was cited as one example.

Many German and English-speakers also have great reservations about the NP Executive in the Administration preventing German or English-speaking schools from participating in sport against mixed private schools and Black and Brown public schools. There is a complete clash in cultural and language philosophy in this issue.

Perhaps the most important feature of the election and certainly the most difficult for outsiders to perceive, is that the election is primarily a grudge election. The NP would like to see it as symbolic of the political death of Dirk Mudge for his alleged "betrayal" of the NP and what it believes is the White cause.

Mudge is particularly resented because he grabbed the initiative in inter-group relations from Messrs A H du Plessis, Eben van Zijl, Kosie Pretorius and Jannie de Wet, and, as if to add insult to injury, gained the SA Government's blessing for his actions.

Mudge is also vehemently resented for having become the wedge in improved relations between the NP's alliance front, Aktur, and the country's moderate Black and Browns. Indeed, the NP fully realises that conciliation with the Blacks and Browns and its ideal of returning to the original Turnhalle principles is absolutely impossible while the far more moderate Mudge is in the way.

Aktur, on the other hand, has itself to blame as well for its alienation from the Blacks and Browns. It plain and simply made demands that were generally unacceptable. That the RP exploited these is true, but it has never made an overriding issue of them.

Many old "Sap" supporters reckon that Du Plessis's greatest bitterness stems from the fact that after 39 years he is no longer the kingpin in SWA. Worse still, he has been driven out of the limelight by one of his own proteges. Du Plessis has often remarked that he taught Mudge his politics.

For the same reasons but perhaps to a lesser extent, Mudge is also disliked by the extremely ambitious Eben van Zijl who is said to be the "crown prince" in the NP.

Looked at another way, the White election is really a choice of the true White leader of the future in SWA, Dirk Mudge and Eben van Zijl.

This, simplistically, is the way a great proportion of the electorate see it and is precisely the way they will vote.

PAPER REPORTS REPUBLICAN PARTY COULD WIN NOVEMBER ELECTIONS

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 25 Sep 80 p 5

[Article by Anne Marie Du Preez: "A Look at the November Election"]

[Text]

THE OUTCOME of the November election will depend heavily on the results in the six Windhoek constituencies – one third of the total amount of 18 constituencies in the White second tier election.

However, the overall opinion seems to be that the election will be won or lost in the south and the party taking the majority of votes in the Warmbad, Mariental, Keetmanshoop and Lüderitz constituencies will step out as the victor.

The Advertiser spoke to a number of people in the know and came up with a rough draft of how the election results are expected to look.

WINS FOR NP

Erongo, Tsumeb, Gobabis, Windhoek West and Keetmanshoop are regarded as sure wins for the National Party, with Grootfontein and possibly Swakopmund as additions to the list.

RP

Victory for the Republican Party should come from Warmbad, Lüderitz, Mariental, Klein Windhoek, Windhoek South, Windhoek East and Otjiwarongo with Khomashochland and Okahandja as strong possibilities.

Pionierspark and Outjo are probablities in the face of a considerable amount of luck.

HNP NO DANGER

The HNP is not considered as being in danger of winning any seats.

Favouring the RP is that Mr Dirk Mudge started up the Republican Party with practically the whole organisational machine of the National Party.

TAKEN THE INITIATIVE

Moreover, the RP has taken the initiative in the election campaign from the word go.

Mr Mudge is also believed to have the support of the majority of English and German speaking voters.

The RP nominated its candidates with confidence and efficiency, started early with street work and organisation (although this seems to leave much to be desired in some areas) the opening of offices, canvassing, meetings and general information on the party's activities.

ON THE DEFENSIVE

The NP, much to its own disadvantage, created the impression of being on the defensive instead of gearing itself to offensive tactics.

Also important is that the leaders of the NP have adopted an aggressive attitude towards the Press and this has estranged them to a great degree.

OVERTAKEN

The more effective and approachable propaganda machinery of the RP is leading its opposition with regard to placards and the distribution of election material. Even the HNP has overtaken the NP. The HNP succeeded in drawing more than 150 people to a meeting in Mariental a week ago.

MEETINGS

Turning to meetings, there is much to be desired as far as the RP is concerned. Recently a number of meetings took place which were poorly organised and advertised – proof that the RP is lacking support in certain areas.

Lüderitz, Gobabis and Keetmanshoop had RP meetings at which the number of attendants was alarmingly low and excuses such as the weekly TV show, prayer-meetings and other reasons are questionable.

The RP makes a habit of counting the number of RP supporters that turn up at NP and HNP meetings but supporters of the RP's opposition are conspicuous in their absence at RP meetings.

It is difficult to swallow, lock, stock and barrel the RP explanation that their supporters attend opposition meetings simply to report back to their own party what was said. One wouldn't regard it necessary to send a delegation of 40 people to such a meeting when one or two people armed with a tape recorder could serve the same purpose.

Alternatively, one could only assume that the supporters of the NP and HNP are so stagnant or self-satisfied that they are not interested in the policy and opinion of those opposed to their way of thinking, unlike RP supporters who supposingly prove their flexibility and open-mindedness by listening to the other man's point of view.

THE EFFECT OF THE HNP

A point worth considering is the effect the HNP could have on the outcome of the election. The HNP will surely precipitate a split in the rightwing vote creating the opportunity for the RP to cash in on the situation.

RP LIKELY VICTORS

My conclusion is that the RP can win the election with relative ease but is vitally important that the organisers throw all their weight into the campaign. This could mean the difference between winning or losing a single constituency on the one hand – and the entire election on the other hand.

And time is running out.

UN SPONSORED ELECTION, CEASEFIRE ARE UNLIKELY IN 1981

Windhoek WINDHOEK OBSERVER in English 27 Sep 80 p 29

[Political comment in column: "Gwen Lister Looks at the Political Scene"]

[Text]

IT will be interesting to see, when a United Nations delegation arrives in Pretoria later in October for discussions about a possible ceasefire date, which parties will be present at the talks. The South African Foreign Affairs Minister, Mr Roelof Botha, stated emphatically in his last letter to the Secretary General, Dr Kurt Waldheim, that the "leadership" in South West Africa would have to be included in any further negotiations concerning the implementation of Security Council Resolution 435, which provides for elections to be held under the auspices of the UN. Mr Botha did not specify as to whether the "leadership" he referred to represented the Ministers Council alone, or whether it included political groups other than the DTA.

But at this stage it seems doubtful whether groups such as the Namibia National Front and Swapo D will be invited to attend the talks concerning the implementation of the settlement plan for South West Africa. But certainly representatives of the Ministers Council will be present at the discussions.

Regarding the talks about a possible ceasefire date, the success of the negotiations is obviously dependent upon a number of factors. These mainly concern the objections regarding UN "partiality" towards Swapo which were lodged in Mr Botha's last letter to Dr Waldheim. And, notwithstanding the strong tones adopted by Mr Botha in his letter, Western and UN sources still appear to be optimistic that some sort of agreement can still be entered into, and that the settlement plan itself is far from dead.

The UN mission was originally due to arrive on Monday in order to discuss the timetable for the settlement plan, but Mr Botha informed Dr Waldheim that it would be unsuitable for various reasons, including the fact that a special Parliamentary session was to be convened in early October, and that the new Administrator General is to assume office in South West Africa on October 6. He therefore proposed that the UN team, presumably to be led by Mr Brian Urquhart, visit South Africa between October 20 and 27.

OBJECTIONS RAISED

It seems evident that the objections contained in Mr Botha's letter to Dr Waldheim will be discussed at the meeting with the UN team in late October. Although they can almost certainly be described as "delaying tactics" on the part of South Africa, it seems likely that there will be no discussion of a ceasefire until the objections have been resolved to the satisfaction of South Africa.

Among other things, Mr Botha objected to what he called the 'preferential" treatment of Swapo by the UN, at the same time insisting that the "leadership" in South West Africa would have to be consulted in any further negotiations. In the 13 page letter, Mr Botha also launched a personal attack on Dr Waldheim himself condemning him for certain anti-South African sentiments made in Sierra Leone.

Only if these objections were dealt with to the satisfaction of South Africa, would they consider discussing the composition of the UN peacekeeping force and the question of a ceasefire, according to Mr Botha's letter.

ISSUE OF DEADLOCK

And it seems that the "impartiality" issue will remain one of deadlock. There appears to be little chance of Dr Waldheim amending the UN stand regarding Swapo, whom they consider to be the "sole and authentic" representatives of the people of Namibia, and in same way as there is no chance that South Africa will reverse her partiality towards the DTA.

Dr Waldheim's guarantee of UN impartiality once the settlement process has been set in motion, did not satisfy South Africa, and nothing other than "immediate impartiality" will quiet their objections. It is unlikely that this dispute will be resolved at the Pretoria talks later in October, and it is almost certain that South Africa will not concede on this issue.

There also seems to be an increasing reluctance on the part of South Africa to resolve the issue of South West Africa. Mr Botha, when postponing the visit by the UN team, said that he and the Prime Minister had 'commitments' (in addition to those already mentioned) until October 20. Once again the question of the future of this Territory and its people took a second place.

The continual outrage expressed by South Africa about Swapo's military activities in the north, do not seem to be genuine enough for them to seek a fairly speedy solution to the bush war. In retaliation to the UN's recognition of Swapo, South Africa have merely forged ahead with instating the DTA as the 'highest authority in the land'.

Totally meaningless and diversionary tactics, such as the holding of ethnic elections, are employed so as to take the focus off an international settlement. The UN briefs Swapo on the progress of negotiations, South Africa briefs the Ministers Council or DTA, and if anyone has reason to gripe, it is not South Africa, but the parties who fall somewhere in the middle.

It is therefore highly unlikely, although there has been speculation to this effect, that a UN sponsored election will come about in 1981. The possibility of a ceasefire is just as remote.

Perhaps the hope is still alive in the ranks of both the DTA and the South African Government, that Swapo can be well and truly trounced militarily, thus eliminating the need for a UN election. At the same time, internal suppression of the movement, its members and activities, will continue.

Indeed a faint hope. But perhaps both South Africa and the DTA are sufficiently naive to believe such a hope exists!

SWAPO, UN PLAN FOR FUTURE OF NAMIBIA

Blantyre DAILY TIMES in English 15 Sep 80 p 6

[Text]

PLANNING for a country that you cannot enter presents special problems. But the United Nations Nationhood Programme for Namibia is doing just that — trying to study, in advance, the problems likely to face a new government in Namibia.

After the independence of a number of countries in Southern Africa, particularly Mozambique and Angola, it became clear that the freedom fighters-turned-governments faced serious problems. They were being asked to make urgent decisions about economies that had been shattered by departing colonists, and about which they had virtually no information.

The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) sponsored a research programme for the Patriotic Front which is now being used by the new government of Zimbabwe in its planning.

But the first attempt to bring the entire UN system in to help is the Nationhood Programme for Namibia. Created by the General Assembly in December 1976, it really got off the ground in May 1978 when a conference in Lusaka approved 46 research and training projects costing 9.2 million dollars.

The programme is now having its first series of review meetings, which bring together the researchers and UN staff, SWAPO and representatives of Southern African countries which faced similar freedom struggles and which have similar environmental and social problems, in an effort to review progress to date. The first meetings were held in Maputo recently, to review food, agriculture and fishing. Later, meetings were held in Arusha, Tanzania, to look at education, labour, health and housing.

Perhaps the most amazing thing to come out of the Maputo meeting is just how much can be done without ever setting foot in Namibia, just by studying the experiences of neighbouring countries, trade statistics and satellite photos.

The experts are coming to the conclusion that in fisheries, agriculture and ranching, the 'obvious' answers may not be correct.

Clearly SWAPO or whoever wins elections or the war in Namibia, are not forced to take the advice being given by the experts. But the participation of SWAPO in the meetings suggests that the advice will be given serious consideration.

In many ways, Namibia is more like a Middle Eastern state than an African one. It has immense mineral wealth, but it is largely desert. It has about 1.5 million people, making it the most sparsely populated country in Africa. Only one per cent of the land is arable, although there is a considerable amount of grazing land.

Over the years, the whites have pushed the Africans off the better land, so that today 60 per cent of it is reserved for whites, who make up only 7 per cent of the population.

The Africans are restricted to 'homelands' and 'reserves' which are overcrowded, receive no agricultural support services, and are not permitted to be part of the food marketing system.

The economy is designed to import food from South Africa — more than 100,000 tonnes of grain a year. Thus, at independence, there could be serious food shortage.

This would be especially true if, as many of the experts now predict, the border with South Africa is closed and the newly independent state does not control Walvis Bay, the only deep water port.

One of the first priorities must be to keep food production up, and the experience of other countries in the region suggests that it will be necessary to support the big white farmers, despite the political distaste for this.

With ranching, however, the opposite seems true. Two of Namibia's biggest exports are beef and the pelts of Karakul sheep (also known as Persian lamb) produced on large, white-owned ranches. The view of experts and of SWAPO is that many whites will leave at independence, killing their cattle and sheep or taking them with them, as happened in Angola and Mozambique.

As Ben Amathila, SWAPO Secretary for Economic Affairs, commented: "The whites will run out of the country. This is not our policy; but the whites will believe their own propaganda about being persecuted, and our promises and reassurances will make no difference."

The most 'obvious' response would be to rebuild those industries as quickly as possible, because they provide vital jobs for Africans and important foreign exchange. But here the experts issued a caution.

A UN Food and Agriculture Organisation Remote Sensing Centre official presented a paper in Maputo on the analysis of satellite photos of Namibia. He found that the white ranchers are literally destroying the land: at least 20 per cent has been overgrazed. "Many of the pastures have been overstocked and abused, to the extent that they are now almost wasteland," he said.

Virtually all export and marketing is by way of South Africa, which means that Namibia will need to build up a whole new infrastructure to support these industries. It will need to train 1,500 abattoir staff, for example.

Thus, the view of the experts is that at independence, Namibia should not immediately try to rebuild the beef and karakul industries. Rather it should concentrate on food production, and leave time for pastures to recover and new infrastructure to be developed for cattle and sheep.

Fisheries, too, presents a non-obvious answer. It is expected that at independence the South African controlled coastal fishing boats working from Walvis Bay will be withdrawn.

This industry provides many jobs, and at Lusaka in 1978 it was the view that plans must be made to restart it immediately. But catch data shows that the South Africans have overfished so much that they have virtually destroyed the pilchard stock.

Based on the experience of Mozambique and Angola, the experts now argue against rebuilding the pilchard fleet, and suggest instead the development of new forms of coastal fishing, with medium size co-operatively owned boats catching a variety of fish for local consumption.

Everyone in Maputo felt that, sadly, independence still seems far away. But if planning is done now, a new government in Namibia could move much faster at independence.

CAPTURED DOCUMENTS DETAIL GUERRILLA ACTIVITIES

Hit Lists Discovered

Johannesburg SUNDAY TIMES in English 21 Sep 80 p 8

[Article by Eugene Hugo and Andre Viljoen]

[Text]

DOCUMENTS captured in South African and South West African raids into Angola have revealed a Swapo hit list of top officials in SWA, including the Administrator-General, Dr Gerrit Viljoen.

Mr Dirk Mudge, Chairman of the Council of Ministers, was also among several key white political figures on the list.

Army intelligence sources disclosed that lists compiled by Swapo were being held at the United Nations for future so-called war crime trials.

This emerged this week after South West African Territory Force headquarters released hundreds of documents taken during "Operation Smokeshell" in June.

The documents removed from the Swapo base were declassified after thorough intelligence screening during the past three months.

They reveal a remarkable tale of suffering among guerrilla cadres mainly because of starvation.

Sources said security forces were getting more information about Swapo because of payments of up to R1 500 to informants.

The seized documents give security forces almost total insight into Swapo strengths and strategy.

And they show how Swapo is struggling with massive logistical problems, including severe shortages of food, equipment and fuel.

Information in the documents include:

- How Swapo's chief political commissar, Greenwell Matangoh, was killed in action.
- Details of at least 18 top Swapo commanders who have died recently in the border war. Names, origins, training details and weapon numbers of hundreds of guerrillas which will help with future identification.
- The complete top leadership of Swapo.
- The guerilla organisation's complete intelligence and security network.
- Swapo's reconnaissance unit structure and details of six Swapo guerrilla groups, their code names and numbers.
- Important political developments such as the prelude to the expulsion of acting Swapo vice-president, Mr Mishake Muyongo, and nine other Caprivian leaders for allegedly plotting a breakaway.

WINDHOEK. — Documents seized in military operations in Southern Angola give an amazing insight into the heart of the Swapo fighting machine.

The documents, taken during Operation Smokeshell, were released for the first time this week after being sifted by military intelligence.

Papers taken from the bodies of some of the 360 cadres killed in the devastating operation in June, give a graphic picture of the loves, the fears, the hopes, the pathos and the pain of guerrillas in the field.

At the same time, the situation and intelligence reports reveal vital information about strategy, logistics and the tide of the war

The documents also disclose

- The crippling aftermath of the security forces raids into Angola reflected by numerous pleas for reinforcements, arms and ammunition, food, clothes and medical supplies.
- Details of Swapo operations inside Namibia. "That desertions, internal dissension and suicides are worrying Swapo commanders. There are regular complaints about starvation."
- Sources of guerrilla equipment.
- Names of key commanders — "live and dead".
- Contacts with Unita forces.

In the army files, love-letters are sandwiched between notes on the instruments of war.

The letters vary from the crudely sexual to lyrical expressions of devotion — all the feelings of men at war.

In a guerrilla's notebook we found, for example, details of an electric blasting cap and the testing of a firing wire conductor.

The next page detailed Soviet geography: "The Soviet Union is a very rich country ..." and so on.

Every personal letter ends: "Yours in war", "Yours in struggle", "Yours in the national obligation".

One letter — from "Somewhere in Angola" — tells a Namibian mother that her daughter visited her, but she was not at home.

"I shall coming one days. We shall meeting again my mother."

It is signed: Lemma Liennon.

Another letter asks about the "motherland" and about South Africa.

But it starts: "First of all I want to ask you how are conditions, moral and military?"

There are postcards from Moscow, notebooks from the Kenneth Kaunda Fund and the United Nations International Children's Education Fund.

And also an invitation to a wedding reception at a plush hotel in Czechoslovakia.

Guerrilla code names abound among the documents.

One hears of "Groovy", "Danger", "Carbine" and "The Lion of Africa".

Most letters and documents are dutifully written in English, the language of the revolution.

From the documents come full names, combat names, birthplaces and dates, level of education, when joined, place of training and types and numbers of weapons.

An overwhelming number of guerrillas appear to have obtained only a sub-B in education and were trained at the Tobias Ohaynyeko Training Camp in Lubango.

The USSR crops up often.

Children's education appears, from notebooks and textbooks, to be mainly socialist indoctrination with a militant, anti-South African accent.

Children in Angola are apparently taught such subjects as the "rights and duties of the USSR citizen".

Notebooks are filled with childish coloured drawings of AK-47 rifles and other military hardware, as well as vicious references to the "colonial boers".

But there are more important documents than these.

A weekly situation report, dated 4-5-80 to 10-5-80, details the desertions of two artillery cadres attached to Detachment C.

Mission to destroy

They were apparently "seized alive" by the "enemy" (SWA and SA security forces).

According to the document, the SA Air Force "violated" Angola for 3½ hours that week.

The "foe" was reported to have trained 200 fake guerrillas, apparently in Natal.

These "fake guerrillas" were claimed to move in groups of 15 to 20, to be equipped chiefly with two FKM's and 60 mm mortars.

A monthly situation report of the People's Liberation Army of Namibia, number 3, labelled "confidential" and dated April 5, 1980, speaks of the "tense situation in the eastern region (of SWA)".

The report discloses that guerrillas in the north-western region were assigned a mission to destroy both Okalongo and Onaviri bases.

The missions were to be "fulfilled" on March 12, 1980, but "all of a sudden" the "enemy" crossed into Angola on March 9.

"Enemy crossed in the direction of Okalongo and occupied some villages, including Okaholamo, where our combatants fell in her ambush and we lost two 82 mm mortars."

The security forces also crossed in the direction of Onaviri.

In these two clashes, and others fought subsequently, Swapo lost 17 combatants.

The report complains of air support and of bombing of supply routes, the loss of vehicles and a further five comrades "sacrificed".

It describes the situation as bad and also says the enemy "receives information about its operations in advance".

It also admits that Swapo forces do not know how to apply defensive tactics, that they are not familiar with the tactics used by the enemy commandos and that there is a lack of control at detachment level of command.

The report states: "Generally our combatants are starving ... We eat once a day. They go on combat missions hungry."

It says guerrillas can no longer be fed by their people because of drought and crops destroyed by the enemy.

"Combatants have turned into thieves" and the situation is "very serious", according to the report.

It goes on to say that combatants go on long missions without, or with very little, food.

When they return, they find nothing to eat.

"The result is demoralisation and defection. War also plays its part in this respect. But everybody is just human."

The Swapo document admits that the rate of Namibians defecting to the government is growing.

"It is extremely difficult to feed 1 000 cadres who are already hungry with 15 bags of mealie meal a week."

Apart from the desertions, there are suicides in the field.

A report from Omulola, dated March 3, 1980, says a certain Christopher Bernard Kanakamutundu committed suicide at 11 am prior to going on a patrol.

"He put the barrel of the gun in his mouth and the bullet penetrated his brain."

The note says: "I cannot continue suffering in this way."

Another suicide, that of Moses Mangulike, is recorded in the personal diary of the deputy chief of intelligence, James Villes Huala.

"It is extremely difficult to feed 1 000 cadres who are already hungry with 15 bags of mealie meal a week."

One document relates to Tom van der Merwe, one of the black Van der Merwe clan in the Kaokoveld.

It refers to Mr Van der Merwe as an "enemy collaborator" and discloses how one of "this stooge's guards, named Manuel, was physically eliminated".

Two Van der Merwe brothers have been killed in Swapo raids on their kraals.

Lack of command

A monthly situation report, signed by Dimo Hamaambo, commander of armed forces, refers to combatants not receiving assistence because "enemy-organised Unita bandits are serving on white farms where they used to get food".

It also refers to South Africa's psychological warfare reducing people to a "sluggish state of obedience and collaboration"

The report explains that the suffering of high casualties in March this year happened because of a lack of command and troop control.

Perhaps a Swapo intelligence report, dated 4-4-80, sums it all up.

It says: "The general situation is tense because of the enemy activities both inside Namibia and Angola . . .

"The enemy constructs new roads and airfields to mount larger operations and to prevent the infiltration of guerrillas to the south . . .

"She hides herself from the masses and conducts secret movements and avoids direct engagements with the guerrillas.

"She uses commandos supported by copter gunships."

Food Shortage Among Guerrillas

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 22 Sep 80 p 3

[Text]

WINDHOEK: Lack of logistical support, starvation and poor troop control were among the main reasons for high Swapo casualty figures in the SWA bush war, the commander of Swapo's armed forces, Mr Dimo Hamaambo, said in a document released in Windhoek on Friday.

The report was one of many released to the media after being seized by South African and SWA forces during the "Smokeshell" operations in southern Angola this year.

The report was signed by Mr Hamaambo on April 5, 1980, apparently at the headquarters of the Peoples Liberation Army of Namibia in Angola.

Mr Hamaambo wrote: "Generally, our combatants are starving. Usually our food supply arrives at a time when there is actually nothing to eat whatsoever".

He continued: "We eat once a day . . . yet do not satisfy the combatants. They go on missions hungry."

He said the food situation among the local population in Angola was bad because of drought.

"For our missions to be carried out successfully we need a constant supply of food."

South African and SWA forces were crossing the Angolan border and cutting off food supplies.

"We can no longer be fed by our (own) people," he reported. "The result is, our combatants are turned into thieves, both in the camps and amongst the local population.

"It cannot be concluded that a man who spent four days without food is a thief if he steals a bag of mealie meal and starts mixing it with water and eats right away . . . he is just hungry. The situation is very serious," the report said.

"Combatants go on long missions without or with very little food, when they return, they find nothing to eat.

"The result is demoralisation and then defection," Mr Hamaambo wrote.

The rate of "Namibians defecting to the government is growing" he said. Many factors contributed to defections, but starvation was one of the reasons that could be countered.

"It is extremely difficult to feed a thousand cadres, who are already hungry, with 15 bags of mealie meal a week," Mr Hamaambo's report said.

He suggested that his men receive 10 truck-loads of food every week.

In Spite of all the hardship combatants were determined to continue their fight.

"Their conviction and understanding of the sacred cause and responsibility . . . is irreversable" he wrote.

Incursions Into the South

Windhoek WINDHOEK OBSERVER in English 27 Sep 80 p 11

[Text]

SWAPO Section Commanders describe their incursions into South West Africa. Among many documents released by the Army last week, and displayed at Headquarters in Curt von Francois Street, were two type-written reports by these Commanders.

WINDHOEK: Thousands of documents, booklets, diaries and leaflets were confiscated in the various raids which South African forces had made into Angola in the first half of 1980. Most of these papers were on display last week after the Army's Intelligence Service, assisted by the Security Police, had perused the documents. Those which they deemed could qualify for release were then taken to a conference room at Bastion in Curt von Francois Street where the Press had had unlimited time to go through the papers.

Many of the documents, are, of course, clearly those of school pupils trying to improve on their education. Others are rather sophisticated and concern the handling of advanced types of armament and firearms.

> Unknown to one group, they were in the precincts of Berg Aukas when they killed an ox for food. Hours later soldiers were on their tracks.

There were also reports made by group commanders operating inside of South West Africa.

Let us look at a report filed by Commander Hafeni Andreas, alias Hamukumatela. He filed his report on the 1st May of this year and apparently his section belonged to the Mundilo group, which is to be inferred from the headline of the report.

Commander Hamukumatela writes that, after crossing the Namutoni fence, the six men led by him went on to cross the Tsintsabis Road at 11h00 the next day. The report states that enemy movements along that road were quite frequent. They travelled the whole day and night and arrived at a point somewhere north-east of Tsumeb the next morning.

The group had had nothing to eat for several days and, to use their own words contained in the report, they were tormented by hunger and thirst. One afternoon the squad arrived at a deserted cattle post where there were scattered herds of cattle. They filled their water containers and quenched their thirst.

Two kilometers from that post they accidentally came face to face with an enemy section. Both sides were momentarily stunned and no fire was opened for a few seconds.

The squad retreated and, the report states, the enemy opened fire. One of the members of the squad by the name of Bonnie threw away his kit bag, while another by the name of Shinyengu was wounded. It was at this spot that the group broke up and they never met again, according to the report.

Commander Hamukumatela and two other members of the squad retreated westwards, and that night arrived on a farm where there were Bushman workers. The farmer, according to the information given to the group, was on a visit to a neighbour. They were offered meals and resumed their journey the same night, but the next day they had to wait in a bush before crossing the road for fear of being spotted. They crossed the main road to Namutoni near Tsumeb, right in the town's outskirts. At about 18h00 that night they called at a cattle post where the black workers provided them with meals. It was decided to proceed towards Kombat.

Wherever they went, the local population assisted them by providing them with food and drinks. Sometimes, though, they suffered before arriving at these cattle posts where the labourers helped them to get succour.

According to the report, enemy movements were on the increase. Somewhere between Tsumeb and Kombat the three men hid their kit bags so as to collect them later when the situation had somehow softened up.

On reaching Kombat on the third day, they found that the compound was being patrolled. A man was met in the forest who provided them with full information about the situation.

According to the report, labourers were enthusiastic in meeting face to face with the guerrillas and offered them food and drinks. They were even told that there were two men identified as SWAPO combatants, but they were cautioned to remain vigilant, for the men could also have been enemy agents. However, shortly afterwards, the squad had met with the two men who made a report. They were members of Commander Lee's group.

These two men reported to the squad that Commander Lee had laid explosives on the railway line. They had lost contact with Commander Lee and turned to meet Commander Hamukumatela. Money was handed to the labourers who had to procure food and other essentials to last for several days. A number of days were spent in the mountains near Kombat.

The report relates a number of mishaps and how one of them had been wounded, and how again a railway line had been sabotaged when explosives were also laid in a road running to a certain farm, but these failed to detonate.

The report states that other guerrillas later joined the group, and there was a near disaster for them when the compound at Kombat was surrounded. Inside was one of the squad's men, and he had just made it into the woods. Three others, though, were locked in the encirclement, and one of them resisted at the entrance. According to the report, this guerrilla shot and killed a member of the Defence Force. He wounded another two before paying with his life. The two others were arrested, and they took the enemy to the squad arms attaché.

Meeting face to face with South African soldiers at one stage, both groups were too stunned to open fire immediately.

As a result of these happenings, the squad left the town and withdrew to the north of South West Africa, which they reached without mishap.

Yet another operations report told of how in late February a farm was attacked in the Grootfontein district. This was probably the attack on 'Goasib,' the farm of Mr Koos Louw near Abanab. Four of the group had to turn back in order to escort a wounded member.

The remaining eight insurgents, led by Commander Hinanaye, continued in the direction of Grootfontein. Crossing the Rundu-Grootfontein road, they headed for Berg Aukas. Many of the farms in the area, according to the report, were deserted, and hunger was pressing the insurgents, for it was now February 17 and they had had their last meal 48 hours earlier. Thus, on the night of February 19, they killed an ox, unaware that they were only a kilometer or two from Berg Aukas.

They proceed the next day to Grootfontein, unaware that their enemy was on their trail all the time. Just after collecting water in a park near Grootfontein, the soldiers caught up with them.

People in Kavango love to hear the sound of gunfire.

According to the report by Commander Hinaunye, the fire was returned. The enemy fire was later neutralised, but the squad withdrew and fire was resumed by the enemy. The group of eight divided into two quads of three and five men. Aircraft started arriving and forces were landed in the area.

The group of five, led by Commander Hinaunye, withdrew, and the enemy remained in hot pursuit. According to Commander Hinaunye's report, anti-personnel mines were laid and detonated by the enemy.

They arrived in the Mangetti area near the Kavango-speaking region and they were well supplied with meals. According to the report, a bunch of landmines were laid, and they also caused destruction to the Mangetti-Kavango fence. Information was received that the enemy had laid an ambush but, Commander Hinaunye reports, he managed to lead his squad past the ambush without being detected.

He concluded his report by saying that in the Kavango-speaking region many people, especially the students, are eager to join SWAPO abroad, but there is no suitable route for them to get there. The population of Kavango, the Commander states, loves to hear the sound of gunfire. The senior chief of that area sides with SWAPO, and has called on his subordinates to render assistance of any kind to SWAPO guerrillas, according to Commander Hinaunye.

The main question being asked in Kavango is whether the guerrillas really fight, for on two occasions now they happened to come through the area and to return without any fighting being conducted.

The Commander's report states that some elements in Kavango are still afraid of the guerrillas, and therefore political organisation by the Commissars is needed.

SWAPO DEATHS AT 1,219 --Windhoek--The South African and SWA security forces had killed 170 SWAPO terrorists in the operational area in the north of the Territory last month, bringing the total SWAPO men killed this year to 1,219, Brigadier Bosman, Second in Command of the SWA Territory Force, said in Windhoek yesterday. He said in a brief statement that only one member of the security forces had been killed in September. He died in a landmine explosion and his death had been announced. Brigadier Bosman said the high kill ratio could be attributed to the extremely dry conditions in northern SWA, good intelligence received by the security forces and the "aggressive fighting spirit" of the South African and SWA forces. There had been increasing reports of Owambo civilians supplying intelligence to security forces about impending infiltration of terrorists into SWA from their bases in southern Angola. A group of about 150 terrorists was intercepted last month while they were on the point of entering the Territory. Eighty-five of them were killed in a series of follow-up operations and contacts. A Defence Force statement said at the time the infiltration had been timed for propaganda purpose to coincide with a SWAPO conference held in Paris.--Sapa [Text] [Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 2 Oct 80 p 3]

ASABA, BENDEL STATE, THREATENED WITH STARVATION

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 9 Sep 80 p 12

[Article by Eddy Orakwe]

[Text]

PRICES of basic food commodities have shot up recently in Asaba, Bendel State and if the trend continues, the common man might soon starve.

An investigation conducted by the Daily Times showed that prices of gari, rice, beans and yams rose between 20 and 40 per cent.

Gari, the basic food item for the community, has recorded a tremendous increase in price.

A forthnight ago, 10 cigarette cups were sold at N1.00, but during the week-end, the quantity fell to 8 cups for N1.00.

Both rice and beans have become luxury items exclusively for the upper class.

A cup of rice and beans which sold at 30k and 20 kobo respectively went up to 40kobo and 25kobo in the Ogbogonogo and Cable Point markets.

The inquiry further revealed that the price of an imported Uncle Bens Rice has risen from N50 to N75 per bag recently.

Yam is not left out in the new price trend as, an average yam tuber now costs N2.50 or N3.00 depending on the buyers ability of bargaining.

With these price increase, the monthly feeding allowance for a "low profile family" of four now stands at about N180.00 and the situation has been causing concern among housewives.

A woman, mother of four who refused to give her name disclosed that it was almost impossible to prepare a pot of "low profile soup" with N12.00, an amount which was enough for two pots last month.

The new trend also has affected both meat and fish (dried and fresh), most housewives have now found favour in frozen fish otherwise called "mortuary" whose price is relatively low.

Two reasons were given for the recent price jump. First, the new government policy on N100.00 minimum wage known as "Shagari". Like its predecessor, "udoji," the new wage structure was affecting cost of living especailly as the action was followed by any corresponding increase in output of goods and service one civil servant here wondered what would have happened if the government had accepted the N300.00 wage demanded by the Nigerian Labour Congress.

Meanwhile, the recently launched green revolution was yet to make any impact among the rural communites.

Middlemen

A community leader noted that the scheme was only felt in radio, television and newspapers without any local base.

He appealed to both state and Federal Governments to lay the ground work of the green revolution in the food producing rural areas rather than the urban centre.

The activities of middle men have frustrated the rural farmers as they have contributed to the high prices of food items in no small way.

These unpatriotic Nigerians, according to a source, have made it almost impossible for the farmers to sell directly to the consumers.

These middle men were said to have formed unions to control the sale of food and of course at well inflated prices. The source noted that "there is now a union for basically every food item in the market."

DAILY OIL PRODUCTION REPORTED DOWN FROM LAST YEAR

Lagos BUSINESS TIMES in English 9 Sep 80 p 1

[Text]

NIGERIA'S output of crude petroleum dropped significantly in July. Data prepared by the Oil Produducers' Trade Section of the Lagos Chamber of Commerce showd aggregate average daily output at 2.099 million barrels per day during the month, representing a drop of about 50.000 barrels per day from the average of about 2.5 million barrels a day for the first six months of the year.

Compared with July last year, the level of production was down 11.9 per cent. The July 1980 figure was in fact the lowest production rate for any month since August 1978.

The cutback in production is ostensibly due to the oil supply surplus in the world market as a result of which many OPEC countries are reported to have cutback their production.

But N.N.P.C. officials have persistently denied that they had ordered a production cutback or intended to order one. Production apparently is being limited independently by what the market can take.

In the soft-market that now exists, spot prices are reported to have dropped even below the OPEC base price of 22 dollars per barrels.

Particularly hit are the high priced light crudes, among which Nigeria's. Production restraints in OPEC countries have not brought forth similar efforts from other producers, notably in the North Sea, where Britain is in fact expanding output.

In the circumstances many producers are reported to be giving under-the-table discounts. But it was not possible to find out whether Nigeria, whose official price of about 37 dollars per barrel is one of the highest, is one of such countries.

NNPC TO START PRODUCING OIL

Lagos BUSINESS TIMES in English 16 Sep 80 p 1

[Article by Stanley Egbochukwa]

[Text]

THE Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation may start producing crude oil on its own earlier than anticipated, if oil in its Oredo I well proves to be of commercial quantity.

The Corporation discovered oil at a depth of 3,637.5 metres at its Oredo I well, located at Ologbo field between Benin and Sapele in July.

The results are still being appraised to determine whether the reserves are commercially exploitable. The NNPC proposes to drill other wells in the field.

In fulfilment of one of the objectives of the decree setting it up, the NNPC has been making effort to produce oil on its own, and not only as a joint venture partner of the oil companies who now produce all the oil.

So far, the corporation has drilled about 19 wells both on-shore and off-shore. Oil has been found in 10 of these wells, and six of them are considered commercially exploitable.

The corporations staff play an important role, in its drilling operations. Their functions include among other things, acquisition, processing and interpretation of seismic data, as well as selection of drilling sites.

However, actual drilling is carried out by contractors, although under well-site supervision of NNPC personnel. The NNPC does not do the drilling by itself, reportedly, because it does not own any rigs.

The corporation however intends to be increasingly involved in oil operations in the country, because it believes that that will better equip it to discharge its responsibilities as joint venture partner of the other oil companies operating in the country.

It is also pushing to develop indigenous expertise in oil exploration and production. As at now, it has a small group of indigenous experts that plan and supervise drilling operations, and uses only one foreign consultant.

DETAILS OF TIGA DAM, WATER MANAGEMENT PROVIDED

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 12 Sep 80 p 7

[Article by Coker Onita]

[Text]

TIGA, in Kano, is synonymous with water. The Tiga Lake, dammed to process water for Kano and its municipality, has a total storage capacity of 1,800 billion litres of water.

Although, there are reports that the 'Tiga Dam Project' was the brainchild of Alhaji Audu Bako, the former Governor of Kano State, it is believed that the idea of the project started during the former civilian regime.

The former Northern Nigerian Government, the source said, commissioned the United States Agency for International Development (USAID), to carry out "pre-feasibility studies" and locate possible dam sites in the Chad Basin Area of the region.

The river systems are made up of Yobe and Hadejia. Rivers, Kano and Challawa drain into Hadejia, while Katagun, Jamare and Hadejia drain into Yobe. Both systems finally empty their waters into Lake Chad.

The study was however, said to have been conducted between 1966 and 1967. And when states were created in 1967, the report was made available to the Kano State Government. The report identified the "Tiga Rapids Dam," as one of the possible dam sites.

The managing director of Water Resources and Engineering Construction Agency (WRECA), Mallam Magaji Abdullahi, spoke about the dam. His agency is responsible for the construction of dams in the state. He said that the dam was constructed between 1971 and 1974 at the cost of ₦15 million. Its investigations, design and construction were done by the Ministry of Works and Survey, Kano.

Although, water was one of the very important reasons why the dam was constructed, he said it was basically to irrigate vast expanse of fertile land for agricultural purpose in the state.

He said that before the dam was constructed, the inhabitants of Kano suffered from acute shortage of water. "This is always between February and June."

Continuing, he said: "During the rains, plenty of water gushes towards Lake Chad and there is always plenty to drink. But immediately the rain subsides, Kano runs into acute shortage of water.

"In order to avoid the annual problem, the flow of the water was regulated by the construction of the Dam. This ensures adequate supply of water all the year round.

"As at now, 112 million litres which is less than one per cent of the water in the Lake, is released from the dam for human consumption per day.

Malam Abdullahi gave details of the dam. He said it is the second largest in Nigeria, next to Kainji dam.

The average annual precipitation into the lake is 1,016 millimetres. Its catchment area covers 6,641 square kilometres, while the average annual run-off is 1,059 cubic millimetres.

Said he: "The crest lenght is 5,791 metres, the top width is seven metres, while the maximum height of the dam is 47.24 metres. The type of the dam is known as "Zoned Earthfill."

"The total surface area is 17,800 hectares while the total volume of Fill Materials is 10,800,000 cubic metres."

Malam Abdullahi said that although the dam had been constructed before WRECA was formed, it was later handed over to Hadejia Jama' River Basin Development Authority for the irrigation of their agricultural projects. "However, we still maintain the dam."

He said that the main purpose of establishing the Agency was to minimise the cost of bringing water to many nomes in the state. "We carry out water development projects at the cheapest cost and within the shortest possible time using direct labour."

Not less than 16 dams had been constructed in the state by the Agency since 1974. Presently, their job include the construction of Kagara Dam Project at Niger State. The contract was signed in January this year for six million naira. Also going on is the construction of Challawa Gorge Dam Project. "This would be the fourth largest dam in Nigeria, when it is completed. The project is expected to cost ₦35.7 million and would supply 900 billion litres of water.

Malam Abdullahi, 32, an engineer by profession, summed up the benefits derivable from the Tiga Dam Project.

"This include irrigation, flood control and reclamation of Hadejia Valley, municipal and industrial water supplies, fisheries and hydro-electric power. Its secondary benefits include recreation, wildlife conservation and the general improvement of the living conditions of the people in the project area."

BOOK REVIEW PUBLISHED ON BUSINESS FIRMS DIRECTORY

Lagos BUSINESS TIMES in English 9 Sep 80 p 18

[Text] There is no doubt this is a directory long overdue.

Where others in the same category like Daily Times Trade and Industrial Directory, have tried to cover all companies in the Nigerian scene, this one limits itself to what it considers Nigeria's companies that matter.

In limiting itself thus, the likelihood is there for it to contain far more information on these companies than hitherto available in any other directory.

To some extent, Major Companies of Nigeria 1980,81 really does contain more. So much so that it cannot be said that the Publishers are not entitled to their bold claim in the introduction that this Directory "Contains more information on Commercial companies than any other work."

Unfortunately, however, it appears the Publishers on assuming that cap did not really grasp its full responsibilities.

There are so many other questions apart from the general desire to be informed to which this directory fails to provide answers.

Questions like: how come the major companies--what yardstick or criteria were used? How many 'major' companies are there in Nigeria?

Again how many of the listed companies are, like the Publishers claimed, "Majority of non-Nigerian firms" included in the compilation because they are "making a solid contribution to the business environment of the area."

Beyond these, one can't help wondering at the authenticity and comprehensiveness of the issue. For some of the companies information available is rather, very scanty and not up to date.

For example, in a directory titled 1980/81, N4m is recorded as authorized capital for Daily Times of Nigeria (DTN) while since 1979, this had been increased to N8m.

Also comparing DTN to the Punch in the same Publishing business, the information on DTN is relatively very scanty. What's more, under Punch Nigeria Ltd, Mr Dayo Wright is listed as Editor, Sunday Punch, a post he left more than a year ago.

Again the Midwest Line had its name changed to Bendel Line sometime in 1975 but the corporation still appears in the old name.

Another, is the double entry for Deje Oyenuga & Partners in pages 54 and 775. The street addresses were different alright but the Lagos Box numbers were the same. Anyhow, can it be possible that two partnerships--exist in the same name?

The popular NNPC shares that abbreviation with another company this time in the North. Why then list both as NNPC in the alphabetical index?

These and other mistakes or misinformation notwithstanding "Major Companies of Nigeria 1980/81' is by and large, a welcome effort.

All the publishers need to do is to go beyond depending solely on companies for information and at the same time, set up a feed system to monitor changes as they occur in the hierarchies and addresses of these companies.

Of course, they owe a duty too, to tell their consumers how major their "major" is!

NEW OIL PALM MILL--The Nigerian Institute for Oil Palm Research (NIFOR) will commission a new gigantic N1.5 million Oil Processing Mill at Benin, Bendel State on September 30, this year. The Federal Minister of Science and Technology, Dr S U Ugoh, will commission the oil processing mill. The processing mill which has a capacity of processing 6 tons of palm bunches per hour is expected to enhance the supply of more and better quality palm oil into the Nigerian market. According to a release signed by Mr RA Eseigbe of the Institute, the establishment of the new mill was motivated by the desire to demonstrate the institute's research findings on a commercial scale through the commercial production of high grade palm oil as well as to assist numerous small scale oil palm growers in milling their fruits. The release further explained that apart from using the mill to demonstrate its results, NIFOR hopes to learn from the management of such large scale mill and to acquire the experience with which it can train oil mill stuff for the various governments of the federation. The mill when in full production will supply sufficient high grade palm oil that can meet the increasing human and industrial requirements of Nigeria. COLLAPSED DAM DISASTER--The Ojirami Dam at Ojirami, Akoko-Edo Local Government in Bendel State has collapsed. A judicial commission of inquiry has been set up by the State Governor, Professor Ambrose Alli, to look into the incident, disclosed in a television broadcast. The dam which was commissioned in 1974 collapsed at the weekend destroying bridges and properties worth millions of naira. Professor Alli described the incident as a "national disaster" and said that Mr Justice JO Idahosa, had been appointed as the sole commissioner for the probe while Mr U Ikhide, was its secretary. FUTURE FOR INDUSTRIES--The present administration in Kwara State is interested in knowing and finding possible solutions to the problems of all the indigenous companies in the state. This fact was brought to light when the acting Governor of Kwara State, Chief JAO Shittu, paid an inspection visit to the Granite Crushing Industry in Oke-Oyi. Speaking on the occasion, Chief Shittu called on all Kwarans to come home to join hands with the government in its effort to industrialize the state. The acting Governor reiterated the willingness of the government to come to the aid of all the indigenous companies in the state. Chief JO Shittu assured the management of the Granite Crushing Industry that his government would patronize them. He said that the Kwara State Government would soon launch its own housing scheme and it would also tar at least eight kilometer roads in each of the 12 local government areas in the state. Some of the industry's products would be used in these projects, he added. Earlier, a welcome address was read on behalf of the board of directors in which a lot of problems facing the industry were enumerated. This includes low sales and high cost of materials. PROTEST OVER ABUJA--Niger State has launched a campaign to make the Federal Government reduce the size of Abuja--the Federal capital territory. A plea from the state government urged federal authorities to readjust the boundaries of Abuja. The appeal was in a communique issued in Minna at the weekend, after a joint meeting of members of the Niger State executive, the House of Assembly and representatives of local government councils from which land was taken for the future federal capital. The communique said the land acquired for the Federal territory was "too large" and no meaningful development plans had been proposed for areas west of Highway A2. The joint meeting resolved that the territory be confined to areas projected for the Federal capital city. It further urged that all areas outside the capital city should be returned to the state from which the land was taken. The communique also appealed to the Federal Government to resettle all the communities affected by the location of the capital city with immediate effect so as to end their "fear and suffering." DUTCH GENERAL PREPARES SWAPO STRATEGY AGAINST RSA

[Article by Aida Parker]

[Text] A retired Dutch general has prepared a blueprint for Mr Sam Nujoma's Marxist-backed SWAPO terrorist movement, aimed at overthrowing the South African Government.

He is General M.W. von Meyenfeldt, until recently Governor of the Royal Military Academy at Breda in the Netherlands.

His recommended strategy? That South Africa, "a fortress," is most vulnerable to internal subversion.

The news of General Von Meyenfeldt's new role as technical adviser to SWAPO has come as a bombshell to South Africa's large Hollander community.

It proves as never before, say leading community spokesmen, that it is imperative they themselves organise an information campaign in the Netherlands to counteract the all-out anti-South African propaganda spread by the radical Left.

First announcement of the Von Meyenfeldt link with SWAPO was made in the foreign airmail edition of the NRC (New Rotterdam Courant) which said:

"A retired Dutch general has drawn up, at the request of the Dutch anti-apartheid organisation, Kairos, a strategic military plan for SWAPO.

"The strategy of General Von Meyenfeldt...was discussed at the recent Namibia conference in Paris.

"According to a collaborator of SWAPO, the general's suggestion for the war against South Africa's apartheid regime came as a surprise.

"The SWAPO collaborator called it encouraging that an ex-general from a NATO country has stated that force of arms could lead to a solution in South West Africa.

"The essence of the strategy is that South Africa should be considered a fortress which can be better attacked from the inside than from the outside.

"The general recommends that within South Africa military communications should be interfered with and that the military infrastructure should be destroyed.

"Von Meyenfeldt stated in an explanation that the question of whether force may be used or not did not come within his consideration, as it was not up to him to judge whether violence may be used.

"I do consider as hypocritical protests against the violence of liberation movements being raised for discussion, whereas the threat of nuclear weapons is accepted by the West."

DEFENSE OFFICIAL SAYS NATIONAL SERVICE MUST BE BROADENED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 27 Sep 80 p 9

[Article by Johann Kloppers]

[Text]

SOUTH AFRICANS were making a mistake if they believed "the burden of securing law and order and defending life and property was only to be borne by those in uniform," the Deputy Minister of Defence, Mr Kobie Coetzee, said yesterday.

Addressing a revue parade in Pretoria, he said that in this regard there were three options.

"Security and defence are left to: (1) the professionals and volunteers only, (2) to national servicemen, or (3) a combination of the two systems.

"You are well aware that mostly for financial and economic reasons, we have opted for the third possibility," Mr Coetzee said.

"This is a wise approach since it may have the effect of bringing about involvement of every household."

Total involvement of the public, of all population groups "has become an objective in itself".

"The spirit of resistance, the will to survive honourably and decently must of necessity penetrate our national life and every household."

He said a system must therefore be devised which did not only take cognisance of the needs of the Defence Force, but also of all the security forces and would have to have the following characteristics.

- To provide manpower from all population groups for SA's security forces and notably the permanent force, the strike force, the citizen force and the commandos and also for the police reservists and civil defence on a basis of conscription and otherwise gentle compulsion where the spirit of voluntariness no longer prevailed.
- To ensure manpower for SA's economy and various strategic institutions.
- To make it unnecessary — even unfeasible — for the public and private sector to compete with SA's security system for manpower.
- To leave no room for discrimination by employers against men and women who either had security or military commitments to fulfil or who were volunteers.
- To leave no room for an unequal distribution of the security and defence responsibility.
- To make it possible for a man or woman who was no longer fit for border service to render such service in a local security or defence system.

"In order to achieve this, our system of national service will have to be revised and will have to broaden its base, especially in respect of men in their thirties and perhaps their forties to encompass the needs of the police reservists and civil defence," Mr Coetzee said.

AIR FORCE CHIEF DISCUSSES SHORTAGE OF SKILLED GROUND CREW

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 8 Oct 80 p 9

[Text]

THE South African Air Force is critically short of skilled ground personnel, but is applying the adaptability of the Israeli air force during the Yom Kippur war, the Chief of the SAAF, Lieutenant-General A M Muller said yesterday.

He spoke at a "Wings Parade" at the Central Flying School at Dunnottar, where he presented pilot's wings to 33 young Candidate Officers.

Gen Muller said that the Israelis managed a high sortie rate during the 1973 war because "everybody did everything."

"In management language, there was much cross-utilisation of skills. Radar technicians were refuelling aircraft, engine mechanics changed tyres and helped with re-arming.

"We are already applying this, but I want to appeal for a more universal application of this principle in spirit."

Gen Muller said that operational duties had caused flight training to be adjusted to make pilots available earlier for operational squadrons.

Yesterday's parade was the last of the courses where flight training to Wings standard will be done in Harvard and Impala aircraft.

He said that in future a differential training system will be applied where student pilots, after their basic training on Harvards, will be directly posted for training in helicopters, Impalas, transport or light aircraft.

Gen Muller said that the SAAF plays a vital role in the defence of the country and that it has been actively involved in border defence for more than a decade.

"The SAAF is fortunate in possessing excellent aircraft and it is up to the people who maintain and fly these birds. They must get everything out of them that they were designed to do, and that is not the job of a run-of-the-mill pilot just putting in his time."

He said that the threat against South Africa was not aimed at any one population group, but at the country as a whole and he appealed to all population groups to become involved in the defence of it.

BOTHA ANNOUNCES PRESIDENT'S COUNCIL MEMBERS

Long-lasting Influence Anticipated

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 3 Oct 80 pp 1, 2

[Article by Jaap Theron]

[Excerpt]

THE Presidents' Council will play a vital role for a long time and its advice could lead to significant and positive developments in the relations between South Africa's various race groups, the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, said yesterday.

Mr Botha, who announced the names of 54 "gifted men and women" to the Council, said the Council would not supersede or form part of Parliament — its task would be purely advisory.

"I am convinced that the Council will have to play a vital role for a considerable time in the far-reaching constitutional reform and renewal which have been necessitated by South Africa's unique circumstances," he said.

He and the five chairmen of committees, who have already been named, will start immediately with preparatory work and the five permanent committees to serve under them will be made public by way of proclamation soon, Mr Botha said.

He and the Government were thankful that so many eminent South Africans, representing various population groups and a diversity of political beliefs, had been willing to serve on the Council in individual capacities, Mr Botha said.

Those nominated had been selected from a short list of about 500 names. In addition, scores of prominent personalities from the various population groups had voluntarily declared themselves willing to serve on the Council, he said.

Because of specific circumstances, one more name still had to be announced. This would be done as soon as possible, Mr Botha said.

Optimistic

The Government was optimistic because, for the first time, it had succeeded in establishing an institutionalised body in which prominent citizens of various population groups could deliberate together.

"We are convinced that a group of gifted men and women will be serving on the council and that they will be able to render extremely valuable advice to the State President and Parliament," he said.

The Prime Minister also said that the President's Council must be viewed as a sincere attempt to ensure constitutional peace.

"Similarly, this is a sincere attempt by the Government to encourage deliberations in expert fields and where mutual interest are at stake by means of the Council's five permanent committees."

The Government's earnestness was shown by the fact that this body was the first of its kind in that it had transcended political and racial barriers in order to deliberate on constitutional matters, the Prime Minister said.

He expected the Council to lead to "significant and positive development in the mutual relations between the various population groups."

Premises for the Council are at present being prepared in an office block on the Foreshore and Mr John Bauermeister has been appointed secretary to the Council. Mr Bauermeister is a former regional representative of the Department of Statistics.

COMMENT ON PRESIDENT'S COUNCIL, OTHER BOTHA PLANS

'SUNDAY TIMES' Comment

Johannesburg SUNDAY TIMES in English 21 Sep 80 p 22

[Editorial: "Let's See the Fine Print, Please, Mr Botha"]

[Text] Beeld, Transvaal mouthpiece of the Cape Nationalists--and to that extent the Prime Minister's gazette--announced this week with undue solemnity that it was publishing the most important single report in its short history: an outline of the Government's constitutional blueprint.

Very little of its report, ironically, had not been published previously in the Sunday Times and other newspapers but Beeld's semi-official annoucement did set the seal on a fundamental change of policy in the National Party.

The old script, written by Dr Verwoerd in 1959, has been cast aside as the failure which it manifestly became. The notion of nine separate Bantustans, each with its own anthem, flag, economy and seat in the United Nations, has been jettisoned at last.

So had the idea of a separate homeland, or even a separate political future for the coloured people and the Asian communities.

The madness of building everything from parliaments to public lavatories in quadruplicate has been cast off.

What comes in its place is less certain. The basic idea is to construct a confederation, apparently quite a loose one, of regional political entities bound together in a single economy. There will be a single South African citizenship, but a variety of nationalities.

Coloured people and Indians are to be represented in Parliament (oh, how Verwoerd must turn in his grave!) but elected (as a sop to a failed past) on separate voters' rolls.

Though Beeld did not spell it out, the solution to the vexed question of accomodating urban blacks is to be sought in a radical devolution of power to local and regional authorities. Meanwhile, social and economic apartheid is to be eliminated, or at least softened, by the repeal of Jim Crow legislation.

These are the thoughts which the National Party seems ready to bring to the process of negotiation which is soon to start in the President's Council.

The trouble is that the Government continues to act as though it fears its own followers, furtively. Its plans are disclosed in leaks and whispers. It is impossible to tell fundamental principle from negotiable detail.

The time has come for Mr P.W. Botha to step into the open and tell the country exactly what he has in mind: What regions will constitute the confederation, what powers will be reserved for the central Government, what rights will attach to citizenship, and so forth.

Until he does so, he has no hope of winning acceptance for his ideas among blacks, and no hope of building the national consensus, without which all reform becomes a vain exercise in delaying the inevitable.

For, until he does so, nobody will believe that the dominant ideas in the National Party are not those still espoused by Dr Andries Treurnicht and other devotees of Dr Verwoerd.

To throw the ideas of Dr Verwoerd overboard is one thing; to throw his obdurate followers overboard is quite another. Yet Mr Botha must do it if his President's Council is not to fall into deadlock and die of frustration.

'MUSLIM NEWS' Comment

Capetown MUSLIM NEWS in English 19 Sep 80 p 20

[Editorial: "President's Council"]

[Text]

The brothers of a nominee to the President's Council have labelled him a 'sell-out'. This is understandable. Indeed Blacks in this country are vehemently opposed to this latest ploy by the ruling class to perpetuate its domination of the majority in this country.

The ruling class is not prepared to offer a meaningful basis for all the citizens of this country to participate directly in the decision-making process because that would mean an end to a minority's unjust privileges.

That some of those from the oppressed majority have accepted the President's Council should expose them for what they are. Sell-outs, interested only in selfishly gaining privileges for themselves. Surely they cannot be so naive as to believe that this carrot being dangled before them fully satisfies the aspirations of those seeking a just society in this country.

Some of those who have been nominated are 'Muslims'. To them we want to point out what the Holy Qur'an, which is supposed to be their guide, has to say about collaborators:

'And whoever recommends and helps an evil cause, shares in its burden.' (5: 103)

This is reiterated by the Holy Prophet:

'Whoever walks with an oppressor in order to strengthen him is one of the oppressors'

A clear message to all collaborators!

It must be pointed out also that we are not impressed by the Coloured Labour Party, which has also rejected the President's Council. As a Black student body put it in a statement to Muslim News: the party's 'creation took place in the womb of apartheid.' The only way the Labour Party can redeem itself is to completely shed its racist stand, a stand which divides our people.

Editor De Klerk Comment

Capetown THE CAPE TIMES in English 30 Sep 80 p 9

[Text]

THE possibility of blacks being included in the President's Council should not be ruled out completely, particularly as the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, was rumoured to be holding a "summit meeting" with black leaders soon, according to Dr Willem de Klerk, editor of the Transvaler.

Dr De Klerk, who turned down an invitation to serve on the council because of the Perskor circulation scandal, expressed these views in his regular column in Rapport on Sunday.

Dr De Klerk paid tribute to the two years of Mr Botha's premiership and said that the Prime Minister had not only achieved an atmosphere of "tolerance" in politics, but had been the instigator of a new political milieu.

Wrongly propaganda is being dispersed that the black man has been excluded from the President's Council. Apart from the effort to set up a black council, and apart from possible black participation in subcommittees of the council, Mr Botha is aparently about to hold a summit meeting with black leaders," said Dr De Klerk.

Questioning whether the Prime Minister has been a successful leader, Dr De Klerk said Afrikaners needed to pose three questions to Mr Botha:

- Have the political cul de sacs been obliterated?
- Is the pace of development satisfactory?
- Are we striving towards clear political targets?

Dr de Klerk said the the answer to these was an overwhelming "yes" — with a "no" in places.

Deadlock situations untangled

To a large extent, Mr Botha has led us temporarily from a checkmate position.

Many deadlock situations have been untangled. The civil service, the crippling aftermath of the Info scandal, the consututional deliberations, the dilemma of consolidation. — these are all examples of cul de sacs which the Prime Minister has opened up.

The answer to the second question — is the pace of development lively — is yes — so lively that some nappers have been caught short of breath.

What about political targets? It's there for everyone to see. A confederation of states and national governments, a collective economy coupled with regional development, a new constitution which heralds a new political dispensation for whites, coloureds and Asians, a large push away from discrimination — these are just a few examples. Add to that the right of people to have a say in their own affairs.

Its fair to admit that there are still questions left about the constitutional proposals and the full consequences of political participation, on the political rights of urban blacks, on the joint body in the confederation.

Dr de Klerk described the Prime Minister as an exponent of direction and precursor of an ultimate goal.

AFRIKAANS PAPERS GREET MAFIKENG TRANSFER

'BEELD' Comment

Pretoria SOUTH AFRICAN DIGEST in English 26 Sep 80 p 23

[Translation of 20 September BEELD editorial titled: "New Mafikeng"]

[Text] Justly, the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, said yesterday the transfer of Mafikeng to the independent state of Bophuthatswana was the start of a new era in interstate relations. The Premier based this approach on the point of view that the case of Mafikeng would in future be a moral indictment against conflict and combat to solve international disputes.

Mr Botha's host, President Lucas Mangope of Bophuthatswana, answered that the incorporation of Mafikeng was the strongest justification for his decision to accept independence.

In the new political arrangement between South Africa and Bophuthatswana, the case of Mafikeng is indeed a great moral lesson. Those who spurn Dr Verwoerd's concept of independent homelands can safely take note of it. It is that no political brainpower has as yet supplied a better answer (and it is only a partial answer) to our dilemma of competition between conflicting nationalities in one territory.

The line of least resistance is the Prog way, merely to believe that natural increase and modernisation will result in the escalating expulsion of Whites by Blacks. It is a fatal miscalculation, because surrounding the metropolitan complexes of a Soweto and a Mamelodi are indeed still strong ethnic ties among Black rank. The question is undoubtedly — who will deny the existence of a Tswana nation and that it deserves its own base?

This process, the political terms of which were initiated by Dr Verwoerd, has been rapidly adapted by Mr Botha's Cabinet to suit changed circumstances. The emphasis is now on participation, partnership and co-operation, not merely between black or white, but among the many greys in between.

Concepts as old as our politics are again being called to mind, for example with relation to the political home of Coloureds. That is why Beeld, on the basis of the best informed Government sources, yesterday made it known that this question will indeed be on the agenda of the multiracial President's Council and, by implication that if it must be, the NP leaders will be willing to place Coloureds in Parliament, with reservations.

Mafikeng is an example of adaptation to changed circumstances. It is different from Umtata in Transkei. Mafikeng is a gesture of partnership and there is in the new arrangement the assurance that in future White expertise and knowledge will contribute fully to the prosperity of Bophuthatswana. We as a Southern African multiple of communities will only thrive if the Mafikeng model is applied plurally.

May the people of Mafikeng and Bophuthatswana prosper in the new framework.

'DIE VADERLAND' Comment

Pretoria SOUTH AFRICAN DIGEST in English 26 Sep 80 p 23

[Translation of DIE VADERLAND 22 September editorial titled: "Mafeking and Table Mountain"]

[Text]

On Friday the White town of Mafeking was handed over to the Black state of Bophuthatswana.

There is every indication that the Whites are accepting the change in a good spirit. This must be ascribed to the particular arrangements which were made in this case.

The Mangope Government did not try to absorb the Whites but did their best to enable the Whites to retain their own schools and in general to cause as little change as possible in their established pattern of living. Hence the acceptance of the change — plus, of course, the fact that South Africa is just across the border. This brings security and a back door in case things should take a negative turn.

Therein is a lesson for all who wish to form a constitution. That is, namely, that the Whites won't accept a change in their situation that leaves them no back door.

Unlike Rhodesia and South West and Mafeking, there is nothing behind our backs except Table Mountain.

This is a fundamental difference and has its effect on the whole psyche. Willingness to change, however enlightened this may be in insistence and openess with which it is required, does not, by a long chalk, include relinquishing the right to decide what is one's own.

Anyone underestimating this determination is making a fundamental mistake. This should rather be seen by all sides as immutable and adaptations from the other side must be made to accommodate this.

COMMENT ON CISKEI ACCEPTANCE OF INDEPENDENCE IDEA

'RAND DAILY MAIL' Comment

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 2 Oct 80 p 12

[Editorial: "Grotesque Decision on the Ciskei"]

[Text] THERE are several ways of responding to the announcement that Ciskei has accepted the notion of "independence".

First, for true South Africans, there must be bitter regret that another step on the road to dismembering our country is being taken. Transkei, BophuthaTswana, Venda . . . and now Ciskei.

There could be little reason for complaint if the balkanisation were being carried out as the popularly agreed, and only, means of ensuring racial peace. But this is not so. It is, instead, the infliction on South Africa of racist separate development by the ruling minority group, acting with the connivance of some blacks whose motivations can only be guessed at.

Second, there must be astonishment that Ciskei's Chief Lennox Sebe is going ahead a mere eight months after his own Quail Commission, after a 14-month, R160 000 investigation, rejected independence as being contrary to the interests of the people of that territory and strongly against their wishes. From what is known, it is unlikely that the situation has changed materially since then. There is no indication that Chief Sebe has made any headway on the most fundamental issue of all: continued South African citizenship for Ciskeians. In place of this, this week's announcement about the current state of negotiations with Pretoria refers merely to agreement that no Ciskeians living and working in the Republic "would be removed to the Ciskei except after consultation between the governments".

The best sweetener that Chief Sebe can aspire to for this mess of pottage is the still-vague idea with which the Nationalists are said to be toying of some kind of lesser "Southern African" citizenship for the Bantustans.

And what of the pre-independence "carefully supervised referendum" posited by the Quail Commission?

Third, there must also be amazement, on purely economic grounds, that the Ciskei can remotely contemplate what is called independence. Here is a small area with a population of 680 000 people; much of the land is eroded and is over-stocked with people and animals; employment opportunities are derisory, except in South Africa itself, of which the territory is an integral part.

In the face of these known facts, it seems Chief Sebe is willing to lend Ciskei as a vehicle for the latest of Pretoria's desperate attempts to make its ideology work.

Taken together, it must be concluded that whatever is planned for the Ciskei is a travesty of independence and progress. It does not even accord with the Nationalists' own ethnic postulations which, if logically applied, would require the Xhosas of the Ciskei to be put together with the Xhosas of Transkei, getting rid in the process of the narrow "white" corridor which divides them.

The pity of it is that Chief Sebe and those around him are being suckered into this alleged independence. They are doing massive disservice to Ciskeians as much as to South Africa as a whole.

Johannesburg 'POST' Comment

Johannesburg POST in English 2 Oct 80 p 6

[Editorial: "Bells Are Tolling for All Xhosas"]

[Text]

THE bells are beginning to toll for all Xhosas in South Africa.

The Transkei was the first black homeland to go independent, now the Ciskei is following suit. This means Xhosas are all likely to lose their South African citizenship with the spectre of settling in a non-viable, or be part of a non-viable, unstable state with no international recognition and very little joy.

What has happened in the Transkei since 1976 when it gained independence is now history - a history that most blacks would simply like to forget.

Chief Lennox Sebe's announcement that his state is going independent soon was not too unexpected, but the shock for most of us is still shattering.

There had been flickers of hope from the Ciskei when they put up the Quail Commission to look into the future political status of that homeland. The fact that the Commission was part funded by the Ciskei gave hope that Chief Sebe was seeking out alternatives.

Our oft repeated argument that those who have become part of homeland politics will be dragged into this phony kind of independence is becoming increasingly valid.

Chief Gatsha Buthelezi despite all his fulminations that he would never go for independence should keep out a sharp eye.

Very soon the inevitable will happen to Kwa-Zulu, because these mini-states are tied, and can easily be strangled by Pretoria if they refuse to play ball.

Chief Sebe is going the way of all homeland leaders and what is totally irksome is the fact that one presumes part of the pressure is purely in the form of carrots rather than the stick. Because other homeland states that have gone independent have had certain perks added to the lives of a middle-class or even just a coterie of those at the top in those states, it seems easy to lure other leaders to jump onto the band-wagon.

KOORNHOF, VAN DER WALT DISCUSS HOMELANDS CONSOLIDATION

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 1 Oct 80 p 13

[Text]

PORT ELIZABETH — The memorandum on the consolidation of homelands has been finalised and is waiting on the Cabinet's table, Dr Koornhof, Minister of Co-operation and Development, said today.

Announcements on consolidation would be made soon and would be in line with decisions taken by the Cabinet.

The whole process of homeland consolidation from land valuation to the purchase of farms would be speeded up and implemented as quickly as possible, he told the Cape Natonal Party Congress.

The Cabinet and the National Party realised how emotional a thing consolidation was, Dr Koornhof said, and for this reason had placed top priority on the issue.

The chairman of the consolidation committee, Mr Hennie van der Walt, told the congress the price of land has increased to such an extent that the latest estimate of the cost of consolidation had had to be increased by 42 percent.

If consolidation was not successful, "if we cannot bring the black people to at least a level where we can argue with them as equals, it will become more difficult for the National Party to continue on the road ahead," he said.

While the government could not dictate what should happen to land consolidated under the 1936 land act proposals, any additional land could carry certain provisos.

STRATEGY

His committee has recommended to the Cabinet a specific mineral strategy for the whole of South Africa, Mr van der Walt said. The time had come when people should forget the idea that a white South Africa could get along without white or that black states could get along without white expertise.

"We cannot consolidate without making a sacrifice. We must accept this. Our hourglass is running out fast," he said.

Van der Walt Statement

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 2 Oct 80 p 9

[Text]

PORT ELIZABETH. — It would have to be accepted that it would be impossible to achieve meaningful consolidation in terms of the 1936 Land Act quotas, the chairman of the Commission of Inquiry into Consolidation, Mr Hennie van der Walt, said in Port Elizabeth yesterday.

Speaking at the Cape National Party congress, Mr Van der Walt said White South Africans would simply have to accept that in order to achieve meaningful consolidation, sacrifices would have to be made.

He said the report of the commission was still being studied by the Cabinet and he could therefore not reveal what was contained in it. There were, however, a number of matters that would have to be noted.

Radical

Radical thought would have to be given to the economic development of the national states. The present rate of development gave little cause for satisfaction and the need for expanded development was "very, very great indeed."

New thought would have to be given to the "numbers game." It would have to be accepted that it was simply not known how many Blacks there were in South Africa. The fact of the matter was there were far more Blacks than statistics showed.

In the next 20 years the Black population would grow to about 84-million. This would mean the creation of one Soweto a year to accommodate them.

Mr Van der Walt said it would also have to be accepted that White South Africans could not get along without Blacks, nor could Blacks get along without Whites. While consolidation was an emotional issue, it was of prime importance to future relations between Blacks and Whites.

"We must simply accept that if we don't succeed in getting the national states to the point where we can talk to them as equals, our policy will have failed," he said.

The equitable distribution of the country's mineral wealth would have to be carefully considered. The commission had made recommendations in this regard.

The commission had also devoted considerable time to the question of border farmers and had made special recommendations in this respect.

Mr Van der Walt said the commission was "not excited" about the present financial arrangements regarding compensation.

Escalating

It was not possible to set aside specific amounts for consolidation because of escalating costs.

Since the commission had reported on August 6 this year, the price of land had increased by 42 percent. The amount of money the commission considered necessary to achieve proper consolidation had increased by R650-million in three months, he said. — Sapa.

KOORNHOF DISCUSSES ISSUE OF FUNDS TO SABRA

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 9 Oct 80 p 1

[Article by Johan Kloppers]

[Text] The Minister of Co-operation and Development, Dr Piet Koornhof, yesterday announced an intensive investigation regarding contributions made by Government and non-Government organisations to the South African Bureau of Racial Affairs (Sabra).

He also announced two Government decisions regarding the matter:

--That all funds available to administration boards should be applied to improve the interests of Blacks.

--That the matter of contributions made to Sabra "will be discussed between the administration boards, Sabra and myself."

According to reports, an investigation into financial controls on expenditure by administration boards revealed that their donations to Sabra were approved at Government level.

Allowed

"The Urban Areas Act allows the boards to use the Black revenue account for donations on condition they are approved by the Minister concerned."

According to the Urban Areas Act, the Minister is empowered to approve donations from the Black revenue account.

Among other income sources, revenue deposited in this account includes rents collected from township residents.

But officials have denied that income thus earned has been used for donations to Sabra.

They say it would serve no purpose using rentals which were already subsidised for the purpose of making donations.

The chairman of the West Rand Administration Board reportedly said that no income derived from the Black townships--by way of house rentals, shop rentals or beer or liquor sales--had been or would be used for donations of a kind made by administration boards to Sabra.

Profits

It was further reported that besides proceeds from rents, the Black revenue account--source of the donations--includes beer and liquor profits, proceeds from fines, licences and employers' contributions.

It was also stated that, in terms of Section 19 (2) (c) of the Urban Areas Act, the Black revenue account may be charged with "any service, expenditure or grant which may be certified in writing by the Minister as being in the interest of Blacks, irrespective of whether or not it relates to a matter in the area of the urban local authority."

The report stated: "The motivation given by board officials for making donations to Sabra is that the organisation has undertaken research into Black affairs which was of value to the boards."

BROEDERBOND LEADER BOSHOFF OPPOSES COMMON ECONOMY IDEA

[Text] The new leader of the Broederbond, Professor Carel Boshoff, today repudiated the principle of a common economy for South Africa.

This brings him into direct conflict with the Prime Minister, Mr P.W. Botha, who this month announced his plan for a common economy and shared economic development on a regional basis.

Professor Boshoff was speaking at the opening in Pretoria of the congress of the South African Bureau for Racial Affairs (Sabra) of which he is chairman.

"To try, for example, to segregate on the cultural level and to integrate on the economic level by physical means, is like moving forward with the one foot, and backwards with the other," he said.

Professor Boshoff described a system of "economic integration in a system of separate political sovereignties" as a "false doctrine."

His speech followed a strong right-wing pattern and he pleaded the cause of a white fatherland with a majority of whites--a project to which Sabra is committed.

Professor Boshoff said that when different nationalities lived in the same country mixing was unavoidable.

In such state it was inevitable that whites would disappear as they were outnumbered.

Black rights had increased over the years. "The next logical step would be claim full freedom of movement, full ground ownership and voting rights," he said.

Some blacks already had positions of control over whites in the white economy, shared in the same pension schemes and privileges as whites, and could belong to the same trade unions.

"These developments have far-reaching implications for white self-determination," he said.

It was evident that blacks would use their economic and political power base in the "white country" to promote further integration until they obtained full citizenship and political power.

He said that the envisaged constellation of states would not reduce outside pressure against South Africa.

Professor Boshoff rejected any possibility that culture could be retained in an integrated community in which the white man would be in the minority.

SPLINTER BLACK UNION GAINING STRENGTH IN PORT ELIZABETH

Capetown THE CAPE TIMES in English 29 Sep 80 p 10

[Text]

JOHANNESBURG — Two unregistered trade union groupings, both of which have split away from the Black Allied Workers Union (Bawu) — a general union which backs the black consciousness movement — have joined forces.

In a statement at the weekend, they called on all union groupings to meet next April for a labour "national convention" to resolve their differences.

Two branches of the Bawu, in Durban and Empangeni, broke away from the union to form the National Federation of Black Workers (NFBW). Their decision followed a dispute between the Bawu leadership and two union officials, Mr M Oliphant and Mr A Maphalala.

They announced at the weekend that they had decided to throw in their lot with the South African Allied Workers Union, which was itself formed from a split in Bawu ranks. Their members will now become SAAWU members.

Dramatic growth in East London

SAAWU has been attracting attention from labour observers because its East London branch has shown a dramatic increase in support in recent months. East london has become a key centre of black worker activity and some independent sources believe that SAAWU has members in virtually all the factories in the area.

Leaders of the NFBW have claimed that virtually the whole of BAWU's Durban and Empangeni branches have left to join them.

Bawu spokesmen claim that few workers have supported the latest split and that the union continues to enjoy worker support, particularly in the Newcastle and Ladysmith areas.

In a statement at the weekend SAAWU said that it was committed to non-racial trade unionism and was "totally opposed" to registering under the government's new labour dispensation. It labelled the Bawu leadership "stooges" and accused the union of being "racist" because it was open to blacks only.

SAAWU also announced that it would attempt to convene a meeting of all trade union groups in April.

It is not clear, however, whether this attempt to bring warring groups in the labour movement together will succeed. Divisions between rival union bodies run deep and are unlikely to be reconciled easily.

An attempt by SAAWU to involve other groupings in a meeting in Durban late last year had no response.

TUCSA CONFERENCE CRITICIZES SOME UNIONS FOR STRIKE POLICY

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 29 Sep 80 p 17

[Article by Sieg Hannig]

[Text]

No instant solutions to the recent run of "new era" strikes were offered at last week's annual conference of the 283 000-strong Trade Union Council of South Africa.

On the contrary, the conference showed that Tucsa was at war with the very organisations that have given employers the worst headaches.

One speaker described it as a total war among black trade unions. Another said the division was one between responsible and irresponsible trade unionism.

Specific allegations that pinpointed some of the ideological differences were:

● Unions that resorted to strike action as a weapon of first recourse instead of as a last resort.

● Black workers' bodies dominated by white students and academics.

● Unions that did not confine themselves to any industry or sought to represent workers in industries in which they had no previous interest.

● Unions that claimed to be independent but belonged to bodies that allowed little independence to member unions and had a foreign "paymaster."

● The "strange motives" of a union that did not seek recognition for itself from employers or the Government.

Several speakers pointed out that the workers were the losers in the union conflict which was giving the whole labour movement a bad name and which played into the hands of the employers.

They won acceptance of a resolution calling for efforts to settle these differences. But no one seemed to have any real hope that this could be done.

It was clear that many Tucsa unions shared the employers' hostility towards the groups on the other side of the fence.

The conference gave no impression of sharing what the British Trades Union Congress (TUC) called "concern about the recent wave of repression against independent trade union organisations of black workers."

Indeed it ignored the TUC's call that the conference should address itself urgently to this problem.

Far from feeling repressed, Tucsa's black and non-racial unions expressed satisfaction with their newly found rights and liberties.

Clearly they did not identify with the policies and tactics of those unions that suffered from the "wave of repression."

It wasn't that Tucsa had abandoned any of the old principles on which it was founded and for which it incurred the wrath of the Government in past years.

Yet there was no doubt that Tucsa had achieved respectability in the eyes of the authorities and the establishment.

The conference reiterated previous calls for a national minimum wage and for a national contributory pension scheme with somewhat less vigour than before. There was even some opposition.

Some observers will call this a sign of realism that is sure to win Tucsa new members from the white labour movement.

Others will say that the true relevance of a trade union federation in South Africa at this stage depends on its growth in black membership.

The question is whether Tucsa unions, will be able to enrol and retain more black members than unions outside Tucsa.

The answer could well depend on whether black workers find it profitable to belong to unions that are prepared to work within tried structures.

At this stage it is not clear how many will join less patient unions which resort to unorthodox methods to overcome the inequities inherited from a generation of apartheid.

BUTHELEZI CRITICIZES BLACK CONSCIOUSNESS MOVEMENT

Johannesburg POST in English 29 Sep 80 p 1

[Article by Charlie Mogale]

[Text]

KWAZULU leader Chief Gatsha Buthelezi yesterday launched an attack on the black consciousness movement and the black journalists' organisation, Writers' Association of South Africa (Wasa).

He accused the black consciousness movement of manipulating Wasa, which in turn he said manipulated POST's sister paper, Sunday Post, to print a vitriol and "concerted attacks on me".

Chief Buthelezi, who spoke of "the so-called black newspapers" and "the so-called black consciousness movement", was addressing a crowd of about 1000 people at the Shaka Day celebrations at the George Thabe Stadium in Sharpeville

RAIN

The audience dwindled to about 300 when heavy rain started pouring during Chief Buthelezi's speech.

"When Wasa was formed, some of us saw in it a union of black journalists, and there was absolutely nothing wrong with that. But now they have started attacking me under the guise of being a black organisation," he said.

Week after week Sunday Post was publishing articles attacking me.

"It is no longer a question of fair criticism.

"They promoted a Wasa vendetta against me — on behalf of the so-called black consciousness movement.

"I have had more than my fair share of character assassination, particularly in certain newspapers which claim to be black newspapers merely because black journalists working on them are black."

To occasional calls of "Shenge!" Chief Buthelezi called for the end of in-fighting among black leaders in South Africa.

POLITICS

"Today we have people who are not satisfied with just having differences, but who will not hesitate to literally kill those who have differences of opinion with them in black politics. I have been at the receiving end of this grouping for quite some time now.

"They use character assassination and they reserve the worst vitriol in their utterances and writings for other blacks with whom they have political differences. They have even tried to assassinate me," Chief Buthelezi said.

Disunity among black leaders was entrenching apartheid and making it easier for whites to "laugh all the way to the bank when blacks don't get a fair share" of the country's wealth.

SOWETO RENT INCREASE CALLED SERIOUS PROBLEM

Johannesburg POST in English 29 Sep 80 p 2

[Text]

THREE branches of the Soweto Civic Association held meetings in Soweto yesterday, and it was the inauguration meeting for one of the three.

In Klipspruit, Dr Nthato Motlana, chairman of the SCA, said at the Pimville Anglican Church people should refuse to pay higher rents.

The 18th branch of the association in Klipspruit area was founded at the meeting.

Dr Motlana said: "Some people say we shouldn't bother ourselves over civic matters as there is no liberation through civic matters. Every journey begins with the first step. We have to start somewhere.

"Presently we are living in Soweto just because somebody has decided for us. We travel in crowded trains, live in four-roomed houses and our children can't decide which schools they want to attend. These are the basic needs of every human being, the right to decide on one's own."

The meeting resolved not to conduct elections, but to let the people who organised the meeting to act as an interim committee until all residents could be called to another meeting which would be held next week at the same venue.

Political slogans and "freedom" songs dominated the Jabulani Civic Association meeting at the Bridgeman Memorial Church Centre yesterday.

More than 150 residents resolved:

- Not to pay the increased rents;
- To walk if Putco increases the fares and
- To support the Soweto Civic Association in its fight against rent increases.

Mrs Ellen Khuzwayo, a member of the Committee of Ten, said blacks were living in a difficult time which needed unity of all the masses. She added that the rent issue was the most serious problem.

She urged residents to report to the branches of the Soweto Civic Association whenever they were evicted or threatened with eviction. Blacks could not afford to pay higher rents because they were still underpaid.

"Whatever happens, you should not pay the increased rents," she said.

Mr Leonard Mosala also of the Committee of Ten, told the meeting that the rent battle would determine the future of Soweto people. They should unite to win it. Residents should free themselves from bondage.

"Our battle is a total and final liberation of the black man. People in other country had to unite in order to win their struggle against oppression. I appeal to all residents to join the civic associations," said Mr Mosala.

Black people in Zimbabwe proved to the world that they were ready for independence, said Dr Motlana at another meeting yesterday.

Speaking at the Orlando East Catholic Church: "Nobody will get his paradise with his arms folded," he said. "You will have to work for it.

"The day you forget there are Zulus, Xhosas, Vendas and other tribal groups, you have taken the right step to liberation," he said.

WAGES OF RACIAL GROUPS COMPARED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 3 Oct 80 p 9

[Article by Lynn Carlisle]

[Text]

THE wage gap between Black and White earnings is still closing while salaries and wages increased an average of 14,5 percent for all race groups in the 12 months preceeding June.

This situation affects 1 411 200 workers in the manufacturing sector where average earnings for Blacks increased 16 percent, Coloureds 17 and Asians 19 percent, the intelligence and research unit of the SA Federated Chamber of Industries has disclosed.

Although the rate of increase in average earnings for Whites was "somewhat lower", actual average earnings — which do not take account of the different skill structures for the various racial groups — were: Whites (R895), Asians (R281), Coloureds (R240) and Blacks (R208).

Unemployed

"The number of manufacturing employees has also risen 4,4 percent in this 12-month period," the FCI said.

During June, 5,1-million Blacks were actively engaged in South Africa with a further 479 000 considered as unemployed. Black males made up 71 percent of the employed while more than half the unemployed were Black women, the FCI said.

Meanwhile 3 889 683 Blacks paid tax on their income and R85 616 522 was collected from them in 1978/79.

The preliminary figures in the 1979/80 financial year shows a drop to R74 409 893 in tax collected.

HNP LEADER DENIES MERGER PLANNED WITH MULDER PARTY

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 9 Oct 80 p 3

[Article by Keith Abendroth]

[Text] MR JAAP MARAIS, national leader of the Herstigte Nasionale Party, yesterday dismissed as "pure speculation" that his party and Dr Connie Mulder's National Conservative Party might join forces. But there was a strong likelihood that the two parties would negotiate an election agreement or partnership if the Prime Minister were to go to the country.

"Talk about us joing forces or forming some sort of coalition is far-fetched," he told The Citizen yesterday. "Even if we settled for an election agreement that is all it would be — certainly not 'coalition' or 'full partnership' because these would demand dialogue and negotiation on policy".

However 'chats' were definitely taking place on an unofficial basis between members of the two parties — and members of each party were often seen at meetings of the other party.

"There is a great deal of goodwill between Dr Mulder's members and ours. I have always made it clear that anybody can join the HNP if he subscribes to our principles, and that offer includes Dr Mulder".

But there had been no discussions, dialogue, suggested agreements or partnership agreement negotiated or achieved between the two parties.

Comment on NP Direction

Capetown THE CAPE TIMES in English 27 Sep 80 p 2

[Article by Michael Acott]

[Text] PRETORIA. — The Herstigte Nasionale Party leader, Mr Jaap Marais, predicted yesterday that the National Party would disintegrate because it had lost its basis as the guardian of Afrikaner nationalism.

Speaking after his unanimous re-election as leader at the HNP congress, he said that the HNP would restore South Africa's heritage as a "white man's country".

The unprecedented growth of the HNP this year was an indication that it was on the way to winning parliamentary seats and eventually taking over the government.

"The National Party is no longer a political party. It is a coalition of irreconcilable elements: it must fall apart," he said.

People were deserting the National Party and the Broederbond in increasing numbers and flowing to the HNP, which stood not merely for white survival but for white victory.

Referring to previous Afrikaner division, he said the battle today was over who truly represented Afrikaner interest.

'A mockery of what nationalism should be'

"The National Party today is a mockery of what Nationalism should be. The HNP has shown it is the voice of true Afrikanerdom. Liberals in the government must realize that they will soon be hit by the force of Afrikaner nationalism. The HNP is the seat of the faith and conviction of the white man.

South Africa needed a government which was not afraid to say 'no' and which would not be blackmailed by violence and unrest. An HNP administration would maintain authority and law and order, even if it sometimes had to use force.

He urged all HNP branches to go onto an election footing in preparation for the coming mini-election and the possibility of a general election next year.

Mr Marais opened the congress the previous evening by accusing the government of selling out the white man and abandoning the principal which brought the Afrikaner to power in 1948. Increasing forced integration — some of it pioneered by the Defence Force — would result in shared political rights and the end of white decision-making over white affairs.

The multiracial President's Council was nothing less than the Progressive Federal Party's proposed national convention in permanent sitting.

Instead of fighting an 80 percent political war against those threatening the country, there should be a switch to an 80 percent military war and a massive decisive strike against terrorist bases. That was the language the enemy understood, and it would show local black agitators "who his boss in this white man's country", he said.

Women Draft Proposal

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 26 Sep 80 p 3

[Text] General Magnus Malan, who becomes Minister of Defence next month, is planning national service for white girls born after 1965, Mr Jaap Marais, leader of the Herstigte Nasionale Party said last night.

Mr Marais was addressing a rally attended by about 1 000 people at the start of the HNP congress in Pretoria North.

He challenged General Malan, who is currently chief of the Defence Force, to deny that such a national service scheme was being envisaged.

Mr Marais said this would mean that white girls would serve under blacks as the defence force insisted all people serve on an equal basis.

He asked what sanitary conditions would prevail in the operational area with white girls, black men and white men serving there.

"The awareness among whites that they are being sold out is becoming stronger and stronger," he said.

"The HNP is an army on the political level waging a campaign so we can get rid of the government which stands between us and the enemy, and so we can talk to the enemy in the language he understands."

He said there must be a military victory over black enemies.

"Then the black agitators in South Africa will know who is baas in white man's country." [as printed]

A spokesman for the Defence Force today said "As far as is known, Mr Marais has never been involved in the planning and execution of Defence Force policy. It is not clear on what grounds he based his fictitious statements about women being drawn into national service."

POPULATION STATISTICS SHOW BLACK GROWTH IN NATIONAL STATES

Statistics Secretary's Announcement

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 12 Sep 80 p 2

[Article by Keith Abendroth]

[Text]

THE long-awaited turnabout in Black population growth — switching in emphasis from White urban areas to the Black homelands — appears to be well under way.

But at the same time South Africa's White population growth rate lags behind that of other race groups, according to the Secretary of Statistics, Dr Tjaart du Plessis.

Addressing the Pretoria Press Club yesterday, he disclosed aspects of the 1980 population census, saying that one feature was that the population of the Black national states had increased by 59 percent in the last 10 years.

The country's overall population increased by 27 percent between 1970 and 1980 and now stands at 23 771 970, compared with 18 651 000 in 1970.

The census found a major shift of Blacks away from White areas to the Black national states.

The number of Blacks in White areas increased by only 13 percent in the decade.

The White population increased by 18 percent; the Coloured by 25 percent; the Indian by 28 percent — and the Black by 31 percent.

The Black population is growing fastest in the Transvaal and Soweto's population stands at 864 000.

'THE CAPE TIMES' Comment

Capetown DIE BURGER in English 16 Sep 80 p 5

[Reprint of 'THE CAPE TIMES' editorial: "What the Census Means"]

[Text] The full census figures for 1980 have not yet been released. But enough are contained in the first report to show that the population ratio between white and black continues to widen. This is not only because whites were fewer in the first place, but because their growth rate, at 1.7 percent a year, is lower than all other population groups. The total population figure for all groups is, however, misleading. Given to the nearest round figure at 23.8m, it does not reflect the populations of Transkei, Bophuthatswana and Venda, all of which became independent since the last national census in 1970. The 1970 figure, which included the resident populations of these three states, was 21.4m. This means that the population has not only increased considerably in the last 10 years in spite of the excision of three large areas from South Africa, but that the true rate of growth is, in fact, much greater. The 21.4m of 1970 must be approaching close to 30m in 1980 and may well top 50m by the turn of the century.

Much is being made of the fact that the populations of the homelands have increased by 59 percent since 1970 while the number of blacks in so-called white areas has risen by only 13 percent in the period. This is cited as evidence of a major shift of blacks from white areas to the homelands. In fact, the percentage increase in the homelands has dropped. Between 1960 and 1970 it was 68.7 percent. Admittedly it has also dropped in the white areas where, in the 1960-70 period, it was 16.8 percent. But the high percentage increase in the homelands does not necessarily mean that blacks are flooding back from white cities. It is indicative, more probably, of children born to the wives of city breadwinners who visit their families once a year. It should also be remembered that while the percentage increase of blacks in so-called white areas in comparatively low, even a 13 percent increase means there are over a million more blacks in these white areas than there were 10 years ago.

In view of South Africa's constitutional developments, it is interesting that the whites' population increase from 3.8m in 1970 to 4.4m in 1980 has almost enabled them to maintain their majority, in numerical terms, over the combined coloured and Indian totals. It was 1.2m 10 years ago when coloured and Indian amounted to 2.8m and it is about 1.1m today, when the coloured-Indian groups total 3.3m. But because of the much higher coloured and Indian growth rates, the whites' percentage of the three major population groups represented on the President's Council has dropped substantially. If present growth rates are maintained, that white majority will eventually be overtaken.

CHILEAN VISITOR SEES CONSIDERABLE POTENTIAL FOR TRADE

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 2 Oct 80 pp 16, 17

["Profile" column by John Mulcahy"]

[Text]

"CHILE and South Africa have several similarities in their economies, that make it very attractive for them to exchange experience, exclusive of technology and equipment."

Mario Rodrigues, a member of the Chilean trade delegation in South Africa at the moment, believes the most relevant similarities are:

- They are both aggressive and dynamic economies, based mainly on the development of efficient private enterprise. "By efficient enterprise I mean companies able to make goods at competitive prices by international standards, of good quality and with the appropriate technology,
- Both countries have strong mining sectors with a constant need for new equipment and technology;
- A shortage of oil resources, compelling both countries to look for alternative sources of energy — on this point Mr Rodrigues says Chile is looking very closely at coal-based power, both for thermal electrical units and for liquid fuel uses;
- Large coal reserves which, considering present and future oil prices and reserves, are very attractive as alternative energy sources — in the form of electricity and hydrocarbons.

Mr Rodrigues has a Bachelor of Science degree from Concepcion University in Santiago, and a Master's from the University of Minnesota, and during his career with a major engineering company, Davey McKee, has visited around 30 countries.

Mr Rodrigues is undoubtedly enraptured with his visit to South Africa and feels the two countries can only benefit from an exchange of ideas in all of the related fields.

"In the case of Chile, with a less developed industrial sector, there are excellent possibilities for the import of machinery and equipment from South Africa".

Although his home language is Spanish, Mr Rodrigues has an excellent command of English, which is hardly surprising in view of the four years he spent in Washington on secondment to the World Bank. He worked in Washington as an engineer with the World Bank's International Finance Corporation.

Trade potential

On Chile's trade potential Mr Rodrigues says the country is prepared to purchase equipment from any country, provided it is of the right quality, technology and price.

He adds that the booming South American country is not interested in developing or implementing industrial plants to produce equipment inefficiently. "In other words, if we can import a machine at a lower price, with acceptable quality and technology, we will import it."

Mr Rodrigues is blatantly enthusiastic about Chile's prospects and expects the country's economy to continue growing, "... and may even increase its growth rate." He says that one of the major goals is to steer Chile towards becoming a developed country.

Mr Rodrigues says Chile will continue developing the economic sectors in, which it is efficient, or where development is basic for other sectors.

Main sectors

The main sectors are: mining, including copper, iron ore, coal and cement; agriculture, including pulp and paper, wheat, wood, cattle farming and fruit; fishing, including processing and canning of fish, and power generation, from both hydraulic and thermal origin.

In conclusion Mr Rodrigues says the technology the group has seen in South Africa appears very well suited to developing countries, in the sense that it is simple and intended for operators with low skills.

"This makes the South African equipment and know-how very attractive to us and, in some cases, more agreeable than the technology we can purchase from the most developed countries."

SADF OFFICIALS DECLINE TO CONFIRM STRATEGIC INSTITUTE FIGURES

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 6 Oct 80 p 4

[Text]

CAPE TOWN. — South Africa has acquired large numbers of new heavy weapons — including tanks, helicopters, self-propelled medium artillery and strike craft — despite the virtually world-wide arms boycott.

This was revealed in the latest edition of an authoritative handbook, "The Military Balance 1980/1".

The book, published annually by the London-based International Institute for Strategic Studies (IISS), credits South Africa with the acquisition of new weapons and increased numbers of others already in service.

However, Defence Force spokesmen yesterday would not be drawn on the IISS claims.

One said: "Although the IISS and 'The Military Balance' are regarded as authoritative sources, all their figures are not necessarily accurate.

"Therefore, in terms of SADF policy, we have no comment to make."

Comparison of the current figures given in "The Military Balance" with those in the 1978/9 edition reveal startling changes in some SADF weapon categories. These include:

- Tanks: South Africa's total of Centurion tanks is up by 100, to a total of 250. Only three countries in sub-Saharan Africa can match or equal this figure — Angola (235 heavy and 50 light tanks), Mozambique (350 heavy and 50 light tanks) and Ethiopia (650 heavy tanks).
- Helicopters: the IISS figures for SADF strengths remain the same for helicopters known to be in service but it claims south Africa has also acquired 25 Agusta-Bell 205s.
- Strike craft: two years ago the IISS credited South Africa with three of the Minister-class multiple-missile gunboats, which it describes as "fast attack craft (missiles)". Now South Africa is credited with six such craft, with another six on order.
- Heavy mortars: South Africa now has 200 120mm heavy mortars — a weapon category which received only a passing mention two years ago.
- Artillery: in addition to its 88mm (25-pounder), 140mm (5.5-inch) and G-5 155mm guns, the IISS says, South Africa now also has 15 M-7 105mm self-propelled guns, and 40 155mm towed and 50 self-propelled M-109 A1 howitzers.
- SADF manpower: South Africa's "total mobilisable strength" — which can only be achieved by placing the country and its economy on a full war footing and calling up all active military and paramilitary reserves — remains at 404 500, but strengths of the individual services have changed.

While Navy and Air Force strengths have dropped, the standing Army has risen from 50 000 to 71 000.

NEW NRP LEADER--Senator Warwick Webber was re-elected leader of the NPR at the party's annual provincial congress at Amanzimtoti, on the South Coast, yesterday. In a surprise nomination he was opposed by Mr Ron Miller, MP for Durban North, who is regarded as a rising star in the party. Senator Webber won a straight ballot. The veteran MEC of the party in Natal, Mr Frank Martin, was unanimously re-elected chairman of the party in the province. In his address to about 350 delegates attending the congress, Senator Webber said the NRP must maintain its "verligte" image. It would be a sorry day in South African politics if there was a swing to the right. "The HNP must never be allowed to gain ground. Heaven help us the day they get one seat in parliament," he said. AZAPO SUPPORT FOR BOYCOTT--Meetings organised by the Azanian People's Organisation (AZAPO) were held in several black townships in the Northern Transvaal at the weekend but efforts to increase the bus boycott have been unsuccessful. Yesterday morning Lebowa Transport continued to operate a limited service at Lenyenye near Tzaneen while there was only a partial boycott in the Potgietersrus area. Seshego workers have maintained a total boycott of the company's buses on the Pietersburg route for almost six weeks. Workers in Potgietersrus have reported large scale intimidation by radicals from Vaaltyn, the area in which Chief A.B. Kekana, a member of the Lebowa Legislative Assembly, lives. The chief has urged his people to support the boycott but many of them are walking the short distance to Mahwelereng to catch buses to Potgietersrus. AZAPO OFFICIALS ARREST--Security police in Pietersburg said yesterday that the two AZAPO executives who were arrested in Potgietersrus on Sunday, had allegedly visited a restricted former member of the banned Black People's Convention (BPC). Colonel S.J. Strydom of the Security Branch in Pietersburg, said Mr Sammy Tloubatla--national secretary of AZAPO--and Mr Manfred Yende, vice-chairman of the organisation's Soweto branch, were questioned at Mahwelereng near Potgietersrus after they had allegedly visited Mr Mosibudi Mangena who is banned under the Internal Security Act. Mr Tloubatla and Mr Yende were arrested together with three other people--members of the Potgietersrus branch of AZAPO--when they returned from addressing a bus boycott meeting in Mahwelereng. All were escorted to the Potgietersrus Police Station and questioned for about five hours. [Text] [Johannesburg POST in English 2 Oct 80 p 5]

STONING OF PHATUDI HOME--Pietersburg--Youths in Seshego went on the rampage on Saturday night and stoned the house of the Chief Minister of Lebowa, Dr C.N. Phatudi. They also stoned the Lebowa Transport bus depot in the township and set two company vans alight. Dr Phatudi's house was kept under police guard overnight. His daughter, Mrs Chakuma, yesterday said the Minister had left that morning to visit his home village of Mphahlele. [Excerpt] [Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 6 Oct 80 p 1]

ANC, PAC DETAINEES IN TRANSKEI--Umtata--The Transkei Attorney General has decided not to prosecute six of the eleven alleged ANC and PAC militants who were detained in 1978 after they had been alleged to have entered Transkei illegally with the intention of overthrowing the Transkei Government. In a statement last night, the Transkei Commissioner of Police, Brigadier Martin Ngceba, confirmed the Attorney General, Mr George Muller QC, had decided after studying the docket not to prosecute the six people, Mr Synod Madlebe, Mrs Valencia Mketi, Mr Macky Maboza, Mr Vuyisile Mketi, Mr Agreement Mpendulo and Mr Zamele Gushu. He said they would be released soon. The decision not to prosecure the six and also to seek and early decision on the matter is believed to have been motivated by appeals from Amnesty International and other international bodies. The five who are still in detention include Mr Stephen Khumalo and Mr Xola Trevor Mketi. [Text] [Johannesburg THE STAR in English 23 Sep 80 p 18]

RELEASE OF DETAINEES--Eight detainees, including the acting president of the Azanian Peoples Organization, Ms Nombulelo Melani, were released from detention yesterday morning. They are two University of the Western Cape students, Mr Ebrahim Patel and Mr Cecil Esau; two Hewat Training College students, Mr Zunade Dharsey and Mr Patrick Ricketts; the co-director of the University of Cape Town's Institute of Inter-group Studies, the Rev Richard Stevens and a Grassy Park Senior Secondary School teacher, Mr Matthew Cloete. They had been held for three months under section 10 of the Internal Security Act. Two detainees, who were detained at the same time, were not released. They are the banned former president of South African Students Association, Mr Achmat Cassiem, and Mr Abdurazzak Achmat, a community worker. JOHANNESBURG MUNICIPAL WORKERS LEADER--The president of the Black Municipality Workers' Union, Mr Joseph Mavi, is to lay a charge of contempt of court against the Johannesburg City Council. The charge arises out of a controversial "newsletter to the City of Johannesburg" distributed by the council this week, in which its handling of the recent municipal workers' strike is strongly defended. Describing the document as "outrageous," a spokesman for the union's lawyers said today it could prejudice the outcome of the forthcoming State case against Mr Mavi. Mr Mavi is charged under section 21 (1) of the General Law Amendment Act of 1962--commonly known as the "Sabotage Act"--for his alleged role in the municipal strike. Two other executive members of the BMWU face charges under the Act, which carries a minimum penalty of five years' imprisonment and a maximum penalty of death. TRAIN FARE INCREASES--Train fares are going up again--this time by at least 38,2 percent. The increase was announced by the assistant general manager of the South African Railways, Mr C.P. van Coller at a conference in Johannesburg yesterday. "To maintain the present financial year loss (for the SAR) of R485 million during the period 1981/82 at the present level, bearing in mind the inflation rate of 13 percent, passenger fares will have to be increased by no less than 38,2 percent," Mr Van Coller said. SASOL PROCESS CATALYST--Hoechst South Africa is to establish a R5-million polyphosphoric acid plant--the first of its kind in this country--to come on stream in 1982. The new plant will supply raw material for the manufacture of a catalyst used in the Sasol process to a new company, African Catalysts (Pty), in which Sasol, the Industrial Development Corporation and Suedchemie AG of Germany all have a stake. The decision to go ahead with the new plant follows the signing of a supply agreement last week between Hoechst and Samancor, who will provide the basic phosphorous raw material to Hoechst from its mines in South Africa. A Hoechst spokesman says the new development represents the start of a phosphorus chemistry industry in this country, which is a major step forward in the further development of basic industry. Polyphosphoric acid production at the Chamdor, Krugersdorp plant will be sufficient for all the country's requirements for some time to come. UN TO FUND POPULATION REGISTRATION PROJECT

[Text] A tripartite agreement concerning technical assistance to the Ministry of Justice for a civil registration project was signed in Mbabane yesterday.

The agreement for the assistance expected to be well over E350,000 was signed by the Minister for Justice, Mr. Polycarp Dlamini on behalf of government and Mr. S. Shahid Husain on behalf of the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) and the United Nations Department for Technical Corporation for Development (UNDTCD).

The objectives of the project are to facilitate the issue of birth certificates which will in turn help establish the identity and nationality of Swazi citizens.

It will enable the government to compile estimates of the population needed for social and economic planning purposes. Swaziland's population is expected to double, to become 1 million, in 20 years.

After the signing, Mr Dlamini said he was particularly happy with the project because in a period of ten years since his Ministry was established it was receiving UNDP assistance for the first time.

The agreement was signed in the form of a project document and the UNDTCD will act as the executing agency of the project.

For the first two years UNFPA contribution is expected to be E175,491, and cover the services of a civil registration expert, training of national staff and purchase of vehicles and office equipment.

A phased approach, according to a statement issued during the signing has been adopted in the implementation of this project. Under Phase I UNFPA has approved E112,455 and approval of E63,036 is envisaged for Phase II.

The Swaziland government contribution for the same period will be E368,072 and cover the cost of local training, salaries and allowances and operation and maintenance of vehicles, office equipment and supplies.

About 400 of the 800 enumeration areas which will form the basis for improvement and extension of the civil registration system will have been established by the end of this project.

REPORTAGE ON PARTY MEMBERSHIP, UPCOMING ELECTIONS

Party Membership Soars

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 7 Oct 80 p 5

[Text]

LITUNGA of the Western Province Mr Ilute Yeta has been commended for spearheading a massive Party membership campaign which has hit an all-time record of 30,000.

The praise came from Central Committee member Mr Felix Luputa who said as a result of the Litunga's direct involment in Party affairs, UNIP was now stronger in the province than ever before.

Mr Luputa said since the Litunga began involving the royal establishment in Party organisation at all levels, the membership had soared from 5,000 in 1978 to more than 30,000.

"Since the royal establishment involved itself in Party organisation we have had a fantastic response from the people.

"Last year when I came to the province the membership was 16,000. Today we boast a record 30,000 all because of the Litunga's desire to work with the Party as one team," he said.

Many Party programmes were being organised between the Central Committee member's office and the royal palace at Lealui.

"This clearly demonstrates the unity existing in the province. His royal highness is an excellent leader. He has made the Party what it is in the province today."

Mr Luputa said many of the candidates in the recent section and branch elections went through unopposed and this had made the work of Party leaders much easier.

"We have had no complaints from the people about the manner in which the elections were conducted. Everything went smoothly because the people are happy and the credit must obviously go to the Party leaders," he said.

During his recent tour of Lukulu and Kalabo, Mr Luputa was told that many candidates at branch and section levels had been returned unopposed because the people felt that it was a waste of time to contest posts held by capable leaders.

Secretary Rebuked for Statements

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 7 Oct 80 p 5

[Text]

WESTERN Province member of the Central Committee Mr Felix Luputa has reacted angrily to charges by a top Party leader that the people in the province were lazy and spent most of their time drinking.

Speaking in Mongu at the weekend, Mr Luputa rebuked his provincial political secretary Mr John Simbotwe who claimed two months ago that the people had taken so much to drinking that they had used fertiliser intended for crop production to brew Kachasu.

"The statement by Mr Simbotwe was unfortunate. It is totally wrong to say people of this province cannot produce because of heavy drinking," he said.

In his statement which he partially endorsed when asked to comment at the weekend, Mr Simbotwe said as a result of heavy drinking the entire province had produced only 30 bags of maize last season.

But Mr Luputa refuted this and said the people had responded warmly to President Kaunda's directives under the "lima" programme.

He said: "For example during the 1977/78 season the province produced 6,000 bags of rice. In the 1978/79 season, despite the poor rains, the province produced 14,000 bags.

"Regarding wheat production, the province produced only one bag in the 1977/78 season. Last season Western Province produced more than 90 bags of wheat despite facing one of the worst droughts."

He added: "What do you call that? isn't that progress? and yet these are the official figures of food production recorded. How about those consumed by the people themselves?"

It was wrong to say the people did not produce because of heavy beer drinking when facts and figures spoke for themselves, Mr Luputa said.

"I was very sad when I read about what Mr Simbotwe was reported to have said. The people too were very unhappy. The statement was unfortunate and I summoned the provincial political secretary to my office and the matter was settled there," he said.

Commenting on his statement, Mr Simbotwe said he was trying to encourage people to work hard. "I was only telling them to work hard first and drink later.

"I was not saying everyone in the province is a drunkard. As a leader I will continue to make these appeals because there will not be any magic formula to our economic problems unless we work hard."

He added: "I know the majority of people in the province are not drunkards but we have to work hard if we have to produce the food we need ourselves. This is what our President has been saying since 1975 in Solwezi when he said he would resign if people did not stop heavy drinking."

But Mr Luputa contended that if all went according to plan and the necessary requisites were provided, the province could produce enough food to feed the nation.

He said maize production had shot up during the last season in spite of poor rains

Chipango Contests Party Poll

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 8 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

FORMER Livingstone mayor and politician, Mr William Chipango, has lodged his nomination to contest a Party post in the country-wide ward elections to be held on October 21.

Confirming this yesterday, Livingstone acting governor, Mr Chisanga Mpepo, said Mr Chipango intended to contest the chairmanship in Maramba ward and was unopposed when he lodged his nomination on Monday.

Mr Mpepo said Livingstone mayor Mr Muchimba Sichala was contesting the post of secretary in Freedom Ward.

Vetoing in the ward elections is an issue which cannot be discussed in the Press, Ndola governor, Mr Alexander Kamalondo said yesterday.

Mr Kamalondo said this when he was asked to comment on allegations made by an aspiring candidate Mr Masiye Phiri who has challenged the decision by Ndola Party committee to veto him on grounds that he worked in Kitwe although he was a resident of Mukuba ward in Ndola.

Aspiring candidates in the ward elections turned up in full swing throughout the Copperbelt Province to file their nomination papers.

Member of the Central Committee for the Province, Mr Shadreck Soko said yesterday that there were no incidents during the nominations.

Mr Soko who visited Chililabombwe, Chingola, Kitwe and Ndola regions over the weekend said he was happy with the way arrangements had been made.

An aspiring candidate in Lusaka yesterday urged the Elections Office to investigate irregularities in the lodging of nomination papers in Katuba constituency.

Miss Rosemary Kaputula accused some of her opponents of chicanery, saying they had tried "everything possible" to frustrate her.

Five candidates for chairmanship in Kitwe went through unopposed while the rest of the 20 wards were heavily contested.

Among those who were unopposed were mayor Mr Sunday Chiluba and Mr Edward Samwata, a councillor.

The most heavily contested wards were those in the mine area. In Mindolo seven candidates filed their nominations for the post.

In Mufulira 267 candidates filed their nominations.

Nearly all the posts in Luanshya's 25 wards have been contested, said governor Mr Grant Ng'ombe.

Mayor Mr Stanley Chilele and several other councillors filed their nominations on Monday.

Mumbwa in Party Poll Hitch

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 9 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

NONE of the aspiring candidates in the Party elections qualified for nomination in one of the wards in Mumbwa district because only three of the seven branches formed on September 10 were registered.

This was said in Lusaka yesterday by chairman of the Chabora constituency, Mr Light Kabanga, where the ward is.

He said like any other aspiring candidates, he had his nomination papers approved by governor Mr Lotti Samundengo but the returning officer turned them down.

He claimed that the returning officer had rejected his supporters because they were not branch officials.

Two other Party members whose papers were unsuccessful were Mr Orbit Martin Mwendo of Mutaba branch and Mr David Shachinungo of Shikatende branch.

In Lusaka, governor Mr William Chanda said only two of the four Party officials who wanted to stand in the elections refunded Party funds they had misused. They have been pardoned and allowed to stand.

The reprieve follows the Central Committee's decision empowering the district political committee to pardon officials who had misappropriated Party funds to stand if they refunded the money.

Seven out of a total of 71 candidates contesting the post of ward chairman in Lusaka's 31 wards have been elected unopposed, Mr Chanda said.

In Kabwe, governor Mr Raphael Mapulanga described as "encouraging" the manner in which candidates had responded to the elections.

At the close of nominations seven candidates who had filed their nominations went through unopposed.

Three candidates who contested the post of chairman in three wards in Chipata were returned unopposed.

Governor Mr MacDanny Kalonga declined to name them.

Meanwhile, aspiring candidates who use dirty tactics to win support in the elections will be barred from contesting.

Eastern Province member of the Central Committee Mr Joshua Mumpanshya said this in Chipata yesterday when he launched the election campaign at a meeting for Party officials.

Lundazi governor Mr Aram Mulwe warned aspiring candidates against using dirty tactics. Times Reporter/Zana.

CHOTA: 'BIG POWERS BROUGHT HAVOC IN AFRICA'

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 9 Oct 80 p 5

[Text]

MILLIONS of Africans are suffering at the hands of foreigners, deputy speaker of the National Assembly Mr Raphael Chota has said.

And Member of Parliament for Petauke Mr Lavu Mulimba believes apartheid would crumble "because of the stupidity of its own advocates".

The two men were addressing the Inter-Parliamentary Union conference in East Berlin which ended its 15 days of deliberations last week.

The IPU is the largest grouping of parliaments in the world to which the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association (CPA) is affiliated.

Speaking on the theme: "Progress towards the achievement of decolonisation, including the full implementation of the people's right to self-determination," Mr Chota hit out at big powers, accusing them of bringing havoc to the African continent.

Mr Chota who led the Zambian delegation said: "Millions of people are still suffering under the oppression of foreign powers or racist minority regimes. The African continent has suffered more from the effects of colonialism than any other part of the world, for in Africa, colonialism has survived into 1980."

Mr Mulimba, speaking on the topic: "The strengthening of the process of detente, the urgent need to arrive at international agreements," appealed to those who helped Zimbabwe Prime Minister Robert Mugabe to defeat forces of oppression in his country, to divert that support to SWAPO and the ANC so that they, too, could root out racism and apartheid from their countries.

CORRUPT PRACTICES ACT APPROVED

Lusaka ZAMBIA DAILY MAIL in English 8 Oct 80 p 1

[Text] President Kaunda has given his assent to the Corrupt Practices Act passed by Parliament last August and this means that the Act is now part of the Zambian law, Legal Affairs permanent secretary, Mr Charles Manyema, disclosed yesterday.

Mr Manyema said that the President gave his assent to the Act on September 24 after his arrival from his recent month-long tour of Eastern Europe and the Far East. He added that a statutory instrument would soon be published in the Government Gazette to make the law operational.

The new Act provides for the setting up of the Anti-Corruption Commission whose duty it will be to receive and investigate reports of corruption in various places. The Act also provides for stiff prison sentences for convicted offenders, the minimum sentence that may be imposed on the offender being five years.

A few weeks ago, a Lusaka High Court judge, Mr Justice Godfrey Muwo, came out in full support of the Corrupt Practices Act, saying that this law would go a long way in ridding the country of corrupt elements, who had acquired or were acquiring wealth through dubious means.

The judge appealed to the public to co-operate with the Anti-Corruption Commission to be created soon so that no leader or individual would be able to acquire wealth by corrupt means and get away with it. He said the success of the war against this cancer would largely depend on the co-operation the Commission would receive from the public.

Mr Justice Muwo said it was one thing having a law which took into account the society's outcry against corruption and quite another to make that law work.

KAUNDA COMMENTS ON ANGLICAN CHURCH WRANGLE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 7 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

PRESIDENT Kaunda yesterday described the current leadership wrangle in the Anglican Church as "unfortunate but a small cloud" which had already passed.

Speaking at State House when the newly appointed Archbishop of Central Africa, Walter Paul Khotso Makhulu called on him, President Kaunda said: "To say that only Zambians should be appointed as bishops in Zambia is a betrayal of the importance of God's message."

Zambians should strive to train Christian workers who would serve not only in Zambia but in many parts of the world, he said.

Dr Kaunda congratulated the archbishop on his appointment which, he said, was well-deserved. He told him that his task was not an easy one and Zambians would pray for him to be guided by the Holy Spirit as he performed his duty.

He told Archbishop Makhulu that because of the importance of God's message, all those called upon to preach it must have clean hands.

The President said Zambia was struggling to establish a society in which genuine peace prevailed through truth, justice and fair play.

Referring to the Lord's Prayer President Kaunda said he saw in it a very important programme of action for man.

Archbishop Makhulu was accompanied by the dean of the Anglican Cathedral Reverend John Klyberg and Mr Phillip Simuchoba, the Anglican Church warden.

Last month more than 100 church members from 13 Anglican churches in Lusaka demonstrated at the Zambia Anglican Council headquarters demanding that a Zambian bishop should head the diocese.

The wrangle erupted after the retirement of Bishop Philimon Mataka.

DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE TO TRAIN DECENTRALIZATION OFFICERS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 8 Oct 80 p 7

[Text]

THE Pan-African Institute for Development is to embark on a training programme in conjunction with the National Institute of Public Administration aimed at equipping decentralisation officers with the necessary know-how on rural development.

This was announced in Lusaka yesterday by the director of the Institute for East and Southern Africa, Mr Anthony Hagan, when he welcomed executive members who are in the country to check on progress the institute was making.

Mr Hagan said the training programme would have started in July but had to be delayed because the Local Administration Bill was still before Parliament.

As soon as the Bill was enacted the programme would start.

"The aims and objectives of PAID is to provide training, research, studies, consultations and support to African governments in their efforts to promote African rural development," Mr Hagan said.

The association was ready to provide support and stimulate reflection and research on development; supply scientific, technical and administrative support not only to decentralisation staff but to officers in the National Commission for Development Planning to prepare them for rural development oriented projects.

PAID president, Professor Akin Mabogunje, added that Africa was facing a crisis as far as rural development was concerned.

The main problem lay in the African governments' planners who relied on imported development plans which only suited urban areas.

"What African governments need is training, research, studies, rural consultants and support aimed at equipping villagers with the necessary knowledge which would enable them to run their own rural development projects. Villagers must be involved in the planning," he said.

Urban planning only catered for 20 per cent of the population and there was no provision, in many cases, for food production programme.

Consequently these countries had a problem of feeding the remaining 80 per cent of the population.

Prof Mabogunje added that PAID would fill in the vacuum provided African governments responded to its activities financially, morally and politically.

PAID being a non-political organisation and started by developed countries, continued to get aid from donors.

It has four regional centres: Doula which caters for Central Africa and soon to become headquarters, Buea for West Africa (English speaking), Quagadougou for French speaking West African countries and at Kabwe for East and Southern African region.

East and Southern region consist of Botswana, Ethiopia, Kenya, Lesotho, Malawi, Mozambique, Mauritius, Seychelles, Somalia, Sudan, Swaziland, Tanzania, Uganda, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

INFORMATION MINISTER RAPS PERFORMANCE OF MEDIA PERSONNEL

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 7 Oct 80 p 5

[Text]

INFORMATION and Broadcasting ministry permanent secretary, Mr Edward Lubinda, has rapped Radio and Television Zambia personnel for poor performance and ordered them to improve.

He said the mistakes which were repeatedly made on radio and television could easily be "minimised" if the officers took their work more seriously.

Speaking when he toured radio and TV studios in Lusaka yesterday as part of his familiarisation tour since his appointment in August, Mr Lubinda said:

"We cannot afford to hide our mistakes. We are a special group because the whole nation has focused its eyes on us.

"We have very big responsibilities and what we say or do can build or ruin this country," he said.

He was aware of problems the two institutions were facing.

But he said that was no excuse for continuing to make mistakes and added: "We should minimise such mistakes as reading the news late and reporting late for work."

On transport problems, he assured director-general, Mr Alport Phiri, that the ministry would do its utmost to help. Even if the institution was allocated little money each year this did not mean negligence by the ministry, he said.

Mr Phiri said he was aware of the heavy responsibilities his department was shouldering and assured Mr Lubinda: "We will exert ourselves more and deliver the goods."

He said his men were conscious of their responsibilities as they were part of "government property". They would work as a team which he said was one way efficiency could be achieved.

CORRESPONDENT REPORTS ON KAUNDA'S TRIP

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 5 Oct 80 p 3

[Report by Robby Makayi who accompanied the President]

[Text]

THE passengers in the Presidential Zambia Airways Boeing 707 were slumped groggly in their seats as the aircraft tipped its wings near Lusaka on a clear early Sunday morning of September 21.

The men and women had been on the "road" for a full 30 days. They were tired from a combination of hard work, tight schedules, fatigue and jet lag after having been in the air for 17 hours.

Then the familiar voice of air hostess Edith Kujila crackled on the aircraft's address system.

"Your Excellency the President, Madam Kaunda, Honourable Members of the Central Committee, Honourable Ministers, Ladies and Gentlemen," she announced.

"In a few minutes, we shall be landing at Lusaka International Airport. Would you please ensure that your seat-belts are fastened, extinguish your cigarettes and that your seats are in an upright position . . ."

There was an electric feeling in the atmosphere as the red eyed passengers came to life and meekly obeyed the standard procedure before landing.

The wheels of the huge aircraft unlocked from the under-carriage, bumped once on the runway and the Captain performed a smooth landing as he and his other colleagues had done at countless airports in different cities in the past month.

The aircraft was filled with wild applause. Not only for the safe landing. But because everyone was happy to be back home after the longest tour President Kaunda had ever undertaken.

Apart from the President, his wife and his immediate lieutenants, the other 60-plus passengers comprised men and women who had slogged through eastern Europe, the Middle East, Asia and the Far East with the President during his historic marathon and successful tour.

They included high and middle ranking Government officials, all experts in their respective fields, a group of ten Pressmen and, of course, the aircrew.

The applause therefore was not only for safe landing and return home but also of having accomplished what they set out to do. And this is best summed through Dr Kaunda's own words, "To mobilise human and material resources" for Zambia's new economic liberation struggle, especially in the agricultural, mining and industrial fields.

That the tour was successful is beyond doubt as can be seen from the number of agreements signed in all the eight countries visited. Almost 30 various agreements, which gives an average of an agreement per day for the 30 days of the trip, were signed.

Fruits

Even a cynic cannot dispute that results were achieved because a day after the President's arrival, he was busy inspecting the first batch of tractors from the German Democratic Republic, which will be used on the State farms under 'operation food production'.

These tractors are the fruits of Dr Kaunda and his delegation's negotiations.

More goods will be arriving in the country shortly from various countries visited and personnel from these countries will also be in Zambia to implement the agreements signed during those 30 days spent abroad.

The marathon tour of the GDR, Czecheslovakia, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, Romania, Iraq, India and Japan was a success not only from the point of view of the results achieved, but also from the amount of knowledge gathered in all these countries visited.

When President Kaunda described the trip as an eye-opener, it means just that to every member of the delegation.

Apart from learning about the economic, technical, scientific, and cultural aspects of the countries visited, the trip was also of great political value as the Zambians were able to learn at close range how these various nations organised their political systems.

The experience gained especially in the socialist countries of eastern Europe were valuable to Zambia which is pursuing a humanist-socialist path. However, this political subject is dealt with at length in another article.

Coming back to the tour in general, the presidential delegation's first port of call was Berlin, in the German Democratic Republic.

Berlin was perhaps a good choice to start from in a Europe divided into East and West political blocs. For it is the city of Berlin that has the infamous "Wall of Berlin" which divides that unfortunate but beautiful and historic city into East and West Berlin.

The Berlin wall is the best symbol of this divided world where super-power rivalry demands that smaller nations must either be in the western or eastern camps, hence the tense security situation in the world.

Cake

Apart from that, Berlin stands as a lesson and sad reminder to the world because it was from this city that the partition of Africa took place with the colonial and imperialist powers of Europe carving up Africa like slices of a birthday cake unmindful of the consequences they were unleashing on this continent, apart from their own interest of gathering material gains from the rich resources of the continent and shackling up of its people for centuries to come.

To date, the blood of Africans is still being spilled in Southern Africa, the Horn of Africa and Western Sahara because of that single act centuries ago.

But of more traumatic experience to the rest of the world is that it was from Berlin that the two devastating world wars were unleashed.

The First World War and the Second World War were triggered by a meglomaniac Austrain corporal called Adold Hitler.

Even today, one can still see the devastation caused by that war to this beautiful city. A number of buildings still stand in ruins after having been bombed by the allied forces.

Bullet pock marks are still visible on a number of buildings.

This is contrasted by the tall and glimming new office blocks and apartments. The people of the GDR have really worked hard in the past 35 years to rebuild their shattered nation from the ruins of war to make the GDR the tenth most industrialised nation in the world and one of the most industrialised in eastern Europe.

It is from this divided city, at the famous Huboldt University where the legendary Karl Marx studied, that President Kaunda seized the opportunity to make a passionate appeal to Europeans to unite in the interest, not only of Europe, but of the world at large.

The audience sat in stunned silence as Dr Kaunda recounted the damage the split of Europe has and is causing to the world.

He called for a new and united Europe to lead the world into a better future as it did through the industrial and the technological revolutions.

Security

A scholar at this university commented in wonderment as Dr Kaunda was confered with an honorary doctorate degree in philosophy: "Your President is really a great man. He is a true philosopher. He has a wide vision and is always looking ahead. He truly deserves this honour."

Indeed the international security situation preoccupied President Kaunda's mind so much that there was no single speech nor joint communique that did not touch on the need for peace and lessening of tension in the world.

Apart from reaching complete agreement with the German leaders, led by Comrade Erich Honecker, on the need to work for peace in the world, the Zambian delegation also signed agreements with the GDR in which the GDR gave Zambia K20 million credit loan for the purchase of agricultural machinery for operation food production.

They also signed an air services agreement for an exchange of flights between Zambia Airways and Interflug.

A protocol agreement of political cooperation between the two parties was also signed.

While in the GDR, President Kaunda visited a number of agricultural complexes to learn at first hand how the Germans were successfully producing all their agricultural as well as industrial requirements.

Freedom

Contrary to popular belief that the GDR was lagging behind western nations in development, the Zambians found the East Germans to be so advanced that some western nations are paupers in comparison. This can be said of every nation visited in eastern Europe.

The amount of freedom and prosperity that the people in eastern Europe enjoy completely shattered the myth carefully propagated by the western propaganda machinery over the years that there was no life nor joy behind the so called "iron curtain".

The Zambians extended their stay in the GDR by two days due to the industrial unrest in Poland which was the next country to be visited in the original itenerary.

The Polish experience is indeed another example of how workers' or people's power is effectively maintained in eastern Europe

The President devoted most of his extra two days in the famous trade fair city of Leipzig studying party organisation at local levels.

The Zambian party next jetted into the scenic ancient city of Prague, in Czechoslovakia, where they were warmly welcomed.

Famous for its cystals, Czechoslovakia produces machinery, oil products, weapons (the home of the Bruno rifle), steel, glass, chemicals, aircraft, textiles and shoes (it has some of the finest leather in Europe).

The beautiful Tatra car is also manufactured here.

But since the Zambian party's chief mission was in the agro-industries, Czechoslovakia provided them with the good opportunity of studying these too. Their chief crops are wheat, sugar, beets, potatoes, rye and hops.

They have huge agro-industrial complexes, which, like in most east European countries, are largely run by the people themselves.

These complexes are self-contained and sufficient in that from the ploughing of the fields to the marketing of the products, including exports, the processes are all done by the complexes themselves.

These complexes cater for the planting of crops, harvesting, processing of the products, research in conjunction with local universities and research centres and the selling of the products.

Prague, with its golden domes cathedrals and magnificent palaces, is the capital of the federated states of Slovakia and Czech.

Its history goes back to the ninth century when it was of the Great Moravian Empire before Slovakia was overun by the Magyars and while Bohemia and Moravia became part of the Holy Roman Empire hence the impressive cathedrals).

Czechslovakia is also a highly industrialised nation and the home of trams, which they export to all over the world.

Under the agreement signed in Prague during the visit of the Zambian delegation, Czech trams will soon be part of the scenery in Zambia with the long awaited Lusaka tramway system.

The Zambian delegation also visited the Zentor plant in Brno and inspected the tractors manufactured there. These are huge machines suitable for big farms envisaged under the State farms plan.

Farming in Czechoslovakia is highly mechanised like in the rest of the other socialist countries visited, and the Zambian delegation had a good opportunity to see what Zambia indends to do, put into practice.

The agreements signed in Prague were so comprehensive that the visit to this country was a very fruitful one for the Zambians.

For example, Czechoslovakia will assist Zambia in establishing an iron and steel industry, a tractor assembly plant that will manufacture a Zambian tractor, agro-industrial complexes to facilitate the operation food production and the Lima programmes, and an electric tram system starting with Lusaka.

The proposed iron and steel industry will use Zambia's deposits of raw materials and this projeet might also involve other friendly countries whom Zambian has come to agreement with.

As Dr Kaunda later explained when he addressed Zambian students in Romania, apart from using the known iron ore deposits, experts are also studying the use of scrap metal from old cars and other items for an integrated iron and steel industry

This would form Zambia's envisaged industrial base.

The tractor assembly plant is a priority in the establishment in Zambia of a machine tools sector.

This time, the Zambian delegation negotiated in such a way that when these plants come into operation, there would be no need to import spare parts as these would be manufactured here.

AIMS, DEVELOPMENT OF SDS, UWY, ZALSA REPORTED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 5 Oct 80 p 5

[Article by Freeman Ilukui: "The Youth: Will Graduates Ever Be Allowed To Practice What They're Taught?"]

[Text]

AFTER methodically brushing the spectacles he mounts them on the bridge of his nose and stands up.

In a public speaker's voice the honourable minister starts the rituals of a graduation ceremony with the following address:

"Occasions like these are usually a sign of a healthy nation as they signify continued efforts of the Party and its Government to improve and increase the country's manpower.

"It is with this knowledge in mind that I urge all of you graduating students, young men and women, to work tirelessly with efficiency so that you live up to the training and qualifications this institution of higher learning has offered you.

"This has to be done not only for the good of your future, but for the betterment of the nation as a whole.

"Failure to do this will mean that public funds spent on your education here, the teachers' efforts and your many years' learning are pearls wasted on dogs."

So beseeched many a young graduate has gone into his chosen field full of valour and vigour, only to be stopped in his tracks by the sharp realities of practical field work, as opposed to theoretic lecture halls and "bookish" knowledge.

This contract has come to be known by various names and phrases such as frustration, maladministration, lack of respect for junior staff by senior personnel and meddling, from the top.

Claims and accusations of frustration are almost at all levels in our society in various fields. But they are at their loudest in the political sphere.

However, this should not be surprising — what with politicians being public spokesmen. All the same, the accusations are often there and can be disturbing unless the public know in what vein they are uttered.

Recently a group going by the name of Society for the Dissemination of Science (SDS) emerged in the capital. Its objective, as reported at the time, was to spread the "communist message" of scientific socialism throughout Zambia.

It was reported that chairman of the Political and Constitutional Sub-Committee of the Central Committee Mr Reuben Kamanga had scoffed at the group, and described it as irrelevant.

After the Press disclosure I sought out the man behind SDS, Mr Derrick Chitundya Chitala and asked him about the issue.

He told me that he had been greatly embarrassed by the report as its implications had been in bad taste.

"We are neither renegades nor anti-Party activists. What we were trying to do was in line with the Party provisions as laid down in Humanism in Zambia and a Guide to its Implementation Party 2; as regards power decentralisation and people's full participation in politics in a one-party participatory democracy."

He said there was nothing sinister about SDS's objective of spreading scientific socialism. The Party and its Government are building a Humanist society through scientific socialism, and this our leaders have always said openly, he pointed out

"In view of this I fail to understand why Comrade Kamanga should have said what he was reported to have said.

"Probably the reporter asked him a leading question which required only the answer he gave," Mr Chitala said.

Mr Chitala pointed out that SDS had been in the embryonic stage, which ruled out the question of it being an anonymous political radicals' grouping.

"You don't publicise plans. We had to be formed and organised before we could have made ourselves known. But as it is, we have been nipped in the bud and I can't think of anything for the near future."

In 1978, Lusaka witnessed the birth of the Union of the Working Youth (UWY). Some ideals of this organisation were more or less the same as those of SDS (or is it late SDS?).

The union was led by a veteran of students and youth politics Mr Allan Kalimukwa. Mr Kalimukwa's involvement in this type of politics goes back over a decade or so.

The UWY's emphasis was on youth's role in labour and industry. It also undertook "to strive for ideological clarity and proletarian solidarity among the working class youth."

Some people saw no need for its existence as there was the Party's Youth League already. Others thought it was trying to undermine the Zambia Congress of Trade Unions.

After more than a year of this situation Mr Kalimukwa had to sadly pull in his claws. At the burial ceremony of the UWY he had the following words to say: "The point is only that we have been betrayed and under such circumstances, it is revolutionary to be flexible."

Earlier, another University of Zambia young graduate Mr Mundia Matakala, spearheaded the formation of another action group under the name of Zambia Association for the Liberation of Southern Africa (ZALSA).

Its aim was to assist and support the liberation struggle which was, and still is, being waged by the oppressed masses south of the Zambezi.

This was to be done morally, materially and literally.

ZALSA may differ from the other mentioned organisations in that its interests, so to say, are external and not internal situations. But it is, nevertheless, Marxist oriented. Still in existence. ZALSA has survived the storms which have seen the demise of other youth inspired bodies.

In the country's development and manpower training it is hardly a secret that the Party and its Government has provided for the teaching of political science.

This is done in a number of institutions, including the University of Zambia and the President's Citizenship College in Kabwe.

Moreover, a number of youths are often sent abroad for the same course. Naturally, one should expect all or some of the participants in these courses in various institutions to put what they have learnt into practice with encouragement and support from the Party and its Government and its organs.

Departure from this is likely to rock the boat.

A number of youths I talked to both before and after Mr Chitala on the subject matter thought that young people in the country were being underrated.

One of these had this question to ask: "Are initiatives to be considered revolutionary and in line with Party policies when they are only from the top, and is anything from the bottom reactionary and destructive?"

Indeed one might ask further: Are our graduates from universities and colleges being allowed to live up to their graduation bequests or to their Party's and its Government's bequests in the One Party Participatory Democracy?

Is the on-going search a blind or guided one?

And, above all, is the Zambian youth mature in nature or just a hotheaded mischief-seeker?

It is time answers were found to these questions.

CITIBANK LOAN FIGURES REPORTED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 7 Oct 80 p 2

[Text]

CITIBANK (Zambia) Limited has lent out about K35 million since it began operations at the beginning of the year, vice-president Mr Michael Stolen said at the weekend.

This lending has mostly been in the priority sectors of transport and energy, he said.

"But between now and the next quarter of next year business is expected to swing towards the mining sector and occupy a major part of lendings as new investments are likely to be made," Mr Stolen predicted.

The response from Zambian businesses to the American bank, which is open for corporate business only, could have been much better had it not been for the present slump in the economy.

But the economy slightly improved last year when Zambia's transport problems were settled and the Zimbabwe issue resolved, Mr Stolen said.

"The industrial banking community the world over was interested in how the International Monetary Fund stabilisation programme in Zambia would work and Zambia made it through with a good record," he said.

Not many countries are able to withstand the IMF's tough measures for granting a loan, Mr Stolen added.

For Citibank (Zambia) to increase business in the country will depend on growth of the economy and therefore generate employment without having to rob business from other long established commercial banks in the country.

Meanwhile, the bank has succeeded in the Zambianisation of posts by remaining with only three expatriates.

Right from start, a vigorous training programme was established and three Zambians, apart from locally trained staff, are studying abroad.

"We promised ourselves that at no time would we have more expatriates than the number of Zambians in training and we have reached that level," said Mr Stolen.

POLICE IMPOSE CURFEW ON COPPERBELT TO CURB CRIME

Lusaka ZAMBIA DAILY MAIL in English 8 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

POLICE on the Copperbelt have imposed a curfew between 23 hours and 0500 hours with immediate effect in a bid to curb the rising crime wave in the province.

Announcing this at a Press conference yesterday, Copperbelt police chief, Mr Julius Zulu, said that due to public outcry that police were doing nothing about the alarming crime wave, it had been found necessary to impose this measure. He warned that any body found loitering between that time would be picked up and thrown in the cells.

Mr Zulu said that the police in the province had been very concerned over the crime rate and this was why it introduced the clean-up operation, but that it was found that the exercise was not producing the required result due to the uncontrollable movement of people and hence it had been found necessary to impose further stringent measures.

"There has been an outcry of police inability to contain the now intolerable crime rate on the Copperbelt. We are concerned about this state of affairs and we are doing everything to contain the situation with our limited resources," he said.

He added: "Currently, we had launched the clean up operation in various townships on the Copperbelt in which we have screened various people during the operaton, 302 aliens were rounded up from Twatasha and 165 were picked up from Bulangililo in Kitwe. Eighty-one people were rounded up from Ndola's Sinia and Chipulukusu townships."

But Mr Zulu said the free movement of people at awkward hours had greatly hampered the success of the operation, adding that the order was temporary and urged all bar and restaurants owners to cooperate with the police and close their premises at the required time.

Mr Zulu called on members of the public to comply with the order adding that the police would stop and question anybody on the street found defying the order.

"If they cannot give a proper reason then they will be apprehended, detained and later prosecuted under Chapter 146, Section 181, Sub-Section "D" of the Penal Code."

Mr Zulu said that the police had decided to restrict movements from 23 hours in order to give innocent people from bars and hotels and cinemas ample time to reach their homes. He added that he had also issued strict instructions to his men not to inconvenience bonafide travellers such as those taking relatives to the hospital.

Answering a question on the whereabouts of the notorious "spoiler" Kapenda, who escaped from lawful custody with others three months ago, Mr Zulu explained that he had reason to believe the fugitive had slipped out of the country.

He said that if Kapenda was around the country he would have continued to commit offence after offence.

"We know his model of operation. If he was around, we would have known and that is why we believe he is out of the country," Mr Zulu said.

In June this year, Mr Zulu announced that 14 people had been murdered on the Copperbelt within 54 days.

He had said then that the Copperbelt police were very concerned with the increase in crime in the province.

Wanton murders have in the past few months been committed in Lusaka and the Copperbelt.

DETAILS ON NEW LOCAL ADMINISTRATION SET-UP GIVEN

Confusion Over Decentralization

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 7 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

THE present local government set up will continue to function until the new Local Administration Bill is passed by Parliament, despite the ward elections.

This is stated in a circular to provincial members of the Central Committee by Party Secretary - General Mr Mainza Chona before he left for the Far East.

The circular, aimed at clearing the air because of the confusion over the decentralisation issue, stated at the same time district councils under the Party constitution would be operational and perform functions of the former district development committees under the chairmanship of district governors.

Mr Chona said a number of questions had been and were being asked what the situation would be because of the adjournment of the debate on the Bill by Parliament.

This was because there would be chairmen of ward committees, who under the Party constitution, were members of district councils on one hand and members of rural, township, municipal and city councils on the other.

The questions raised in Parliament were political rather than legal, he said, adding that some of these had been exercising the minds of members of Central Committee and were the subject of discussion. This was why the Central Committee appreciated their being raised.

"Decided"

"Accordingly, it was decided that the enactment of the new Local Administration Act which would establish the new district councils should be postponed to give more time to the Party to thoroughly discuss certain aspects of the decentralisation proposals," he said.

He pointed out that in his circular of January 16, he explained that after August 31, regional secretaries would become political secretaries, women regional secretaries would become district chairmen of the Women's League, and youth regional secretaries would become district chairmen of the Youth League. This position still stood, he said.

He instructed them that the district councils should immediately start functioning and carry out the functions of the local government councils which would only be taken over by the new district councils after the Local Administration Bill was passed.

He added that the district council could invite councillors (members of the local authorities) to its meetings since they may deal with general matters relating to development in the district.

Last weekend, a spokesman for Freedom House in a statement described criticism by ZCTU chairman Mr Frederick Chiluba of the proposed Bill as strange and a form of intolerance alien to the principles of participatory democracy.

The spokesman said Party channels were open and ready to receive any complaints or suggestions, whether reasonable or not.

And ZANA reports that Minister of State for Decentralisation, Mr Fitzpatrick Chuula, has said he will retire from the Government at the end of this year.

Mr Chuula said in Mazabuka that he planned to leave the Government to devote more time to consolidating development in his Magoye parliamentary constituency.

Addressing Party leaders at Munjile primary school in Magoye, he said he had finished his special duty of assisting to formulate the legal structure of the new local government administration.

In Lusaka, the district political committee has vetoed three councillors and disqualified another aspiring candidate in the Party elections, chairman of the committee Mr William Chanda said.

Mr Chanda did not give reasons for vetoeing the councillors — Mr Alan Mwanza, Mr Grafts Simwanza and Mr Nelson Kalaluka.

Another disqualified candidate is Mr Greenford Hajamba former deputy mayor of Lusaka, who wanted to stand in Ward 17 of Kalingalinga township, where he was not a resident.

District secretary Mr Sitali Chababa, said the elections were heavily contested.

Kitwe town clerk Mr Gilbert Zimba was among aspiring candidates who filed his nomination papers yesterday for the ward elections.

Returning officer, Mr Edward Momba could not say how many people had lodged their papers.

Nominations went on smoothly in Livingstone amid speculation that the mayor, Mr Muchimba Sichala, would not contest, although this could not be confirmed.

A top official of the electoral commission has described as "overwhelming" the response to nominations in Kabwe Urban.

Mr Ariel Phiri who is chairman of the Civil Service Commission said if the same situation prevailed throughout the country the results would be very encouraging.

In Kasama, nominations began with indications of stiff competition for the post of chairman in the five wards of the township area.

District secretary, Mr Japhet Mulenga, said according to reports reaching his office from centres, the post of ward chairman in the township area would be heavily contested.

Minister of National Guidance Mr Arnold Simuchimba has appealed to candidates to remain patriotic and dedicated to the Party aspirations even if they lost.

Mr Simuchimba who officiated at the close of a two-day Humanism seminar at Muyombe in Isoka over the weekend, said officials should not stop or slacken in Party work after losing in the elections.

And Minister of Works and Supply, Mr Haswell Mwale has urged Party leaders in Lundazi to take the elections seriously.

Mr Mwale called on the leaders to elect capable people who would direct and help accelerate development in the district.

Ward Poll Nominations 'Encouraging'

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 7 Oct 80 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text]

UNIP does not use underhand methods in its dealings. So those who still harbour fears about the proposed local administration system should discard them.

Yesterday Freedom House issued explicit instructions about the councillors who will be elected in Party wards on October 21.

They are not going to march into the mayors' parlours and council chambers the day after and drive out the occupants.

Change will only come about after amendments to the Local Administration Bill have been made by the National Assembly and the Act assented to by the Head of State. Until then no one should panic.

The Bill was introduced in Parliament during the last sitting and at the second reading stage the Party and its Government discovered, as some backbenchers did, that it would not be in the best interest of the majority Zambians to let it go onto the statute books in its present form.

As a result it was deferred and when it is re-introduced next time those parts which were deemed to be unsuitable in the participatory democracy of Zambia will most certainly not be included.

The decentralisation division in the Office of the Prime Minister and the Ministry of Legal Affairs have without doubt seen about those necessary amendments.

Mr Fitzpatrick Chuula, who is in charge of decentralisation and in particular formulating the legal framework for it, informed his Magoye constituents that he had accomplished the "special duty".

Well and good if he has; but should Mr Chuula announce at this stage that he is leaving the boat after helping in steering it only thus far?

It is true he will continue to contribute to national development as a citizen, learned lawyer, MP and in any other capacity.

However, as he is the minister of state charged with this most difficult part of the "giving power to the people" process we urge him to stay on until we are ashore together and the system has begun to be seen to work.

Let it be admitted that there are grouses and that feathers have been ruffled here and there over the Party elections now under way.

Some candidates have had their hopes dashed by the vetting practice, other Party members feel time is not yet ripe for the elections and there are others who see a blind alley in the coming system.

However, the Party has not been daunted. Reports from many corners of the Republic indicate that while the response to the section and branch elections had given rise to concern, because people were reluctant to serve at grassroots, that is not the case at the ward level.

That there was a heavy turn out yesterday for nomination to the ward poll is encouraging.

GOVERNMENT WARNS UNIONS, STRIKE THREAT CONTINUES

Warns Police Will Shoot

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 3 Oct 80 p 1

[Text] The Government will not sit idly by and watch lawlessness wreck the nation, Minister of Labor and Social Services, Mr Joshua Lumina warned yesterday.

"Workers going on wildcat strikes should not blame anybody for whatever misfortune may befall them if we decide to enforce the law," the minister said in Ndola.

He was speaking at Indeni oil refinery at the beginning of a tour of industries on the Copperbelt.

He said some people believed they could cause industrial unrest in comfort, but they were cheating themselves because strikes were synonymous with chaos and when the situation became chaotic everybody in the country would suffer.

He told branch officials of the National Union of Transport and Allied Workers that they should not incite their members into striking or do anything which might make the workers uncontrollable.

"Those who deliberately break the law should not blame anybody when the law takes its course or when police start shooting at them," he told the officials, the only union leaders who agreed to meet the minister during his tour in Ndola.

Inciting

The minister advised union leaders throughout the country against inciting workers, saying there was a teachers' problem now because the teachers had been incited by their leaders who were now unable to control them.

Meanwhile, the director of personnel services with the Roan Consolidated Mines Mr Maxwell Sichula has suggested the introduction of a regulation which would ensure that only men of goodwill rose to leadership in the labour movement.

Mr Sichula made the suggestion to Mr Lumina when the minister visited the Ndola Copper Refinery after another visit to the Centralised Services division of RCM at Mpelembe House.

He said union elections must be tight to ensure that only the right people were elected.

"Unless we control election of union leaders we shall end up with all sorts of characters using these institutions to further their own ends," Mr Sichula said.

Responsible

He was happy to note that the mining industry dealt with a responsible leadership in the Mineworkers Union of Zambia. "The day David Mwila and his men go, we shall have many problems," Mr Sichula said.

Mr Mwila is MUZ chairman.

Agreeing with Mr Sichula, Mr Lumina said he was worried about the strikes in the country and referring to the Zambia Railways problem in Kabwe, he added that although workers did not want the works manager Mr David Chabuka, the management was happy with him because he had improved efficiency in his department.

Mr Lumina said by deferring the Decentralisation Bill, the Government was trying to tie some loose ends in it.

He told mine officials that there was no question of the Government taking away mine houses from them and that the State was not going to impose things on people.

"All we want to do is to reorganise the administration in the best interest of the people. We just want to streamline the system and make it much easier for all," he said.

He assured them the Government would not stop employers from giving incentives to their workers where the employers were in a position to do so.

Mr Lumina is expected to meet Chibuluma mine management and MUZ officials today on his continuing tour of the Copperbelt.

A spokesman for RCM said although the Zambia Congress of Trade Unions had issued directives to all affiliated unions not to cooperate with the minister during his programme of meetings, he was expected to hold discussions with the management on the problems affecting industry in the province.

Ndola Teachers Join Strike

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 3 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

ALL primary and secondary school teachers in Ndola, except those in Chifubu, have gone on strike in protest against the delay in implementing improved conditions of service and higher salaries by the Government.

Confirming the strike, a spokesman in the district education officer's office said the unrest did not affect all schools in the area.

"On Wednesday, only teachers in Lubuto and Kabushi went on strike but this has now spread to all schools in South Ndola and only those in the northern part of the city are open," he said.

He explained that in some schools teachers reported for work but refused to teach.

Commenting on the teachers' strike, Minister for Labour and Social Services Mr Joshua Lumina said it was unfortunate they decided to down chalks when a working party looking into their problem was about to complete its work.

In Kabwe Urban secondary and primary school teachers continued their strike.

Meanwhile, Zambia Railways strikers narrowly escaped tear-gas burns when police in riot kit stormed the railways new workshop complex as the industrial action continued yesterday.

The riot squad was led by area governor Mr Raphael Mapulanga and arrived at the scene shortly after 600 workers had dispersed to their homes at the orders of their union leaders.

The strikers, who are demanding the removal of their works manager Mr Davies Chabuka, had gathered outside the workshop main gate awaiting further instructions from railway Workers Union of Zambia leaders but refused to be addressed by Mr Mapulanga.

The workers informed RWUZ chairman Mr Dominic Katwishi and his general secretary Mr Kingfred Malamba, they would only go back to work when Mr Chabuka was thrown out of the workshop.

But railways acting general manager, Mr Richard Veenis scoffed at the workers' demand to remove Mr Chabuka saying this would not solve the problem unless discipline prevailed at the workshop.

"We cannot have a situation where ordinary disciplinary rules turn on an immediate manager and have him replaced. This can only lead to a chaotic industrial atmosphere," he said.

Mr Veenis said the railway management could not meet what he described as impossible demands — reporting for work when they wanted, having their fellow workers punch time cards and limitless tea breaks.

Addressing his members, Mr Katwishi said the workers were not striking but were demanding the immediate removal of Mr Chabuka.

Mr Katwishi told workers: "Some managers have been condoned by the Government which is industrial sabotage. You go back to your homes and when you are wanted we shall call you."

Mr Mapulanga said the situation was unfortunate because when there was a grievance all parties concerned should sit together. "We cannot afford to maintain a rigid attitude and we expect the workers to be accommodating with us."

The governor said apart from being union members the workers were also UNIP members and must have respect for authority.

No Strike for Copperbelt Teachers

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 5 Oct 80 p 1

[Text] The Copperbelt region of the Zambia National Union of Teachers has ordered its members not to go on strike tomorrow.

Instead, the union has given the Government two weeks in which to announce new conditions of service for teachers.

The union's regional executive which met for almost the entire day in Kitwe yesterday urged ZNUT members to report for work tomorrow as usual and appealed to those who were already on strike to return to work immediately.

The meeting, attended by the ZNUT general secretary Mr Shiyenge Kapini, expressed disappointment with the Government's failure to implement recommendations on conditions of service for teachers.

In one of the resolutions, the delegates asked the Government to announce the stage the administrative committee had so far reached.

Regional chairman, Mr Alick Bowa, said it was the feeling of the meeting that strike action was unnecessary "at this stage."

He called on teachers in Ndola and elsewhere who were already on strike to call it off and report for work tomorrow.

On Friday, Labour and Social Services Minister Mr Joshua Lumina said teachers who were on strike would lose their pay for the days they stayed away from work.

Mr Lumina described the strike by teachers as irresponsible bearing in mind that some students were about to sit for examinations.

Last Sunday, Zambia Congress of Trade Unions chairman Mr Frederick Chiluba warned that the country would be hit by strikes before the end of the year.

The industrial action would come about because the Party and its Government had allegedly failed to meet workers' demands for improved standards of living.

But Mr Lumina described the strike threat as a political plot by the ZCTU. He did not elaborate.

The same week, teachers in Kabwe and some towns on the Copperbelt went on strike because of alleged Government delays in implementing new conditions of service for people in the teaching profession.

More than 600 Zambia Railways employees also downed tools demanding the removal of a senior employee whom they accused of sacking workers indiscriminately.

The workers demanded the removal of works manager Mr David Chabuka but acting Railways general manager, Mr Richard Veenis said his company would not tolerate laziness.

He said the management was interested in hard work and had found no reasons to have the works manager removed from his position.

He criticised the Railway Workers Union of Zambia for allegedly encouraging indiscipline by supporting issues which they knew were false.

Railmen Will Lose Pay

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 6 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

ZAMBIA Railways strikers will not be paid for the days they stay away from work, railways acting general manager, Mr Richard Veenis, announced in Kabwe yesterday.

And as the teachers in Kabwe Urban continued their industrial action, local union leaders were at the weekend making frantic efforts to call a general meeting to decide whether to call off the strike or not.

In an apparent response to the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Joshua Lumina's directive that striking teachers in Kabwe and Ndola would not be paid, Mr Keenis directed that the 600 workers at the new railways workshop would also lose their pay.

"We feel that these workers have been badly let down by their union. If you don't work then you don't get paid," the general manager said.

The workers are demanding the removal of works manager, Mr David Chabuka whom they have accused of "indiscriminate sackings". But the management has vowed not to succumb to their demands saying it would not tolerate indiscipline at the workshop.

The strike entered its fifth day yesterday but Mr Veenis expected some of them to resume work today.

He reiterated that he would not meet leaders of the Railway Workers Union of Zambia (RWUZ) until the workers reported for work because according to them the work stoppage was illegal.

In a counter-attack, RWUZ chairman, Mr Dominic Katwishi, said "the protest" would continue as long as the management refused to meet his men.

"It is not a strike but a protest against one individual (Mr Chabuka). Workers cannot go back to work because Mr Veenis has refused to meet the union to discuss certain elements which are of security nature which should be cleared first."

He described as "nonsense" allegations that the union had let down the workers on the matter adding that the management should come out in its true colours.

Mr Katwishi claimed that the union's efforts to discuss the issue with the management and political leaders had "mercenary action" allegedly practised in the railways.

On the loss of pay Mr Katwishi said the central issue was to remove Mr Chabuka so that production could resume.

He added: "Workers will go to every height and lengths even if it means loss of life and blood to have this issue resolved and Mr Veenis should stop insulting workers that they are lazy."

Mr Lumina who was visiting Chibuluma division of the Roan Consolidated Mines (RCM) in Kalulushi at the weekend said the strike by teachers was irresponsible and he vowed to stamp out hooliganism from the labour movement.

He said he had sent directives to the appropriate authorities not to pay the striking teachers for the days they stayed away from work.

REPORTAGE ON LABOR UNION ATTITUDES, PLANS

Teachers Angered

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 7 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

TEACHERS on the Copperbelt have been angered by remarks made last week by Labour and Social Services Minister, Mr Joshua Lumina, that their strike was "irresponsible" and that all those who took part would lose their salaries.

Zambia National Union of Teachers (ZNUT) Copperbelt regional secretary, Mr John Mulenga, said yesterday that if Mr Lumina would use threats of shooting those who went on strike as a way of solving labour disputes he would fail to run the ministry.

Mr Lumina's remarks and threats have angered all teachers in the districts.

He said Mr Lumina must realise that when Zambians were fighting for independence people were actually shot dead by colonial authorities who wanted to suppress the struggle but that the people finally won their freedom.

He said the same followed in Rhodesia where the racist government was using war planes some of which were directed on Zambians in its efforts to suppress the freedom struggle "but those people are free today.

"I would like to appeal to Mr Lumina to choose the right words when speaking on Government plans," he said.

Mr Mulenga said yesterday that all Ndola schools were operating normally and urged any school which might be contemplating going on strike not to do so.

He said, however, that the teachers had reported back to work not because Mr Lumina threatened them, but because of the committee of inquiry into salaries and conditions of service which was now compiling its final report.

Teachers in Ndola and Kabwe went on strike last week protesting against the Government's delays in implementing new conditions of service and higher salaries.

Last Saturday the Copperbelt region of ZNUT ordered its members not to go ahead with the strike which was scheduled for yesterday and instead gave the Government two weeks in which to announce improved conditions of service and salaries for teachers.

But in Luanshya teachers went on strike yesterday, defying the order issued by the union executive. Mr Mulenga said he had been informed of the action by branch officials there.

Strike by teachers in Kabwe Urban and 600 Zambia Railways workers continued yesterday.

Railways management and the Railway Workers Union of Zambia (RWUZ) meeting was deadlocked while it was not immediately known whether ZNUT local leaders had met the striking teachers to resolve the problem.

And our correspondent reports that teachers at Senanga Secondary School in Western Province boycotted classes last Friday in protest against an acute water shortage which has disrupted school activities for the past two weeks. Western Province member of the Central Committee Mr Felix Luputa who visited the school last week promised to help.

ZCTU Strike Warning

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 8 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

THE stand taken by the Zambia Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) during a seminar for union leaders in Kabwe at which chairman, Mr Frederick Chiluba warned of a country-wide strike before the end of the year if workers' conditions and salaries do not improve, has not changed.

And the current spate of strikes in the country has nothing to do with the warning the ZCTU chairman issued because he did not talk of scattered incidents such as the teachers and Kabwe railmen's strikes.

Mr Chiluba said this yesterday in an interview. But he refused to discuss the issue further saying his organisation had presented a petition to the appropriate authorities "and there is nothing I can add to it."

Asked whether the ZCTU's stand had changed since he made the announcement in Kabwe, Mr Chiluba said: "We have remained quiet since then."

Pressed to say whether or not the silence meant that the stand of the congress had remained the same, he retorted: "It implies, doesn't it?"

On the current strikes which mostly affect teachers on the Copperbelt, Mr Chiluba said they should not be associated with the statement when he opened the Kabwe seminar "because I spoke of a country-wide strike and not isolated cases."

And reacting to Mr. Chiluba's warning, Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Joshua Lumina, charged that the warning was politically motivated and wondered what the ZCTU wanted to achieve.

Yesterday Mr Chiluba said he and his colleagues in the congress had remained silent since his announcement "and we have listened to many comments on the issue although some of them have come from people whose sincerity I doubt but there is nothing to add to what I said."

The ZNUT has pledged its full support to the union leadership and general secretary, Mr Shiyenge Kapini, in particular.

The provincial executive has dissociated itself from demands by some branch officials in Kitwe and Chingola for the resignation of Mr Kapini whom they accused of failing to lead the union effectively.

The boycott of classes by more than 200 students at the Copperbelt Secondary Teachers College in Kitwe entered its third day yesterday.

The students are protesting against the Ministry of Education and Culture's decision to transfer two lecturers from the college, Copperbelt chief education officer, Mr Andrew Musukwa confirmed.

Teachers in Kabwe Urban and 600 Zambia Railways workers continued their strike yesterday.

And in Mazabuka, 138 cane-cutters at Nakambala Sugar Estate yesterday went on strike over the non-provision overalls.

Industrialists Warned

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 9 Oct 80 p 5

[Text] THE Zambia Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) has warned industrialists against importing sophisticated machinery which ends up lying idle because of lack of spares and skilled personnel to operate them.

ZCTU general secretary, Mr Newstead Zimba said yesterday that most industries in Zambia were not producing at full capacity because of scarcity of foreign exchange, misplacement of manpower coupled with under-utilisation of machinery.

Mr Zimba who was speaking on the theme "trade union views to productivity" at a Rotary-sponsored seminar in Kitwe, said other factors which affected production included overstaffing by local industries.

While unions created favourable conditions for workers the performance of a number of firms had been grossly affected by the importation of inappropriate technology.

He said some companies spent large sums of money to import sophisticated equipment, but failed to utilise it at full capacity because of the shortage of spares.

"This in the end absorbs capital expenditure and thereby affects production," Mr Zimba said.

He said that the labour movement through education programmes had tried to ensure that there were few work stoppages in industries to enhance production.

"Workers have become more mature since channels of communications affecting grievances handling have been set up by the unions," he added.

Luanshya Likely To Resume Work

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 9 Oct 80 pp 1, 5

[Text]

TEACHERS in Luanshya are likely to resume work today following a meeting between Zambia National Union of Teachers (ZNUT) secretary for the Copperbelt, Mr John Mulenga, and branch officials yesterday.

Speaking in a telephone interview from Luanshya after the meeting, Mr Mulenga said some teachers had started going back to their classrooms and he was expecting a full turnout today.

He said there was no special reason for teachers in Luanshya to continue the strike after an order by the ZNUT executive last weekend for all striking teachers to go back to work on Monday.

"There is no special reason for them to continue the strike. All they wanted is to know when the Government would implement the new conditions of service and increased salaries and this has been ironed out in our meeting," he said.

The teachers went on strike because of the Government's delay in implementing better conditions of service and new salaries for them. ZCTU has exonerated itself from the strike.

ZCTU general secretary Mr Newstead Zimba said that his organisation had nothing to do with the strike and this was echoed later by chairman Mr Frederick Chiluba.

Teachers in Kabwe Urban were yesterday ordered to resume work today in response to the Government's announcement that the administrative salary commission had finished its work.

ZNUT regional secretary Mr Marstone Bwalya issued the directive in an interview with ZANA.

He said although he had not been briefed on the contents of the salary recommendations, teachers would only resume the strike if they discovered that their conditions were still unfavourable.

● And Zambia Railways workers demanding the removal of works manager Mr David Chabuka continued to strike yesterday.

Zambia Railways management and Central Province member of the Central Committee Mr Pius Kasutu had a closed meeting yesterday to try and solve the issue, but both parties refused to give details to the Press.

A top management official of the Tobacco Board of Zambia, yesterday blasted the National Union of Plantation and Agricultural Workers (NUPAW) and the National Union of Commercial and Industrial Workers (NUCIW) for allegedly creating alarm and despondency among their members.

TBZ company secretary Mr Victor Mwaba was commenting on a report in yesterday's Times of Zambia that most of the 2,500 workers would be declared redundant at the end of the year following a Government directive to reorganise the board.

The two unions complained about the impending lay-offs which were confirmed by acting principal labour officer Mr J. M. Machalo and TBZ personnel manager Mr I. K. Zeko.

But Mr Mwaba yesterday expressed ignorance about the reported plans to sack the workers.

The board, he said, had merely been instructed "to make a few changes and readjust ourselves — that is all. I am not familiar with the figure of 2,500 workers who are reported going to lose their jobs."

SALARY INQUIRY COMMITTEE CONCLUDES STUDY

Workers Await Recommendations

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 6 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

THE administrative committee of inquiry examining salaries and conditions of service in the public, teaching, judicial, local government services and the armed forces is now compiling its report.

Secretary to the Cabinet, Mr Evans Willima in the wake of a spate of strikes by teachers over the delay said the committee had finished gathering evidence — in implementing new conditions of service.

And chairman of the Zambia National Union of Teachers (ZNUT) Mr Nelson Simatendele has appealed to striking teachers in Kabwe and Ndola to report for work today and wait for the recommendations to be announced.

Mr Willima said the commission of inquiry into the missing Kanyama disaster funds had also completed its work.

He did not know how long the administrative committee would take to submit its report to the Government.

But he said the new salaries and conditions of service for the workers would be backdated to August 1, as directed by President Kaunda.

Although it was not possible to implement such directives because of lack of funds, "there is nothing we can do, but to comply with instructions."

Declined

"This means that whatever decision the committee makes, everyone affected will get his backpay from August 1," Mr Willima explained.

Mr Willima declined to comment on the nation-wide strike threat by the Zambia Congress of Trade Unions and a warning by Labour and Social Services Minister, Mr Joshua Lumina that workers going on strike would lose their pay.

ZCTU chairman Mr Frederick Chiluba has alerted workers throughout the country to brace for a nation-wide strike before the end of the year to back up demands for better working conditions.

When he announced the appointment of the inquiry team last May, Mr Willima said that for sometime, the Government had received representation from various sectors of the public service, asking for a review of salaries and conditions.

Representations, he said, came from the Civil Servants Union of Zambia, the Zambia National Union of Teachers and the National Union of Public Service Workers, requesting improvements in the conditions of service relating to housing, working hours, transport, increased leave earnings and commutation of leave days.

The terms of reference for the committee were to look into:

- The rise in the cost of living since the last salary review which set the present pay levels and conditions of service.
- The effect of the Turner report.
- The need for stability, efficiency and continuity in the public service.

● The need to provide adequate incentives to professional and technical workers and staff serving in rural areas.

● The need to re-adjust salary structures to allow for flexibility and;

● The date of implementation of the recommendations.

On the Kanyama probe, Mr Willima said the commission was compiling the report for submission to the Government.

The Government appointed the commission early in May headed by Mr Francis Tumeo, an under secretary at Cabinet office to probe the collection, custody and disbursement of all contributions made in cash and in kind towards the fund in 1977.

Its task was to find out how much was raised by Zambians, foreign countries and organisations to assist the disaster stricken residents whose homes were destroyed by floods.

The commision was appointed in the wake of complaints from the public and allegations that the money was misused and contradictions in the total of the money raised.

Meanwhile, ZNUT has pleaded with the Government not to slash striking teachers' salaries as punishment for taking part in what was described as an illegal strike.

Commenting on Mr Lumina's ruling that striking teachers should not be paid for days they stay out, union chairman, Mr Simatendele said the Government should act "like a father and forgive the teachers who went on strike."

Mr Simatendele said teachers had been and were still loyal to the Government and "only went on strike to demand a fair deal."

The Government, he said, should appreciate teachers' problems and work quickly to find a lasting solution.

He appealed to teachers on strike in Kabwe, Ndola and those in Mazabuka who threatened to down chalks today to wait patiently for the recommendations of the inquiry.

And Kabwe area secretary of ZNUT, Mr Maston Bwalya, supported Mr Simatendele's call for patience.

The union in Kabwe would hold a meeting with teachers as soon as a police permit was obtained, he said.

Implementation Delays Foreseen

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 6 Oct 80 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text]

IT is now a matter of time before the Government administrative inquiry into salaries and conditions of service for teachers, doctors, police, prisons, army and all other public service personnel reports on its findings.

Mr Willima said yesterday that the inquiry committee had finished its sittings — 28 sessions from its appointment 130 days ago to today. That was really a commendable job bearing in mind that the committee was part-time and had wide-ranging terms of reference covering diverse professional interests in Government employ.

Certainly the salary and promotional structure of a teacher is different from that of a policeman, so is that of a doctor from a motor mechanic's. But all of them are employed by one organisation — the Government.

The Government could have easily looked into the grievances of teachers, clerks, doctors separately. But that would be going about things piecemeal. Besides the exercise would be too costly.

So as it does not believe in half measures the Government decided to deal with the whole range of problems comprehensively and at one time.

The Government knows full well and is equally worried that the cost of living is eating deeper and deeper into the pockets (if there are still pockets) of every Zambian. It is not likely to ignore that aspect in the new salaries and conditions the inquiry will come up with.

There may be a delay in implementing the measures because the Government will have first of all to think out and find ways to effect them.

This could be in increased taxation, higher prices or cuts in subsidies and public spending on health services, schools and allied facilities.

It is a poor government which announces salary and wage rises without knowing there is money in its coffers to pay them.

Recently one African regime gave its rulers hefty increments—some as high as 50 per cent — only to find there was not enough money. As was to be expected the previous Government became the scapegoat.

The Zambian Government will not allow itself to be a laughing stock. It has to do things properly.

The fact however is that whatever happens, implementation of the report of the inquiry will be retroactive to August 1, 1980. That in itself should cheer up public servants.

We may seem didactic in our concern about the need for industrial peace: This is purely in the national interest.

That is when we repeat that public servants and other workers in the parastatal and private sectors should ignore calls for an illegal country-wide strike. It is not going to help anyone.

The Government has given unions a "free hand" to bargain. It is against unions workers will have to direct their ire if nothing comes off.

REORGANIZATION OF TBZ ORDERED, MANY WORKERS WILL LOSE JOBS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 8 Oct 80 p 1

[Text] MOST of the 2,500 Tobacco Board of Zambia workers will be declared redundant at the end of the year after the Government's directive to restructure the organisation.

This follows the Government's decision to accept a report by a team of British experts sponsored by the World Bank who recently carried out a study of the tobacco industry in the country.

The team, led by Mr Michael Harrison, stayed for five weeks and submitted its report to the Government at the end of August.

It was learnt yesterday that Cabinet Office had approved the exercise and the Government had directed that TBZ should stop running production schemes.

While handing over family farming schemes to the department of agriculture, the TBZ has been ordered to sell its tenant and assisted tenant schemes. The board would remain as a marketing organisation based in Lusaka.

A large number of workers engaged in field work will be laid off, while some will be redirected to the department of agriculture.

Board secretary Mr Victor Mwaba confirmed the changes, but could not give details. He promised to do so today.

Permanent secretary in the Ministry of Agriculture and Water Development, Mr Andrew Hamaamba, described the changes as "minor" but said he was not aware of the laying off of workers.

The National Union of Plantation and Agricultural Workers (NUPAW) has since accepted the move "painfully" and warned of an influx of people to towns to look for jobs with the prospect of others turning to crime if they failed to make ends meet.

Union general secretary Mr Stephen Silwimba said he had received an official notification from the Ministry of Labour and Social Services that the workers had been given three months notice and they would lose employment with TBZ with effect from October 1.

"We have no choice but to accept the redundancies since it is a directive from above. My fear is that the move is defeating the Government policy of go-back to the land and the creation of more employment in the rural areas," he said.

In a letter to TBZ company secretary, acting principal labour officer, Mr J.M. Machalo, recalled that after consultations with the board and the union the latter did not object to declaring the workers redundant.

"To this effect, therefore, I do hereby grant you (TBZ) permission to declare the employees redundant. However, on separation they should be paid all their terminal benefits as laid down in the collective agreement," Mr Machalo said.

Letter

Mr Machalo's letter is copied to NUPAW and National Union of Commercial and Industrial Workers (NUCIW).

The acting principal labour officer was replying to TBZ personnel manager Mr I.K. Zeko, who had said the decision to lay off workers was because of the reorganisation of the organisation

Mr Zeko said the "net effect" of this decision was that many employees would be laid off although it was a fact that some of them would be absorbed by the department of agriculture.

While TBZ would continue to exist as a marketing organisation, Mr Zeko said some workers at the headquarters would have to be laid off to enable the authorities to fashion a more competent and efficient organisation.

TBZ general manager, Mr G. M. Lewanika, told the workers in a letter that the Government directive required among other things, that the board should withdraw from all production schemes and stop securing block credit for farmers.

"The impact of this decision is that the services of all those board officers and wage grade employees employed in the production department will not be required at the close of business on Wednesday, December 31, 1980.

"Unfortunately, you are one of those employees who will not be able to continue in the employment of the board. Accordingly, you are, with effect from October 1, 1980, formally given three months notice of the board's intention to terminate your employment as of December 31, 1980," Mr Lewanika said.

Mr Lewanika said the affected workers would be entitled to all terminal benefits including a refund "where applicable" of their contributions to TBZ-operated pension life assurance scheme without interest.

BRIEFS

ALIEN PASSPORT POLICY--The Ministry of Home Affairs has appealed to non-Zambians living in the country who wish to obtain travel documents to apply for them from diplomatic missions of their countries. A ministry spokesman said yesterday over the past few months, passport offices especially in Lusaka, had been inundated by non-Zambians seeking documents to enable them to travel outside. "Unfortunately, this is not the responsibility of the Zambian Government. These persons should seek such documents from their own governments, irrespective of whether they have been residents in Zambia for many years. "Non-Zambian residents intending to travel outside Zambia should not apply for such documents from passport offices in the country," the spokesman said. He pointed out that the services provided by the passport and citizenship offices in Zambia were meant for Zambians requiring travel documents or passports. MUZOREWA 'PLEASANTLY SURPRISED' BY MUGABE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 11 Oct 80 p 7

[Article by Gilbert Mawarire]

[Text]

UANC president, Bishop Abel Muzorewa, says he is "pleasantly and happily surprised" by the fact that the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, has not turned Zimbabwe into a one-party communist state which he consistently said he would during the liberation struggle.

The bishop has also pledged to use his party's three seats in Parliament to vote for the Government's Constitutional Amendment Bill whose enactment had to be postponed because the Government could not muster the required 70 votes to push it through.

Speaking in a wide-ranging interview yesterday, the bishop said: "We will definitely vote with the Government over the Bill.

"Our party feels that it is not support for ZANU (PF) which compels us to support the Bill but rather because this is a national issue which should be supported by any person who supports majority rule."

He added: "We have said in the past that laws which had been used to suppress and oppress the majority of the people should be changed and we will have no hesitation in using our three seats for that purpose."

Bishop Muzorewa conceded that one of his election campaign strong points was his attack on communism and warnings of a communist Zimbabwe if either Mr Nkomo or Mr Mugabe came to power.

"I was not just being emotional on the issue. I was basing that on what they were saying while outside.

"So I want to say how pleasantly and happily surprised I am that what the Prime Minister used to say is not what he is saying now. I hope that he continues on that course," he said.

The bishop claimed, however, that some potential investors were still holding back their money because they did not know which way the Government was going.

"Lots of people are wondering whether what is being said is not just a cover up.

"This is why aid is not coming as quickly as it would if I had won the election," he claimed.

The bishop said although he had lost the election, he regarded himself as the "midwife" who had helped bring about the country's independence.

"I must say that no honest or truthful historian will write the history of this country and leave out the part I played in its liberation struggle," he said, recounting events from the Pearce Commission to the Lancaster Agreement.

"We loaded the truck of independence and those ruling now (the PF alliance), off-loaded it and got into power."

The bishop, who confirmed he was now spending more time on church than on party matters, deplored inter-party violence and said it seemed the spirit of reconciliation was only between whites and blacks and not between blacks as well.

He said his party had accepted ZANU (PF)'s electoral victory in a "civilised manner" and was gearing itself for the next elections which he said it would win "if the elections were free and fair".

He repeated his denial that his men were being trained in South Africa for subversion in Zimbabwe.

Asked whether he still had men who were under arms, the bishop said: "Which men are you referring to? If you mean the auxiliaries they were not my men. They were part of the security forces who I handed over to Lord Soames when he came to take charge of the country."

He denied that President Kaunda had recently barred him from attending a church conference in Kitwe.

"That is false. I never intended or applied to go to Zambia anyway," he said.

RECEPTION OF SHAGARI PROMPTS COMMENTS ON U.S. POLICY, AID

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 10 Oct 80 p 10

[Editorial: "Bridging the Gap"]

[Text]

WITH the Presidential election campaign at a crucial stage the visit to Washington of the Nigerian President, Alhaji Shehu Shagari, could hardly have come at a better time for the Democrats.

It has given President Carter the chance to emphasise to black voters his commitment to black Africa in general and Nigeria and Zimbabwe in particular.

American politicians are, of course, prone to making extravagant statements at election time, and the reports now emanating from the White House may be greeted with scepticism in this part of the world.

This is understandable, particularly as the volume of American aid has not come up to expectations.

Yet it has been clear for a long time that American policy towards Africa has been changing. The support Washington gave to the Lancaster House conference in the face of strong conservative opposition was proof of that.

So there is good reason to believe that President Carter, given the opportunity, will reinforce the success he has achieved. It may be that even Mr Reagan, should he be elected, would see the sense of this policy. One must hope so.

Zimbabwe may therefore have a pivotal role to play in the development of U.S. policy towards South Africa. Washington obviously wants to see change come peacefully there. So do we all.

It may be that ultimately some form of sanctions will be necessary. But the emergence of a peaceful and prosperous Zimbabwe could also have a powerful influence on Afrikaner thinking by proving to them that change need not be feared. Generous American aid could do much to bring this about.

SHORTAGE OF CONSUMER, INDUSTRIAL GOODS REPORTED

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 12 Oct 80 p 3

[Text]

MANY goods are in short supply in Zimbabwe as industrialists race to keep pace with the booming local market and increasing export demands with the extra foreign currency going towards capital development.

Commerce and industry expect little improvement over the next year or two until new plant, bought with some of the extra foreign exchange, is commissioned.

Apparently unrelated events cause problems. Paper is short because rural schools had reopened, a spokesman for the country's mills said last week.

"Demand exceeds supply mainly because rural schools now need far more exercise books, and more will be needed next year. We have already had an order from one firm for 20 million books and that's a lot of paper; but we have plans for two new mills."

CURTAILED

Publishers have had to curtail production, according to a newsletter issued by a major Bulawayo firm. Not only is locally made paper for paperbacks short, but there is little foreign currency for higher grades.

The retail trade is booming, said the chief executive of the Associated Chambers of Commerce of Zimbabwe, Mr Keith Nicholson.

"The increase in minimum wages means a lot more people enjoy a higher income. There is a tremendous number of people who have come back to the country, and, of course, the rural areas are now back in the cash economy."

He expected the shortages to last until more foreign currency could be allocated for raw materials for the local market.

And they could grow worse if the coming agricultural season is good, putting more money into the pockets of the rural communities.

His counterpart in the Chamber of Zimbabwe Industries, Mr Tony Read, agreed. "We have enough capacity to satisfy the local market, but we have to export as well.

"We need more currency to expand our production and so there will be shortages while we earn this on the export market.

EQUIPMENT

"Much currency is being poured into infrastructure development and the rehabilitation of the TTLs.

"But the situation is not depressing: it's just growing pains. We managed when sanctions started and various goods were in short supply, and in time we will manage."

Beside extra equipment being needed to meet the new demands, much of Zimbabwe's existing plant is old and needs replacing.

A spokesman for the Ministry of Commerce and Industry confirmed that there had been a "considerable increase in allocations for capital equipment".

Allocations for raw materials had also been raised faster than the rate of inflation, but not enough to keep pace with demand.

Allocations for importing raw materials for manufactured exports were made separately, he said.

The spokesman said the Ministry was satisfied over the level of consumption of petroleum, Zimbabwe's major import.

"There has been an expected seasonal increase and more fuel is being used because of the extra traffic in the rural areas, but the consumption is acceptable."

When demand exceeds supply inflation rates often grow, but Mr Nicholson did not expect this to be a factor in Zimbabwe because of the competitive market and the Government's price controls.

Most inflation was imported and the higher wages now being paid in this country could also have an effect, he said.

One result of the tight situation is that few industrialists keep large stocks, and some keep none. As each order is received it has to join the queue instead of being filled from the warehouse.

AID FOR STARVING PEOPLE IN INYANGA, KEZI NEEDED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 10 Oct 80 p 10

[Editorial: "A Critical Time"]

[Text]

THE PLIGHT of about 15 000 people in Inyanga and Kezi who are desperately short of food adds weight, if that were needed, to the plea made in Geneva by the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kangai, for $8 million aid from the U.N. High Commission for Refugees to help the Government distribute food.

Come what may, whether the UNHCR or any other outside agency helps or not, food must get to those who need it until this year's crops are harvested.

It has been said that unless they get food, some people in the affected areas will die of hunger.

There is basically no justification for anyone in Zimbabwe to die from pure hunger. There must be food available and it must be possible to get it swiftly to those who need it.

But the present emergency does point to the need to establish food stocks and outlets for other commodities in the less accessible parts of the country, and have transport available at short notice, to meet future contingencies caused by bad harvests or movements of large numbers of people.

The next few months might be critical for food supplies, and some people, and areas, will take time to recover.

But present conditions are exceptionable, and the country has the will, the expertise and the agricultural potential to reduce the chance that they will ever be repeated.

IMPROVEMENT OF NATIONAL SECURITY REPORTED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 10 Oct 80 p 1

[Text] The Deputy Minister of Home Affairs, Senator Tarisai Ziyambi, said yesterday that the security situation throughout Zimbabwe had "improved a lot" since the deployment of 1400 men in the National Army and the police.

In an interview with the ZBC, the Minister said he was satisfied that the call made by the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, last week, that armed dissidents and undisciplined party elements should be "routed with speed" had been taken very seriously.

"I have every reason to believe that within a measure of a few weeks, there is a possibility of talking about being on top of the situation," he said. "The situation has greatly improved."

Senator Ziyambi said that apart from the three affected areas cited by Mr Mugabe--Salisbury, Bulawayo and Sinoia--the Government had also deployed the army and police into other districts.

Deployments

"We have deployed a group of 200 into Goromonzi, 100 into Sinoia and Makonde TTL, some more companies in Bulawayo urban, another 300 into Salisbury urban and a big number in the Gutu TTL where we have had problems," he said.

A group of 130 had been sent to Mtoko and other units to Maranke TTL, Chenjiri, Chiredzi and Rushinga, bringing the total to 1,400 men deployed in all the affected areas, the Minister said.

Senator Ziyambi also said police had made a "few arrests." Those arrested would soon appear before the courts on charges of possessing arms of war.

PRESENCE OF FORMER GUERRILLAS REDUCES VIOLENCE IN CHITUNGWIZA

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 11 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

THE arrival of ZANLA and ZIPRA former guerillas in Chitungwiza has dramatically reduced violence in the area, the Acting Chief Executive of Chitungwiza Urban Council, Mr Reuben Jamela, said yesterday.

"The coming of the cadres has had a sobering effect on violence-bent elements and, as it has turned out, the security situation here has vastly improved and violence has been greatly reduced," he said.

Speaking in an interview, Mr Jamela said the former guerillas were well-behaved, respectful and friendly and had earned the praise of anybody who had met them.

"The boys are settling in well and so far they have been remarkably peaceful and have not been involved in any incidents.

"They have been very welcome and are mixing well with the local populace.

"So far, so good, and I have no doubt that this is the pattern that will continue. They themselves are well-behaved, respectful and friendly and I do not see them changing to anything else," he said.

People thronged daily to the Zengeza 4 and Seke Unit O areas where the men are housed, to seek relatives and friends "or to just get a glimpse of them", said Mr Jamela.

"The council has a constant rapport with the men. Their commanders come here and we go there to find out if there is anything we can help them with since we are the landlords."

The council provided the former guerillas with services such as refuse, collection, sewage removal, a water supply and general maintenance, he said. Their food, bedding and other requirements are provided by the army.

EX-ZIPRA GUERRILLAS MOVE INTO CHITUNGWIZA

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 12 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

THE long-awaited ZIPRA former guerillas finally arrived at Chitungwiza late yesterday afternoon — three hours behind schedule.

Patriotic Front (PF) supporters began to trickle into the Seke Unit "N" encampment to welcome the former fighters as early as 1 p.m., but a few left when it seemed they would not arrive.

When the men finally arrived at about 4.30 p.m. women sang and chanted slogans of praise to PF leader Dr Joshua Nkomo and the ZIPRA forces. Many in the crowd of several hundreds, reached out to shake hands with the former guerillas as the convoy of 60 army trucks snaked its way into the encampment.

ZIPRA Commander, Lookout Masuku, who rode in a car behind the convoy, confirmed that 1 200 of his men had been moved from Assembly Point Romeo and Mushumbi Pools.

Later, addressing the former guerillas, most of whom wore camouflage military fatigues and looked exhausted, Commander Masuku declared he would not tolerate indiscipline in the encampment.

He urged the men to refrain from going out in the neighbouring residential areas and causing trouble among the civilian population.

Your role, he told them, "is to defend the party on a national scale. I do not want to hear cases of you going out of here to intervene in petty squabbles that some of you may be involved in in the surrounding residences."

He told them they would remain at Chitungwiza until measures were taken to allocate them permanent positions.

PF publicity secretary, Mr Mark Nziramasanga confirmed later that Dr Nkomo, who is also the Minister of Home Affairs, will today address the ZIPRA cadres at 10 am as part of a full day of celebrations.

Starting at 8 am today, Mr Nziramasanga said there would be singing and dancing in the encampment.

ZANLA CADRES RESIST MOVE PLAN

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 12 Oct 80 pp 1, 2

[Text]

MORE than 500 ZANLA guerillas are rebelling against the ZANU (PF) leadership over a bid to make them quit a "refugee camp" on the outskirts of Salisbury.

The revolt flared last week when a leading party official was allegedly forced to flee down a dirt track by furious comrades.

The guerillas have been told by the Government and ZANU (PF) to quit their make-shift kraal on Chishawasha Mission, north-east of the capital.

But they fear that they will be sent to the party-owned Grazely and Oasis farms in nearby Goromonzi, the scene of several recent outbreaks of violence.

The guerillas claim that the co-operative-run farms are overcrowded and disease-ridden.

Two trucks and two buses sent to collect the freedom fighters were forced to turn back empty on Monday.

RESETTLED

"We will not leave until we are properly resettled," said one of the guerillas.

ZANLA forces began moving to the Roman Catholic mission station under the guise of refugees in February.

"I agreed to take up to 100 as a contribution to the resettlement programme," said mission rector, Father Francis Mugadzi.

"The number just grew and grew. There are now hundreds: no one knows exactly how many.

"No one tells me anything now. I'm not consulted. I just know that they've taken the liberty to refuse to move when asked.

"I don't know how they will survive when the rains come."

The guerillas, who all came from Mozambique, live in about 50 temporary grass huts on the side of a steep hill. They collect their water from a running stream and have dug several cess pits.

ZANU (PF) welfare secretary Peter Mabhunu went to the camp on Thursday in a bid to quell the revolt. But the guerillas said they chased him down a dirt track leading to the main Salisbury road

When a Sunday Mail team visited the camp last week, the camp commander called an indaba by hammering on a metal pipe.

Dozens of men, women and children poured out of huts and gathered under a tree.

After chanting chimurenga slogans for several minutes, they voiced their grievances.

The guerillas said they would refuse to move to Grazely and Oasis farms.

"Those places are overcrowded and there is diseases," said the commander. "We are badly overcrowded here, but it will be worse if we move.

"We don't mind having to live here when the rains come. We are guerillas — we have suffered hardship before."

They complained that they were being badly treated by ZANU (PF) and the Government.

"We freed this country and should now be treated well," said one. "We want to move together to a place with plenty of room.

"We will not be herded around like cattle."

They admitted that they were guerillas — and not refugees.

"We were brought here as refugees only as cover," said the commander.

He refused to say why several hundred guerillas had been "smuggled" on to a mission station near the capital city.

The guerillas also moaned bitterly that they were not being paid.

MANYIKA CALLS FOR CALM IN FACE OF BUS STRIKE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 11 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

THE Deputy Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Robson Manyika, has appealed to the public to keep calm in the face of the Zimbabwe Omnibus Company bus drivers' strike here and said he would be meeting the workers' committee today in a bid to try to resolve the deadlock.

The Minister, who flew into Bulawayo from Salisbury late yesterday afternoon, spent the greater part of the evening trying to contact members of the workers' committee.

A senior labour relations officer who accompanied the Minister also held consultative meetings with the management of the ZOC including the general manager, Mr Peter Brice, at a city hotel.

"I appeal to everyone to be reasonable and calm and to act wisely, especially members of the public. The strike will be resolved, possibly before late tomorrow, and the public should have its transport back soon," Mr Manyika said last night.

He said he would discuss all issues at stake with the drivers. "They will put to me their troubles and I will also plainly discuss the issue of the salary increase. But in getting on to a figure, the economic position of the State must be paramount."

Mr Manyika is also holding talks with the management of the bus company. "I have brought Mr Stead with me, though he was a little reluctant, and I hope to iron out all the differences that exist between the management and the workers."

Mr Stead is the chairman of the company and the striking workers earlier demanded to meet him.

The meeting with the workers' committee is due to start at 9 o'clock this morning but the Minister said he will also address all the workers after meeting their committee.

Earlier a statement released by the workers' committee said: "Wages are still based on colour and not on merit."

The general manager of the ZOC, Mr Peter Brice, denied the allegations of discrimination, and said that contrary to the strikers' claims, they had not been stopped from negotiating with him before the strike.

He noted that rises ranging from 17,3 percent for the higher-paid grades to 37,9 percent for junior grades had been made to the transport industry on September 26.

● About 450 workers on the morning shift at the railway block of Rhodesia Chrome Mines, Selukwe, went on strike yesterday.

It is understood their action is in support of 160 night shift workers, who refused to work last night because of a dispute over their night allowance.

Other workers were brought in this morning to keep machinery running at the railway block.

No member of the management of RCM or Union Carbide was available yesterday to comment on the strike.

NKOMO WARNS AGAINST ILLEGAL SEIZURE OF LAND

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 10 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

LANDLESS rural people must not rush to occupy white-owned farms but must wait for the Government to create the legal machinery for an equitable redistribution of land, the Minister of Home Affairs, Dr Joshua Nkomo, said in Plumtree yesterday.

He appealed for co-operation between tribespeople and farmers in solving the problems caused by shortage of grazing land.

He told a rally at Dingumuzi stadium after a closed session with members of the Zimbabwe Republic Police: "People must not take the law into their own hands and start occupying farms. They must know that farmers obtained that land through a legal process under the previous regimes. The laws under which these farms were acquired still exist and it is up to us to change them.

"People must therefore wait for the Government to enact laws that entitle them to the occupation of new land. They must remember that if there is indiscriminate squatting, these farms will be turned into deserts."

Dr Nkomo said people had to accept that white farmers were Zimbabweans. He spoke against the "high incidence of theft and poaching" from white-owned farms and urged farmers and rural people to meet to discuss their problems.

Dr Nkomo disclosed that he would chair a meeting between farmers and representatives of tribesmen at Plumtree on October 18 "to discuss mutual problems".

He would also meet parents of recently returned former refugee girls from Zambia to discuss educational arrangements for the girls on the same date.

Dr Nkomo said he believed farmers and tribesmen could work out a system of co-operation on the land issue pending the acquisition by Government of land for resettlement.

But, he said, farmers were making it difficult for the Government to buy land by charging exorbitant prices.

"I have always told the farmers not to sell African jungle. They can charge for improvements like dams, fencing, boreholes, but not for the mopanis and other natural resources on the land."

There were people, said Dr Nkomo, who kept saying the Patriotic Front had lost the election. "We lost nothing. Instead, we gained the self-government which we had lost in 1897."

Criticising the national radio and television for broadcasting what he described as "rubbish", Dr Nkomo said "some Ministers" were spreading propaganda that only one section fought the war. These people were political newcomers "who have always belonged to the other side".

HEALTH MINISTER OUTLINES PROGRAM OF LEGISLATION

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 12 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

THE Minister of Health, Dr Herbert Ushewokunze, yesterday outlined a programme of legislation bringing radical change to the health service in Zimbabwe.

In a speech in Fort Victoria, he said the programme would involve:

- Greater emphasis on primary health care and on health education.
- The abolition of open and closed hospitals.
- Compulsory health contributions for those earning more than $150 a month.
- More personnel and resources in rural areas.
- Limits on private practice.
- And a policy of low-cost drugs.

In addition the whole Andrew Fleming hospital complex in Salisbury would be designated as a national referral centre and teaching hospital.

A new governing body for the hospital would be created "to reflect the new democratic spirit in the health service and overcome the colonial mentality that undoubtedly exists in the staff of that hospital."

The hospital is likely to be renamed, possibly as the Parirenyatwa Hospital.

Dr Ushewokunze also proposes to set up a national rehabilitation centre with special emphasis on the war-wounded. This might involve the nationalisation of existing centres such as St Giles.

The overall aim of the planned health legislation was "to create a health system which reflects the political power that exists in our society," Dr Ushewokunze said.

"The settler health Acts of past governments ensure economic or racial segregation in our hospitals.

"The very nature of the open and closed hospitals concept ensures that the service is comprehensive only for those who can afford it."

The Minister reasserted his belief that the present hierarchy of the health service was founded on discrimination on the basis of race and on the basis of a black person's willingness to "sell out" his or her colleagues.

Addressing a predominantly black audience of the Fort Victoria branch of the Nurses' Association of Zimbabwe, Dr Ushewokunze said the association itself reflected that selfsame discriminatory colonial hierarchy.

He was particularly critical of the fact that only state - registered nurses and degree nurses were members of the association, which he called "an elitist body passing itself off as a professional organisation".

Grassroots

He said: "The heads of the association are the senior health service members—they are your bosses.

the grassroots of your profession and therefore the community in general have practically no representation in the association.

"The association on its past record is an instrument of Ministry of Health policy, not an instrument for professional and community development."

The Minister's scathing remarks embraced staff attitudes and standards of care in the health service as a whole.

"Student and staff attitudes towards patients have been getting worse over the decades as the colonial disease of oppression and exploitation got worse," he said.

"There is a tendency to forget that the patient is in fact the focus of hospital activity and not the means for realising career goals and acquiring status."

He said there was a lack of trust between staff of different races, black promotion prospects were poor, there was a lack of professional spirit, and senior staff were too fond of terrorising junior sisters and student nurses.

"Promotion must be based on merit and not on colour and not also on how much one sells out one's colleagues."

The great need was for communication and dialogue. Review meetings should be held involving hospital staff of all levels and ward councils should be set up where patients could be represented.

The dialogue and educational process should be extended in particular to those hospital staff who resisted change.

"I don't want people victimising each other. That won't augur well for the service. It's not necessary," the Minister said.

"Let's talk to each other let's create dialogue, let's understand each other.

Preacher

"Of course, if somebody still refuses to change, I think they will be living in the wrong country at this point in time. Probably it will be better for them to leave gracefully."

Dr Ushewokunze said his emphasis on change in the health service had made him unpopular

But he said it was better to change attitudes through speeches than through legislation.

"I feel I must be the preacher who must go around telling people to change with the changing times," he said.

Some of you are aware that there should be change and are geared for it.

"Some of you fear change because it threatens to destroy your exploitatively acquired status symbols.

"Some of you are part and parcel of the system which we militarily sought to destroy and will therefore resist change.

"Your Government is there for change and if you resist change you are ipso facto resisting your Government, the Government of the people."

JOURNALISTS SCORED FOR TRYING TO 'CREATE' NEWS

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 12 Oct 80 p 14

["Mucongorori's View"]

[Text]

NEWSWEEK, the American news magazine, carries an article entitled "Zimbabwe: A new reign of terror" by a correspondent, Holger Jensen, in which the writer predicts an armed confrontation between the former guerilla forces of ZANLA and ZIPRA.

The writer further makes subtle insinuations suggesting that the former guerillas are no longer under proper control and have gone wild, unleashing a reign of terror in the countryside, fighting the police, army and each other.

It is claimed, in the full page article, that Prime Minister Mugabe had used the army to flush out dissidents in ZIPRA while holding back in those in his own ZANLA forces, and that in the wake of "inflamed tribal hostilities" murder, robbery and rape had become the order of the day.

For those of us who have studied the attitude of Newsweek and sister publications under the American conglomerate of the Washington Post, this report comes as no surprise.

Long before Lord Soames set foot on Zimbabwean soil many Western newshounds, among them those of Newsweek, were already orchestrating the inevitability of a bloody civil war in Zimbabwe if Mr Mugabe or Mr Nkomo came to power.

It is now five months since independence and presumably the Washington news moguls have begun to quiz their outpost stringers "When the hell is the big news going to break?"

It is true that politically motivated murders and other violent incidents have occurred in Zimbabwe since independence, but to speak of these as underlying a major rebellion involving ZANLA and ZIPRA forces is to prostitute truth for sheer expediency.

That Zimbabwe is going through a traumatic period is no secret. Prime Minister Mugabe has himself openly acknowledged this fact. He has repeatedly called for unity between the former guerillas and has promised tough action against those circumventing the laws of the land regardless of their political inclinations.

It seems the stock in trade of many foreign journalists is to spread fear, alarm and despondency in the hope of sparking off events that would provide the real "scoop", for I can find no logical reason or truth in the story that Mr Mugabe told inmates at Mtoko's volatile X-Ray assembly point "to keep their powder dry for ZIPRA".

Surely, for so serious a piece of information, the Newsweek correspondent should have made an effort to verify his information with the ever receptive Mr Mugabe instead of relying on an unidentified "witness", who, for all we know, could well have been some disgruntled villager with a chip on the shoulder after the atrocities of the war.

The truth of the matter is that the Prime Minister travelled to Mtoko to inform the former fighters of Government plans to resettle them. These plans have since materialised, and more than 15 000 former guerillas, from both ZANLA and ZIPRA have been allocated temporary housing in Chitungwiza near Salisbury and in Bulawayo.

[illegible] the article speaks of the British Prime Minister, Mr Margaret Thatcher being [illegible] of the [illegible] the Zimbabwean delegation to Bodgrade for Talks [illegible] and alludes to an alleged threat by the British leader that future aid to Zimbabwe from her Government would have to be reconsidered.

If Mrs Thatcher said what she is reported to have said then I can well understand her worries. With an economy bedevilled by labour unrest and an unprecedented unemployment rate Mrs Thatcher certainly has [illegible] to [illegible] hold on her [illegible].

Dr Herbert Ushewokunze is an indigenous African, and if he chooses to fraternise with the [illegible] engages in what Newsweek describes as "primitive [illegible]" it is because he recognises the potential of traditional African medicine as a complementary facet of national health services. This we can scarcely expect non-African settlers to understand.

Indeed, Zimbabwe remains one of a precious few independent African states where foreign correspondents can frolic about at will — a privilege attributable to the pragmatism and foresight of Mr Mugabe and his colleagues in Government.

To quote the [illegible] and return [illegible] of the type contained in Jeremy's article is [illegible] tantamount to shooting in the face of one's host.

POLITICAL STABILITY OF NORTH KOREA PRAISED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 11 Oct 80 p 6

[Editorial: "Korean Lesson"]

[Text]

THE Democratic People's Republic of Korea, which the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, is now visiting, has long embraced the "Juche Idea".

This philosophy, forged by President Kim Il Sung, simply means self-reliance. Although a relatively poor country, Korea has made tremendous strides in its economic development, largely through the Juche Idea.

The Prime Minister obviously respects the vigour with which the Korean people, under the guidance of President Kim, have progressed.

Compared with the American-backed regime in Seoul, Korea may not be an economic heavyweight. Yet the political stability it enjoys under Kim Il Sung must be the envy of the rulers across the border.

Mr Mugabe is to attend the congress of the ruling Workers' Party of Korea. This is a disciplined and industrious party which many African political parties could emulate to their advantage.

A disciplined party can influence the economic and political progress of a country to a tremendous degree, while an undisciplined organisation is bound to wreak havoc.

There are many lessons for Zimbabweans in the Korean experience, for the country will need self-reliance and discipline in the first few months of its independence.

CHRONIC SHORTAGE OF CARS REPORTED

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 12 Oct 80 p 4

[Text]

SHREWD motorists are cashing in on the chronic shortage of cars in Zimbabwe.

They are demanding sky-high prices from dealers for their old vehicles — and often getting them.

"Drivers know there's a terrible shortage and their cars are little gold mines," said one used-car salesman.

"They are taking full advantage of the situation."

Owners now visit several dealers asking for offers. They then go back to the highest bidder — and try their luck at forcing the price up.

Mr Dick Parry, president of the Moto Traders Association, said the shortage would get worse unless the Government allocated more foreign exchange to the industry for new cars.

But more foreign cash for private cars is far down the Government's list of priorities.

Motor traders point to a whole string of factors for the continuing shortage:

- The general upturn in activity in the country since the end of the war.
- The end of fuel rationing.
- The local car assembly industry's inability to meet the demand for new cars.
- The increases in wages which has led to far more Africans buying cars; and
- The easy availability of soft loans.

Mr Ivor Charles, who runs a car firm in Samora Machel Avenue, Salisbury, said the shortage was causing prices to rise steadily.

"I have to pay $400-$600 more for each car than I did a couple of years ago," he said.

"And I have to look further afield. I went to Bulawayo a couple of days ago and bought a car. I drove it back to Salisbury and sold it within two hours.

He said people who bought new cars often sold them for up to $2 000 profit the same day.

"Dealers who can get hold of new cars have a massive waiting list," said Mr Charles. "We just can't satisfy all our customers."

He said his salesground was like a "desert".

"I've got only 12 cars — I should have 30," he added. "I used to buy one a day — now I can get only two a week."

Mr John Martin, general sales manager for one of Salisbury's biggest car dealers, said his firm had only 13 used cars — when they should have 40.

"It's a chronic situation," he admitted. "Even when we can get hold of a car the owner demands a fantastic price."

And Mr Des Henwood, sales director of a Beatrice Road firm, said he was lucky to get one car a month.

"We should have 30 cars — we've actually got two," he said.

Mr Henwood called on the Government to impose sales tax on private deals.

"We have to pay sales tax, so we're undercut by at least 10 percent every time," he complained.

He claimed that many "private sellers" were actually businessmen illegally avoiding tax.

BRIEFS

SILUNDIKA HOME FROM JAPAN TRIP--The Minister of Roads and Road Traffic and of Posts and Telecommunications, Mr George Silundika, has returned to Salisbury after a week-long "window shopping" tour of Japan, reports Iana. Mr Silundika said at a Press conference in his office in Salisbury yesterday he had visited several road construction and telecommunications equipment factories to see what was available for Zimbabwe's development. He had also had discussions with his ministerial counterpart in Tokyo on the setting up of Japanese-sponsored training courses here and in Japan for Zimbabwean technicians. He said chief among his interests in Japan was the possibility of buying a satellite station to speed up Zimbabwe's links with the outside world. Negotiations for this were continuing, with Japanese and other foreign firms. However, he was unable to pin down any firm purchases, as the programme was still "in the evaluation stage." PARTY CHIEFS LEAD IN CPA--The Patriotic Front leader, Dr Joshua Nkomo, the UANC president, Bishop Muzorewa, and the Rhodesian Front leader, Mr Ian Smith, have been elected executive members of the Zimbabwe branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. The Speaker of the House of Assembly, Mr Didymus Mutasa, said yesterday that MPs and Senators had met on Wednesday to elect officebearers for a year, including three ex-officio members--the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, the Senate President, Senator Nolan Makombe, and himself. Members had also formally approved the constitution of the Zimbabwe branch, which was admitted as a member last week. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 10 Oct 80 p 5]

MUGABE'S SUPPORTS ONE KOREA--The Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, has thanked the Democratic People's Republic of Korea for its contribution to the independence of Zimbabwe. At a State banquet given in his honor by President Kim Il Sung, on his arrival in Pyongyang on Thursday, Mr Mugabe said Zimbabwe supported the reunification of Korea as advocated by President Kim, adding that he hoped the United States would do the same. The Prime Minister also praised Korea for defeating colonialism and instituting economic changes for its people. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 11 Oct 80 p 1]

PLAN FOR DISABLED STARTED--The 115 ZIPRA war wounded and disabled who arrived from Angola on Wednesday have become the first to come under the national rehabilitation scheme which has just begun at Boulders farm near Salisbury. The director of Social Services, Mr Brian Beecroft, said the Government bought the farm two weeks ago. The former ZIPRA forces were to have been kept only temporarily at the farm, but it had now been decided to keep them there as the start of the national scheme to rehabilitate war casualties. The department had appointed Miss Lucy Mugwagwa, who holds a master's degree in hospital administration, to manage the center with the help of doctors. Mr Beecroft said a name had yet to be chosen for the center, which would also be used to screen the disabled to see how they could benefit from vocational training. He said a training center would soon be opened near Beatrice for manual courses, and another for wheelchair cases would start near Umtali in January. The Boulders farm rehabilitation center, designed to cater for 200 people, would take in former ZIPRA forces now at Ntabazinduna and ZANLA forces in Harare. NHONGO VEHICLE SHOT AT--A mystery gunman opened fire on ZANLA commander Rex Nhongo's official Government car in Salisbury on Friday night, hitting a soldier in his back. But the guerilla chief was not in his Peugeot 504 when two bullets tore into the left rear side of the car in Gleneagles Road, Willowvale, at 9 pm. Passenger Mr Reuben Mugadza, a soldier in the Zimbabwe National Army, was hit. The bullet travelled through his body. He is in a satisfactory condition in Andrew Fleming hospital. The weapon used in the attack is still unknown, police said. Police also reported that Jack Matkins (six), who was injured in a grenade blast in Arcadia on Friday afternoon, died a few hours later from his injuries. His playmate, four-year-old Robert Nicola, died instantly when the grenade they were playing with exploded. An eight-year-old boy died and his friend was maimed when they detonated another grenade in a kraal at Gutu TTL on Thursday. Boyson Zumba died instantly in the blast. His nine-year-old friend, Fambi Mutemere, had his left arm blown off. He is in a serious condition in Enkeldoorn hospital. A combined National Army and police patrol arrested a man with a grenade in St. Mary's, Salisbury, on Friday. An hour later police in Highfield arrested a ZANLA guerilla carrying a Tokarev pistol. BOATMEN BLAME ETHANOL BLEND--Pleasure boats at Kariba have been hit by breakdowns since the introduction of ethanol blend petrol. Regulars on the lake said last week boats had suffered expensive damage--and they said the blame lay with the new rich blend. Eleven boats were towed into harbor from the recent tiger fishing contest. Other boats including some venturing far out on the lake, have also broken down. Lake captain Mr Frank Andrews said the fault lay with the tanks of some of the older boats. The inside lining of the tanks have been scoured by the blend, causing breakdowns as particles of fiberglass passed into pumps, carburettors and other working parts. One experienced sailor said: "The motor of one boat was blocked solid--absolutely wrecked. "We have thousands of dollars worth of boats on the lakes of Zimbabwe. Experts advice should be given to the owners, both to avoid the expense of damaging motors and the danger to families who break down on the water." New petrol tanks or linings may be required, and plastic hoses replaced by rubber. The long lay-ups of boats over recent years are also suspected of adding to the mechanical problems. Mr Andrews said captains of the 260 boats which took part in the tiger contest had been given advice. The competition, ironically, is supported by Shell-BP. Oil firms declined to comment yesterday. REGIONAL COMMISSION FOR TRANSPORT, COMMUNICATIONS MEETING [Excerpts] Beira (Bureau), 2 Sep--Without an efficient transport system as a basic structure in our countries, it is impossible to cooperate in other economic areas," Subhaschandra Bhatt, national director of ports and railways of Mozambique, stressed during an international meeting of the Regional Commission for Transport and Communications. The meeting took place yesterday in the city of Beira, and was attended by the southern African signatories of the Lusaka Economic Summit [declaration].

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 3 Sep 80 pp 1, 6

As planned, this international meeting took up questions pertaining to the final identification of cooperation projects in the area of transport and communications in the countries engaged in the economic liberation of southern Africa.

Attending the meeting, in addition to our country's representatives, were delegations from Botswana, Lesotho, Malawi, Tanzania, Swaziland and Zimbabwe, as well as an observer under contract to SIDA (Swedish International Development Authority). The participants frankly and objectively discussed the proposals to be submitted at the meeting to be held in Salisbury within 2 weeks.

The multilateral discussion followed a series of bilateral meetings held yesterday, Monday, by Subhaschandra Bhatt, the chairman of the meeting, with members of all the attending delegations.

Lamenting the absence, for unforeseen reasons, of the Angolan and Zambian delegations, the chairman said it was important to be present at all times during the proceedings regarding central aspects of the plans of this Southern African Commission for Transport and Communications, considering that, at the Lusaka summit conference, "our chiefs of state and government correctly identified the areas in which we must cooperate in order to reduce our economic dependency on South Africa."

Specifying these areas of great significance for the nine signatories of the Lusaka declaration, Bhatt noted that, if such a goal is to be achieved, it must first be recognized that without an efficient transport system it will be impossible to solve the basic problems.

"We have severe shortages in material, maintenance and human resources, so we must necessarily resort to foreign aid to develop the transport sector."

Bhatt also noted that the government of the People's Republic of Mozambique takes its responsibilities in these proceedings very seriously, and he announced that a SIDA observer was present, whose specific mission is to draft a preliminary study of the projects defined as having priority.

After the projects are presented and formalized in a meeting at the ministerial level, to be held within 15 days in Salisbury, Zimbabwe, they will be announced and discussed in an International Conference of Donors, to take place in Maputo in late November.

The attending delegations returned to the capital late yesterday afternoon, after observing part of a "Ro-Ro" operation at the port of Beira, involving a Swedish ship that has previously conducted operations of the same type in Mozambique.

Yesterday our reporter approached some of the delegates attending the southern African transport and communications meeting.

The SIDA observer at this international meeting told us that significant steps have been taken in positive preparation for the International Donors Conference.

"There are now over 70 projects which have been identified as having priority. We are going to do our utmost to produce a document to present to the donors conference, to take place in Maputo this November."

ZIMBABWEAN EXPORTERS WARY ABOUT FREIGHT RUN TO MAPUTO

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 16 Oct 80 p 11

[Text] Bulawayo--While the National Railways of Zimbabwe prepares to run four trains a day to Maputo by February, Zimbabwean exporters are holding back their goods until handling facilities improve.

A spokesman for a shipping firm said here yesterday that most enterprises would not use the port because they believed there would be long holdups.

"At this stage the port handles a lot of South African exports--as it always has done--and does not have the capacity to increase its tonnage appreciably," he said.

"Exporters have their own traditional routes and they will not use Maputo until it proves itself.

"The port hasn't the greatest record and unless we get a directive to ship through there, we will not push it. We have not exported or imported through Maputo since the direct railway link was opened earlier this month.

"Many exporters are now using containers which Maputo cannot handle. It has two 25-tonne cranes but none of the other equipment needed to handle them."

He said when inquiries were received from potential exporters, they were told of the position.

A NZR spokesman said: "Maputo is not, at present, served by the Conference Lines and is limited in its container service by the frequency and type of vessel arriving.

"When we are able to increase tonnages on the direct rail route to Maputo, containers will be accepted."

Meanwhile the train-a-day arrangement announced by the NZR at the beginning of the month has had to be altered to one train every other day, because of insufficient traffic.

The spokesman said an efficient port and secure route would generate traffic.

A major problem at the port was motive power, said a spokesman for a clearing and forwarding firm, who has just returned from Maputo.

While all the steam locomotives had been moved to the Beira area, the port was awaiting the arrival of 32 diesel shunt and 20 main line locomotives.

Another difficulty was that there was a big gap in middle management and in the artisan ranks.

"The authorities plan to recruit expatriates from Europe and India, but with a 10 000 labour force the management structure will be faced with many problems," he said.

The expatriate scheme, and the apprentice training scheme run by the harbour authorities would help to increase faith in the operation and help to boost cargo tonnages.

Cargo handled dropped from 14 million tonnes in 1973 to 9 million tonnes last year.

A spokesman for Risco said the handling of its steel at Maputo was quicker than at South African ports.

"Steel is not being dumped several kilometres from the ship, as often happens at South African ports," he said.

"There are no overhead cranes to handle the steel. Up to now they have been using forklifts and, although they are not ideal, everything has gone all right."

He said the company had sent several trainloads of steel by the direct route to Maputo, and it was planned to move all its exports that way.

Mr Lauri Duncombe, secretary of the Chamber of Mines of Zimbabwe, said mining houses had established routes and shipping contracts which would not be ended arbitrarily.

"It will take time for them to change over to Maputo," he said.

"I have no doubt that in due course exporters will use the port, as it is the nearest.

"But existing arrangements with ships and railways will take several months to re-route," he said.

PRESS POWER SCARES STATES, SAY COMMONWEALTH EXPERTS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 12 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

SOME governments within the Commonwealth are reluctant to assist the development of the media in their countries because of the fear it would provide strong competition as a source of authority, experts say.

And the adversary role adopted by the media in some societies is seen as a source of social and economic disruption by their governments, according to a report recently submitted to Commonwealth Secretary-General Mr Shridath Ramphal by the experts who were appointed by the Commonwealth heads of government at their meeting in Lusaka in August last year.

Drawn from various countries, the experts were assigned to identify the most pressing communication and media problems, with particular reference to the needs of developing countries.

In their report on communication, society and development, the experts stressed the need for the media to report the truth despite constraints because no society could benefit when the media failed in this duty.

The report observed that public information officers were denied access to relevant information when they were required to interpret complex policies to journalists and special interest groups.

The report urged governments to seek advice from public information officers before official statements were prepared for publication.

It said: "As skilled professionals, they should be encouraged to develop forms of style and content which will enable the media to use important statements in a way the public will understand."

Governments should realise that if public information services were to be effective, they must not be considered merely as propaganda tools, the experts said.

"Senior information officials should be consulted at early stages of proposed policy changes, and their views sought on probable public reaction.

"The feedback function is essential if communication is to play its vital part in national development," it adds.

The experts urged governments to recognise and respect the professional status of communicators and their roles and responsibilities.

Communication policy should receive attention as an integral part of national planning, and the impact of fiscal policy on communication and the media should be taken into account, they recommended.

Djibouti LA NATION DJIBOUTI in French 18 Sep 80 p 4

[Text] As we announced last week, an Ethiopian delegation visited the Republic of Djibouti to arrange procedures with Djibouti chiefs for the return of Ethiopian refugees to their country after the promulgation of an amnesty law by their government.

ZAMBIA-ZIMBABWE SIGN HEALTH AGREEMENT

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 13 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

ZAMBIA and Zimbabwe have signed a health technical co-operation agreement.

The agreement, the first of its kind with a neighbouring country, was reached at a meeting in Salisbury last week between Minister of Health, Mr Rajah Kunda and his Zimbabwean counterpart, Dr Herbert Ushewokunze.

Mr Kunda, who returned to Lusaka over the weekend, said yesterday that the two countries had agreed in principle to exchange patients requiring specialist treatment and to co-operate in drugs procurement, training of health personnel, recruitment, development of traditional medicine and exchange of consultants.

Patients requiring specialist treatment would, in future, be sent to Zimbabwe instead of being sent overseas, the minister said.

Already, Mr Kunda said, there were some Zambian patients in Zimbabwe. Where the Zimbabweans did not have the facilities or specialists which Zambia had, patients from there would be sent here.

He said visiting consultants would attend to patients instead of one or two sick people going to Zimbabwe. Getting specialists here to treat patients, would enable them to attend to several cases. The same would apply to Zambian consultants going to Zimbabwe, Mr Kunda explained.

The two countries would coordinate the recruitment of health personnel. Where Zimbabwe had many doctors in one field which Zambia did not have, such specialists would be hired here and vice versa.

Mr Kunda noted that Zimbabwe had many pharmaceutical firms producing drugs which Zambia did not have.

Zambia would import these drugs from Zimbabwe instead of buying them from overseas.

There were plans to buy drugs in bulk at regional level, but this would involve other neighbouring countries in the region, Mr Kunda said.

On training, the two countries agreed on an exchange programme instead of either nation building institutes which the other already had. They would use these existing training facilities to avoid duplication.

He noted that Zimbabwe was way ahead in the use of traditional healers who were already registered.

It was the feeling of the two countries that a research centre should be built to research into traditional medicines for the benefit of the two peoples.

Recently Zimbabwe held a symposium for traditional healers at which Dr Ushewokunze officiated. Zambia organised a similar symposium for traditional healers two years ago.

Ideas

According to Mr Kunda, the two countries called for an exchange of ideas. Already Zimbabwe is to host an international health symposium to coincide with the visit of the director-general of the World Health Organisation (WHO) Dr Halfdan Nahler, and the regional director for Africa, Dr Comlan Quenum in December to that country.

Meanwhile, Kabwe Dominican Convent schoolgirls have donated K800 worth of linen to Kabwe General Hospital.

A hospital senior matron commended the girls for their "humanistic gesture".

The linen would be used by sick children.

ELECTIONS FOR PROVINCIAL, NATIONAL ASSEMBLIES

London WEST AFRICA in English 6 Oct 80 pp 1993-4

[Text] Angola's ruling party, by amending the country's constitution, appears to be trying to introduce democratic institutions at all levels. The changes call for the election of 18 provincial assemblies--with between 55 and 85 members each, depending on population--and then, in November, balloting for a 206-member national assembly. The assembly will become the supreme organ of state power" in place of the revolutionary council that has served as the national legislature since independence from Portugal in 1976. President Jose Eduardo dos Santos, however, remains leader of the ruling Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola, armed forces commander-in-chief and "symbol of national unity." The provincial assemblies will also have supreme powers, according to the law, at their level. All Angolans 18 years and older are eligible to vote and be elected, except those deprived of their civil rights.

Barred from election are Angolans "who were active members of factionalist, puppet groups" such as Jonas Savimbi's UNITA, Holden Roberto's FNLA and the Cabinda Liberation Front, all of which have been carrying on guerrilla action against the central government. Also barred are those who have "participated in criminal actions against the people and have not been rehabilitated."

Under the new law, candidates need not be members of the ruling party, but it is emphasised that they must be "the most active politically and the most experienced." Candidates for the provincial assemblies and the national assembly are chosen by committees, but they must answer all questions posed by citizens at public meetings and their candidacies must be approved by a majority of the people in their districts. This is also the case for candidates chosen by the party-sponsored mass organisations--for women, youth, labour and so forth. The assemblies are to begin work 30 days after they are constituted. The entire elective process is supposed to be completed before the special party congress that is to be held December 4-10.

FOREIGN MINISTER DENIES REPORTED DISUNITY IN GUNT

Algiers EL MOUDJAHID in French 22 Sep 80 pp 1, 5

[Interview with Ahmed Acyl, Chadian minister of foreign affairs, by Boussad Abdiche--in Algeria, date not given]

[Text] Ahmed Acyl, Chadian minister of foreign affairs who is visiting Algeria was kind enough to grant us an interview in order to speak about the situation prevailing in his country and to evoke for our readers the struggle and the hopes of the Chadian people who have been exposed for many months to a fratricidal war stirred up by foreign interference.

During our conversation the minister sometimes seemed disappointed (when he mentioned the interference of the African countries in the conflict; grieved (when he spoke of the suffering of his people); irritated (when we commented on some of the rumors reflecting on the unity of GUNT [Transitional National Union Government] and determined (regarding the pursuit of the flight). In regard to the situation in the scene of action, our spokesman is of the opinion that it would be advisable for us, as reporters, to be on the spot in order to form an accurate concept of the conditions.

"All I can tell you, he said, is only that many of the positions held by the adversary, in the capital as well as in the interior of the country, have fallen into the hands of our troops."

Acyl defends the Lagos agreements passionately: they remain the only legal franework left, the only hope of saving the Chadian nation and achieving peace. We will defend them to the bitter end, even to the last man if necessary.

Then we carry on regarding foreign interference: "In Freetown all of Africa resolved to support the transitional national union government.

"Unfortunately, after Freetown, we notice that an Arab and African country, Egypt, is interfering openly in the Chadian conflict. While I am speaking to you large Egyptian transport planes are landing in Abeche. An Egyptian consulate is located in Abeche and Egyptian technicians encircle Habre's rebel forces.

We still regret that President Senghor, whom we consider the wise man of Africa, bears a grudge against GUNT, which, we must remember, was brought into existence by the Lagos agreements.

"We are assuring the Senegalese Government by stating positively that we are not harboring any Senegalese opponents in our territory and that Chad--being a sovereign and independent country--cannot tolerate becoming a target for any government whatsoever. If Senegal has domestic problems, or if Senegal has problems with Libya, it is Senegal's and Libya's business. It is not Chadian business. We are a sovereign country and we are free to have good relations with any country in the world who loves peace and liberty. We wish, therefore, that President Senghor will reconsider the position he took in Freetown, vis-a-vis GUNT."

After Egypt and Senegal, the Chadian minister of foreign affairs discussed the subject of "French interference." "France," he said, "on many occasions gave us its word to support GUNT. But, actually, it furnishes the rebel Habre with all means of information, the press agencies and the "RFI", which became "Radio FAN (Armed Forces of the North) International" and not "Radio France International". This radio is the property of a small French "lobby" which discredits GUNT.

"Therefore, adds Acyl, foreign interventions are numerous and we wish that France--despite the fact that the press is free--would supervise the RFI bulletins as well as those of the press agencies, as they are completely devoid of objectivity when they mention Chad, and that Egypt would cease supporting Habre's rebellion".

This prominent man continues to speak of the economic consequences of the war: "My country, he stresses, is suffering a great deal. There is an unfortunate population located in the interior of Chad, without shelter, without clothing, without food, without drugs. Chadian administration is practically non-existent, all commercial institutions are closed. However, we hope that with God's help, and that of our friends and brothers, we will be able to win this war by every means possible and to buckle down to the task of reestablishing unity and developing our country."

"When I mention the end of the war, he continued, that means militarily or in any other way if Habre gives the other Chadian sons a chance to reconcile with the government in order that a solution can be found for the Chadian drama. We are hoping that our voice will be heard by all those who, directly or indirectly, support, through considerable means, Habre's rebellion.

Finally questioned on the rumors in connection with some of the tension in GUNT, Acyl denied them categorically "It is GUNT which, at full strength, decided during a meeting of the Council of Ministers, presided by Goukouni Oueddei, to remove Hissein Habre, from his function as minister of national defense.

GUNT is united and the rumors in regard to tensions are completely erroneous.

It is evident that when all the sons of Chad are united around their president, this must displease all those who wish us the greatest misfortunes, and they are the ones who start all the rumors.

And to convince us even more, he points out that his Algerian mission was in the framework of a tour undertaken by several members of the government, which included the vice president, in order to expound to friendly countries the situation which prevails in Chad today.

ICRC SUSPENDS OPERATIONS TEMPORARILY

London WEST AFRICA in English 13 Oct 80 p 2000

[Text]

THE INTENSITY of the conflict in Chad is now such that the International Committee of the Red Cross has had to suspend temporarily its operations in Chad. Hopes for peace remain strictly confined to good intentions.

Until the decision to suspend operations in Chad, the ICRC had been the only international organisation permitted to operate in the country. Though its means were limited and the scope of activities severely circumscribed by the dividing lines between the combatants, the ICRC had at least managed to provide a modicum of assistance to the sick and the wounded in Chad. Now, the situation is judged to be too dangerous to continue. It is a measure of the degradation of the conditions in Chad that a group, usually so hardy in its attempts to provide help, has had to withdraw. One shudders at the thought of the casualties in the fighting that goes on now.

The decision also says little for the attempts to achieve peace in Chad. The latest international gesture was an appeal by President Bongo to President Giscard d'Estaing that the latter convene a conference à la Lancaster House to bring peace. Apart from the evidence that the Gabonese are embroiled in the war in so far that they have provided financial assistance to one of the groups, the southerners led by Col. Kamougue, at least Lancaster House was able to have as a basis the fact that any agreement would return the country to the status quo ante, that is the British colonial power. Chad is meant to be an independent African state.

This is why some of the adversaries are not in the slightest bit interested in having some external intrusion aimed at achieving peace. Goukhouni has international law on his side, and in the OAU that carries weight. Habré has Egyptian assistance through Sudan while in the south Col. Kamougue is being propped by Gabon and France (see West Africa, September 29).

Given the external assistance that is being discreetly poured into the conflict and Goukhouni's conviction that the only way to a solution in Chad will be through the elimination of Hissen Habré, it is difficult to avoid the view that as with most civil wars negotiated solutions tend to permit convalescence but no cure. -

ECONOMIC ASSISTANCE MOST NEEDED FOR INFRASTRUCTURE

London WEST AFRICA in English 13 Oct 80 pp 2018, 2019

[Text] IF CONGO had not found oil, would the leaders of the country have been forced to alter their tentative policies towards socialising the economy? Since 1973, when oil was discovered, some of the principal ingredients of economic life have been waste; failure to control the private sector as the ideology of the state and party would have dictated, and sheer bad luck. The misfortunes have, in a sense, been covered up by oil revenue.

The party's aims are quite clear. Congo's economy is to be "auto-dynamic and auto-centric". Congo is to extract itself from the international division of labour by a "revolutionary strategy" which will aim at altering the structure of the economy, which is at the moment "extraverted", with an excessively large tertiary sector and with an agricultural structure that is "archaic". In the meantime, the government has expressed its desire to maintain a "dialogue" with the private sector. The realisation of the intentions to turn the economy into a socialist one, are, however, affected by current realities.

Original estimates for oil production had been too optimistic. Last year Congo produced 2.7m. tons of crude oil. With the opening of the Likouala deposit, production is expected to rise to 5m. tons by the end of next year and it is estimated that by the end of the decade production will have reached 8m. tons. Another deposit at Yanga-Sendji will also come into production soon. Initial optimism had been frustrated because the Emeraude deposits, which are substantial, are uncommonly heavy and have been very difficult to exploit, while production at Pointe Indienne is now declining. Successive governments have tried to cope with their overestimates and then with the disappointing production figures, but the present régime seems at least assured of reliable forecasts. With the way prices of oil are going, the increase in production has proved to be timely. Already oil accounts for over 50 per cent of export revenue. Oil might provide an essential stop-gap for the authorities while they put some order in their own house, but the country also has other economic attributes.

Large amounts of potash began to be exploited in conjunction with French capital. However, it was said that mines at Holle had to produce at least 800,000 tons before they could become profitable. By 1978 this target had not been achieved and prospects dropped when the mines were flooded. Despite lengthy negotiations, investors have been reluctant to commit themselves again to Congo's potash.

Timber has been the constant source of revenue over the years for Brazzaville. The 1978 trade figures show that timber accounted for 24 per cent of export revenue. But even this resource has been bedevilled by problems that can be more easily rectified. The southern forests have been depleted, and the abundant resources in the north are inaccessible except by the most expensive means. The future of the timber industry is therefore tied in to the future of the Congolese communications network and especially the Congo-Ocean railway.

Agriculture, which combined with the timber industry represents 11 per cent of the country's gross domestic product, has stagnated. Cocoa production has dropped.

Coffee increased by over 100 per cent, rising from 1,291 tons in 1975 to 3,456 tons in 1978. Groundnuts and palm oil have remained reasonably steady but small in quantity while sugar production fell by almost half in the same period from 28,067 tons to 15,711 tons.

The rural sector is already the subject of particular concern to the authorities. Congo has a 38 per cent rate of urbanisation, one of the highest in Africa. It also has one of the highest rates of education in Africa. The two facts are linked. The government has constantly reiterated that this poses a special problem for the authorities because of the political ramifications of .a well-educated youth in the Congo which has always been very well organised politically.

The need for an improvement in the primary sector is therefore essential if the economy is to revive. The pressure is even greater given the public debt which the economy has to handle. At the end of 1979 it stood at 250bn. CFA francs and the debt service for this year is estimated at 10bn. CFA francs. While revenue from oil is still uncertain it is difficult to say what this represents as a proportion of export revenue. It is certainly large enough to sting Col. Sassou Nguesso into public comment on the causes of the problem.

He attributed the debt to two factors, one of which is the high rate of education, and the second is the waste in the state sector. Inevitably, it is the state which has to employ the educated youths that are disgorged by the country's education system onto the urban employment market.

Public spending has tripled in the last six years in the Congo. The 60 state enterprises owe the government 11bn. CFA francs. The duplication of employment and waste by inefficiency has been joined by evidence of large-scale corruption.

While castigating all those responsible, the government originally took the step of ordering a levy from every citizen to be put into a National Solidarity Fund. It is a measure of the optimism and the desire to return to calmer methods of achieving ends that the government announced in August that the Fund had been abolished and that household tax would be reduced.

During all the political vicissitudes of recent years, one sector has plodded along, complaining as it always does under the circumstances, but in a healthier state than most: this is the private sector. Dominated by France — Congo is a member of the franc zone — there are at least 200 French companies operating in the Congo. The most important are involved in mining ventures in which they have joint participation with the government. While previous political debates in the Congo had always focussed on the role of the state sector, there is the overwhelming impression that the private sector has been swept conveniently under the carpet of ideological debate. Under Yhombi Opango, there was a clear shift towards the West. Groups of private investors visited the Congo, though most preferred to wait for the Congolese reaction to IMF advice — which was taken — and for the official policies in France. With President Giscard d'Estaing's visit, there will be more agreements signed, more tenders on offer and there is every likelihood that private investors will in the near future be welcomed, though on far stricter conditions than in other franc zone members.

It is for infrastructure that assistance is most needed. Specifically, the transport sector is in vital need of extension and repair. Extension work on the Congo-Ocean railway is currently estimated at 60bn. CFA francs. With France showing signs of offering a substantial loan on relatively easy terms, this project may well come to fruition after long and frustrating delays. The authorities hope that its new capacity will not only open up the northern timber reserves but that it will also continue to carry manganese from Gabon. Weighing against these factors have been the experience of declining trade carried on the railway from Chad and the Central African Republic and the possibility that Gabon, in spite of its assurances to the contrary, might use the Trans-Gabonese railway for its manganese.

CONGOLESE PIONEERS IN CUBA DESCRIBED

Brazzaville ETUMBA in French 20 Sep 80 p 2

[Article by G. Gambissi, of CO.NA.PI press: "News of the 5 February School"]

[Text] Within the framework of the desire for excellence that is prevalent in the schools of Youth Island, especially in those attended by foreign pioneers, and in accordance with the dispositions of the agreement for cooperation between the Cuban Ministry of National Education and ours, the four best pioneers of the year are given a trip to their native country during the summer holidays.

That is why pioneers Mbete Siba Edith, Djondo-Mavoungou Anicet, Bayitoukou Jacques, and Itoua Alain-Remy, who distinguished themselves by doing excellent work during the entire year at the 5 February School, have been on vacation since this past 2 August with their respective families. Round trip tickets for the four Congolese prize winners, (as also for the best Angolan, Mozambican, Ethiopian, etc. pioneers) are a personal gift from comrade Fidel Castro, chief of the Cuban revolution.

In addition to these four best, the next best 15 were also given a vacation trip, but this time to the interior of Cuba, that is, to the provinces. During the trip to the provinces, the young foreign students are taken to historical sites of the Cuban revolution to see what Cuba has achieved. The remaining pioneers have not been forgotten. While they remain at Youth Island, they take day trips away from the island and return in the evening.

How Did the 5 February School Turn Out?

A comparison of the results of all the foreign colonies pursuing studies at Youth Island shows that the results of the Congolese pioneers are the best. It is very important to point out that at vacation time only 45 Congolese pioneers failed the entrance examination to the next phase. As of now one cannot say that those pioneers who did not get passing grades have failed. They still have a very good chance, because they can take a make-up exam for the second phase in October.

The entire National Commissariat congratulated the four prize winners of the year and wished them a pleasant vacation with their families.

NEW NATIONAL ASSEMBLY ELECTION LAW PUBLISHED

Abidjan FRATERNITE-MATIN in French 15 Sep 80 pp 13-15

[Full text of "Law Concerning the Election of Deputies to the National Assembly"]

[Text] As we know, the work of this year's first special session (begun on 31 July at the request of the president of the republic) was concluded last Friday.

Ten bills in all were passed, including the bill concerning the election of deputies to the National Assembly.

The bill governing the election of deputies to the National Assembly admittedly dominated the special session. It amended Article 29 of the Constitution together with Article 10, which relates to the election of the president of the republic.

We are publishing herewith the full text of the law concerning the election of deputies to the National Assembly.

Title I. Composition of the National Assembly. Term of Deputies

Article 1. The number of deputies in the National Assembly shall be 147.

Article 2. The deputies shall be eligible for reelection. The terms of all members of the National Assembly shall run concurrently.

Article 3. The powers of the National Assembly shall expire at the close of the second regular session of the 5th year of its term.

Title II. Method of Election

Article 4. Deputies to the National Assembly shall be elected from electoral districts--in two rounds of voting, by majority vote with direct universal suffrage--by an electorate which shall be convened by decree.

Article 5. Each electoral district shall comprise one or more seats. The number and dimensions of the electoral districts, and the distribution of the seats, shall be established by decree.

Article 6. In single-seat electoral districts, election shall be by uninominal majority vote, obtained in two rounds of voting.

In electoral districts corresponding to more than one seat, complete slates of candidates shall be presented. Deputies shall in such case be elected by majority vote limited to two rounds of voting, without preferential voting or ticket splitting.

Article 7. Regardless of the method of voting employed, no candidate may be elected in the first round of voting unless he has obtained an absolute majority of the votes cast.

An absolute majority of the total of votes cast shall consist of one-half of said total plus one vote. If the total of votes cast is an uneven number, said absolute majority shall be calculated on the basis of the next lowest even number.

Article 8. If none of the candidates (or none of the slates of candidates) has obtained an absolute majority of the votes cast in the first round of voting a second round shall be held, and the candidate (or slate of candidates) who (which) then receives a plurality shall be declared elected.

This second round of voting shall take place on the second Sunday following the first round.

In the event of a tie vote in the second round between (among) the candidates (or slates of candidates) receiving the most votes, a majority shall be definitively established by adding together the votes obtained by said candidates (or slates of candidates) in both rounds of voting.

Article 9. The composition of the electorate may not be changed during the period intervening between the two rounds of voting.

Article 10. In the event a vacancy occurs through death, resignation or any other cause, a special election shall be held in the concerned election district within 3 months following the occurrence of the vacancy, in conformity with the method of voting established by the present law.

There is no cause for a special election to be held during the 12 months preceding the close of the legislative term.

Article 33. It shall be unlawful for any practicing lawyer who holds a seat in the National Assembly to exercise directly (or indirectly through the intermediary of an associate, collaborator or lawyer trainee), other than before the High Court of Justice, any function of his profession in connection with cases wherein prosecution has been initiated in the criminal courts for crimes and misdemeanors that are against the public interest, that pertain to the press, or that are injurious to credit and savings. If, before the start of the session thus scheduled, the concerned deputy has failed to communicate to the president of the National Assembly a written statement of his opposition to the action contemplated, the president of the Assembly shall without debate officially certify the resignation.

If such statement is received, however, the concerned deputy shall be allowed to offer his explanations in private, whereupon the Assembly shall render its decision immediately or (if indicated) after referral of the case to a special committee.

Article 42. The aforesaid bond shall be refunded in the event the candidate (or slate of candidates) has received 10 percent or more of the votes cast; it is otherwise nonrefundable and accrues to the state.

In assigning these sites an equivalent area shall be allocated to each candidate (or slate of candidates). Other than these mandatory sites established adjacent

No material relating to the election--including material bearing revenue stamps--may be posted outside the assigned space or in the space reserved for other candidates.

Space at these sites shall be allocated in the order of receipt of the requests therefor, which must be made no later than 1 week before the election.

If the mayor of a commune, or chief official of an administrative district, refuses (or neglects) to comply with these regulations, the minister of the interior shall personally (or through a representative expressly designated) ensure the immediate implementation of said regulations.

To ensure to the contending candidates an equal distribution of facilities during the election campaign, each candidate or slate of candidates shall be allocated:

1. A large-size poster of maximum dimensions (0.65 x 0.90 meters) for posting during the election campaign at the above-designated sites.

2. A No 6 size poster of maximum dimensions (0.21 x 0.46 meters) for announcements of election rallies.

4. A number of ballots (13 x 9 centimeters in size) equal to twice the number of electors registered in the electoral district in question, to be distributed for each round of voting.

Article 46. Not less than 3 weeks prior to the date of the election there shall be created in Abidjan, by order of the minister of the interior, a commission composed as follows:

Article 48. There shall be established, in each commune and in each administrative district, at least one polling place per 1,000 electors.

The list of polling places shall be prescribed by decree of the Ministry of the Interior and shall be published and posted, in accordance with the customary procedures, 10 days before the opening of the polls.

Article 49. In the event of renewal of the voter registration cards, distribution of the cards must be completed 3 days before the date of the election. One or more boards shall be created in each commune or administrative district and charged with distribution of the cards.

The aforesaid boards shall be composed as follows:

a. In the communes: A representative of the government (who shall serve as chairman); an assistant to the mayor or a municipal councilman; and a representative of each candidate (or slate of candidates).

b. In the administrative districts: A representative of the government (who shall serve as chairman), and a representative of each candidate (or slate of candidates).

Each candidate (or representative of each slate of candidates) shall be sent--no later than 20 days prior to the date of the election--to the chief official of the concerned administrative district (who shall deliver a receipt therefor) the names of the titular representatives (and alternates) chosen from among the electors entered on the voter registration list of the concerned district.

Any cards not distributed shall be returned to the commune (or administrative district) for delivery to the polling place in question, where they shall remain--on the day of the election--at the disposal of the official in charge of said polling place.

A card may be delivered to the concerned elector only upon inspection of the elector's identity documents, or upon authentication of the elector's identity by two witnesses who are entered on the voter registration list of the polling place in question. An official report of such action is thereupon prepared and signed by the official in charge and (where indicated) by the witnesses and initialed by said official.

At each polling place, when the polls have closed, the unclaimed cards shall be counted by the election board, initialed by the chairman, placed in a sealed envelope and transmitted to the mayor's office (or seat of the administrative district); and the corresponding list of names shall be prepared.

The aforesaid sealed envelopes may be opened only by the administrative commission in charge of the next revision to be made of the voter registration lists.

Title IX. Voting Process

Article 50. Each candidate (through his representative), or slate of candidates (through one of its members or other representative), shall have the right to monitor the entire voting process, the opening of the ballots and the counting of the votes, at all locations where such process is conducted, and also the right to demand the inclusion--in the corresponding official report--of all comments, protests or challenges made with respect to said process, whether such comments, protests or challenges are made before announcement of the results of the vote count or after said announcement. The official report shall be signed by the aforesaid candidates' representatives.

The aforesaid representatives must be entered on a voter registration list. They may not be ejected except in the event of disturbances incited by them, in which case action must be taken immediately to replace those ejected with alternate representatives.

The names of the titular and alternate representatives must be communicated to the mayor (or chief official of the administrative district) at least 24 hours before the opening of the polls. A receipt shall be given for said notification. The mayor (or chief official of the administrative district) shall communicate the aforesaid names to the chairman of each election board in question as soon as said boards are constituted.

Each candidate shall have free access to all polling places.

Article 51. The chairman of each election board shall be designated in the communes by the mayor, and in the administrative districts by the chief official of the district.

Article 52. During the entire period the polls are open, one copy of the voter registration list--certified by the prefect, subprefect or mayor, as the case may be--shall remain on the table in the polling place. This list shall serve as the sign-in register.

Article 53. No one may be allowed to vote unless he is entered on the voter registration list. Any Ivorian citizen, however, even though not entered on the list, shall be allowed to vote upon presentation of notification of a judicial decision ordering that he be so entered, or of a ruling by the appropriate jurisdiction annuling the decision which had ordered his removal from the list.

The aforesaid instructions must be delivered (to Ivorian citizens only) at least 3 days before the election.

Article 54. The opening of the ballots, and the tally of the votes, shall be done at each polling place immediately following the closing of the polls.

The vote count may be made by tellers who shall be appointed at least 1 hour before the polls close by the representatives of the candidates (or slates) specified in Article 50.

The aforesaid tellers--chosen from among the electors entered on the voter registration list of the district in question--shall be assigned to the counting tables in order that the reading of the ballots, on the one hand, and the tally of the votes, may be controlled simultaneously--on the spot--by one teller representing each candidate (or slate of candidates).

In the event of the absence of the aforesaid tellers, the chairman of the election board shall choose the tellers from among the electors who are present.

Immediately following the vote count, the results shall be announced by the chairman of the election board to the electors who are present in the same room where the vote count has been made.

Article 55. The official reports must be prepared in the aforesaid room immediately following the conclusion of the vote count and countersigned by the candidates or their representatives. The reports shall be prepared in duplicate.

Each election board chairman shall--through the intermediary of the chief official of the concerned administrative district (or mayor)--transmit to the minister of the interior, by the most rapid means, one copy of the official report of the election process (accompanied by such documents as must be appended), all of which is to be delivered to the vote counting commission for which provision is made in the following article. The second copy of the report shall remain in the files of the administrative district (or commune) in question.

Article 56. The general vote count shall be made in Abidjan by a commission headed by a magistrate. The composition of said commission shall be prescribed by decree of the chief of state.

The aforesaid operations shall be recorded in the form of an official report.

The results shall be announced by the chairman of the commission, who shall immediately transmit all the official reports and annexed documents to the minister of the interior.

IMPOSED RENT REDUCTION PLANNED--Rents in the country are to be reduced by at least 25 percent. Disclosing this in Monrovia today, the Liberian INAUGURAL newspaper quoted a Commerce Ministry source as saying that a decree to back the move by the People's Redemption Council government is expected to be released before the end of this week. The paper further quoted the Commerce Ministry source as saying that estate houses owned by the National Housing Authority might possibly be excluded from the 25 percent reduction measure. The new INAUGURAL newspaper further said that the decree will outlaw the 6 months and 1 year payments of rent, adding: No landlord will be allowed to ask for more than 5 months advance rent payment. PORTS GEAR TO RECEIVE SOVIET CEMENT SHIPMENTS

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 25 Sep 80 pp 1, 2

[Article: "Receipt of Soviet Cement"]

[Text] The GDR will also supply us with 40,000 tons.

As we mentioned in our preceding issue, a contract for the delivery of 50,000 tons of cement was signed in Antananarivo between the Soviet Union and the GDR. The document was initialed for the Malagasy side by Rakotonomenjanahary and Randriambololona, respectively Director of Commerce in the Ministry of Economy, and Director General of COROI, a state company.

We learned yesterday from Rakotonomenjanahary that the contract specifies a 3-year deferred payment and delivery in three stages, the first to occur in 3 or 4 weeks. From now until the end of the year, or at the latest from now until February 1981, our Soviet supplier will have delivered all of the order. There is a port problem to be faced. In fact, because of limited port loading capacity, we will be able to receive only 2 8,000-ton vessels per month, that is, a 16,000-ton delivery during a period of 3 months. In order to avoid "bottlenecks" due to port overloading, four ports will take turns in the unloading operation: Toamasina, Mahajanga, Antsiranana, and Toliara. And if all goes well, the order will be completely honored in the next 3 months...

With the GDR, Too

Still with reference to cement, the director of commerce yesterday said that Minister of Economy and Commerce Justin Rarivoson has also just signed a 2-year deferred payment contract with the GDR in East Berlin for 40,000 tons. But while Soviet cement is to be delivered by the supplier, we must on the contrary provide for the transportation of the GDR-contracted merchandise. And, according to Rakotonomenjanahary, the GDR cement will definitely arrive 10 days after the first Soviet delivery. Thus this year we have made provision for cement supplies from Mozambique, the Soviet Union, the GDR, and North Korea in the following amounts: 60,000 tons, Mozambique;

50,000 tons, the USSR; 40,000 tons, the GDR; and 30,000 tons, Korea; that is, a total of 180,000 tons. Our annual consumption is more than 200,000 tons a year, and the annual production of the Amboanio cement works is 65,ooo tons.

One must nevertheless still expect some slight difficulty for approximately 1 month, the time it will take the first delivery to arrive from the Soviet Union.

Let us emphasize that the public work areas that have used the greatest quantity of cement in recent years have been those of the CUR [expansion unknown] and those for the hydroelectric projects of Andekaleka and of Namorona.

[Article by A.R.: "Satisfactory OMNIS Samplings"]

[Text] Plan for Intensive drillings for the 1981's.

So--if everything continues to go well!--Madagascar in a few years will have its own source of petroleum energy. A pilot factory will begin to operate in northwest Madagascar. Will one begin with the bituminous sandstone of Bemolanga or with the heavy oil of Tsimiroro? That is part of the research that OMNIS (National Military Office for Strategic Industries) is still carrying out and which would be very difficult to answer now.

In any case, in Bemolanga as in Tsimiroro, one is beginning to "meticulously calculate" results. One is trying to make them as profitable as possible. The present oil field covers an area of 400 square kilometers. It is relatively small on a map, since Bemolanga and Tsimiroro are just barely dots, Fivondronana de Morafenobe having only 13,000 persons. The region also has a "fine" future in cattle raising--to say nothing of the economic prospects that will be provided by long-term semi-industrial, then industrial, exploitation of the oil field of black gold that we announced yesterday, the positive side of the feasibility studies undertaken up to now.

Let us remember that the bituminous sandstone reserves amount to about 2 to 3 billion tons; that of heavy oil, 9 billion tons. That is enough to take care of our consumption for several generations, our consumption now being 600,000 tons, whereas from the beginning of the first months of operation of the pilot factory in question, the latter will produce 2 million tons! What, then, will be done with the rest? We have mentioned this; it will be for exportation.

Samplings

The conversion processes foreseen for bituminous sandstone are of West German origin (LURGI). But some agents are still waiting for the results of the laboratory tests that are being carried out by the Knokner Industrie Anylagen of Duisbourg (FRG). In any case, the analysis of samplings of 50 tons of bituminous sandstone has been completed, with satisfactory results. In the light of the latter, the oil field will soon be developed.

Colonel Hubert Andrianasolo, head of OMNIS, who up to now has observed complete silence regarding this matter, told us Wednesday of his satisfaction, at least with respect to the present stage of the work.

"Of course," he told us,"the oil fields have been in existence for a long time and research has even been done on them. The revolutionary government decided to resume this in 1975 for several reasons. First, in view of the importance of oil fields, it was necessary to exploit them, all the more since the world situation in the matter of energy is such, at present and in the years to come, that it was necessary to consider other sources of energy. Moreover, one is now mastering world technology."

Throughout the world, each country is trying to get along as best it can in the face of the present energy crisis. The biggest ones are calling for atomic stations. But one immediately experiences a general reaction: one thinks of the military purposes that such equipment can also perform. After all, maybe one is in fact thinking of killing two birds with one stone. In any case, young countries like Madagascar will never be able to launch into such an exploit. Solar energy is exploitable by us, too. One thus understands the entire importance of Boky Mena's passage with respect to the "Great Powers of the Year 2,000" (...)

Alas, Soon the Rainy Season!...

Very satisfied with present results, OMNIS next year will undertake an intensive drilling project. In yesterday's issue we spoke of the measures to be taken as of now regarding attitudes. Others also deserve to be taken into consideration, especially with respect to means of communication.

Fortunately, OMNIS has completed the present stage of its research before the arrival of the rainy season. The road between the Tsimiroro and Bemolanga camps will hardly be passable then. It will even be cut off in several places. At present, only powerful vehicles can "drive through" the Manambao river, which is now at its lowest point of the year. Once the rains come,the OMNIS camps will purely and simply be cut off from the rest of the region.

One now understands the skepticism that has been felt ever since one first spoke of "Malagasy" oil and looked for it; skepticism continues to be manifested. In any case, in the months to come an official confirmation will be made in Haut-Lieu. It will certainly be followed by the first...barrel of crude oil. Not right away, of course, but as one says: If you live long enough, you'll see. And to repeat one of our expressions: "Ny aina no mateza!"

DEVELOPED SOCIALIST COUNTRIES MUST HELP SOCIALIST LDC'S

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 15 Sep 80 p 1

[Article by Leite Vasconcelos: "A New Dimension to Cooperation"]

[Text] The study of the development of cooperation between Mozambique and other socialist countries was the main objective of the party and state visits that President Samora Machel made to Romania and the GDR.

In his speeches, President Samora Machel clearly defined the close connection between cooperation of socialist countries and the struggle of peoples for liberty, progress and peace.

The first socialist country was set up in Europe and Asia. The peoples' victory over fascism enabled socialism to expand on these two continents. In the 60's, the first socialist country in Latin America appeared. In the 70's, the first African socialist countries rose up and the socialist zone grew larger in Asia with the victories of Vietnam, Laos and Kampuchea.

As President Samora Machel stated, we live in an era when true socialism is expanding to four continents, which is irrefutable proof of the inevitability of socialism and, at the same time, raises new questions about its development.

Today, the socialist countries show great differences in their respective stages of development. While there are socialist countries being established which have to overcome underdevelopment, others are in the phase of advanced socialism.

It is precisely the former--those which have to overcome underdevelopment--which are forced to confront directly imperialism's aggression; it refuses to accept the irreversibility of socialism in countries which, for the most part, have recently emerged from harsh struggles of national liberation. Often, the confrontation between socialism and capitalism becomes more intense here. The new countries are forced to face imperialist invasions and military aggressions.

In this context, cooperation between the new socialist countries and the advanced socialist countries should be established--as the Mozambique head of state said--on the basis of the intransigent defense of the expansion of socialism since "socialism which defends itself, expands."

Cooperation among socialist countries on the basis of this principle will help the new socialist countries win the harsh confrontation with imperialism and, in the field of international economic relations, will also express the superiority of the socialism over capitalism.

President Samora Machel emphasized another, very relevant aspect of the expansion of socialism on four continents. This process holds new prospects for strengthening the economic capacity of socialism in the world.

The existence of true socialism on four continents facilitates cooperation among socialist countries so that every advantage can be gained by combining all resources and existing economic complements. In other words, the socialist countries are now in a position to end imperialism's economic blackmail maneuvres about food. The establishment of a new, powerful, modern and mechanized agricultural base in new socialist countries will thus be an important weapon for imposing a new international economic order and reforming decisively the economic ability of all socialist countries.

In this light, President Samora Machel described cooperation between new socialist countries and countries of advanced socialism as "complete cooperation on the defenses of socialism and peace."

This is not unilateral aid. At the meeting held at Varna, thousands of people present enthusiastically applauded the Mozambique head of state when he said that "Mozambique owes no debt to Bulgaria since we are both aiding the forces fighting for the same objectives."

MACHEL, HUNGARY'S LOSONCZI EXCHANGE BANQUET SPEECHES

Machel Speech at State Banquet

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 23 Sep 80 p 3

[Speech by President Samora Machel: "We Count on the Support and the Solidarity of the Other Socialist Countries"]

[Text] President Samora Machel at the state banquet given to his Hungarian counterpart. Last night, during the state banquet given for Hungarian President Pal Losonczi, the Mozambican Chief of State delivered the following address.

Esteemed and Respected Comrade Pal Losonczi, Chairman of the Presidential Council of the People's Republic of Hungary, Esteemed members of the government of the People's Republic of Hungary,

Comrades and friends,

Ladies and gentlemen,

It is with tremendous joy that we welcome the stay among us of so important a delegation from the government of the People's Republic of Hungary. It is always with satisfaction that we receive our friends in our homeland, those who, although they may live on different latitudes, I know, are building and developing socialism.

In this area of confrontation on the African continent, important and decisive battles are underway today for the conquest of liberty and the emancipation of the peoples.

We are particularly happy in this battle to be aware of the warmth of your solidarity as friends and comrades so that peace and justice may triumph and so that the last bastions of racism, discrimination, and oppression may be torn down.

Welcome, therefore, to the People's Republic of Mozambique.

Comrade President,

In Mozambique we today face the difficult challenge of overcoming economic backwardness and dependence to build a prosperous and free state for ourselves. Guided by our Marxist-Leninist Vanguard Party, the FRELIMO Party, we are ready to wipe out underdevelopment in Mozambique by 1990. We are ready to end the situation that was left to us by colonialism, building a socialist fatherland in this part of Africa. We want to build a country with an advanced economy.

The obstacles facing us on this mission are very great.

But we accept the challenge, knowing that imperialism, particularly in southern Africa, will do everything to divert us from the goals we have set for ourselves.

We are not alone in this fight. We have the support and the brotherly solidarity of the other socialist countries which, I know, are committing themselves on this long road of the struggle for total liberation.

On all continents, billions of human beings are involved in the development of more just societies.

We want to use our resources and potential correctly, we want to combine them, we want to do this by establishing a climate of economic complementarity and interdependence for the benefit of our peoples, for the strengthening of socialism and peace.

The level of cooperation achieved between the People's Republic of Mozambique and the Republic of Hungary is already considerable.

It is with satisfaction that we recall the happy moments of brotherhood, of comradeship which we spent in your company, Comrade Losonczi, during the visit of a delegation of our party and our government to Hungary in June 1978. The discussions held at that time with Comrade Janos Kadar, first secretary of the Hungarian Socialist Worker Party, enabled us to outline common viewpoints and to develop our mutual knowledge on the realities and objectives in which the peoples of our countries are engaged. The agreements concluded at that time are of great importance to our relations.

We are certain that the visit that Comrade Pal Losonczi is making to Mozambique will indelibly mark the start of a new chapter in the already fruitful cooperation existing between our two countries.

Comrade President,

Throughout the world we today observe the advance of the impetuous torrent consisting of the forces of liberty and progress, defeating imperialism, colonialism, neocolonialism, racism, apartheid, and Zionism.

The gains already achieved by the peoples of Africa, Asia, and Latin America are a stimulating oxygen for the new struggles and combat of the popular masses against exploitation, oppression, and discrimination.

The victory of the people of Zimbabwe constituted a victory of all peoples who love peace and progress and introduced a new and unstoppable dynamic impetus in the total and complete liberation of southern Africa. In Namibia, in South Africa, in the Sahara, in East Timor, in Palestine, in Bolivia, and in El Salvador, the liberation struggle continues with growing success.

This is also why there is a growing escalation of imperialism against the revolution, against peace and security. By attacking our peoples, by promoting misery and underdevelopment, by constantly carrying out insidious and brutal maneuvers, imperialism seeks to wipe out the revolutionary gains and check the total and complete liberation of the peoples.

This is why the unity of all revolutionary forces is an essential factor in the establishment of peace.

This is why internationalism which encompasses not just one but all struggles of the peoples is a permanent necessity in the construction of a new society.

Comrade President,

The struggle for peace, for peaceful coexistence, and for economic and social development is a fundamental constant feature in the foreign policy of our country. In this field, great successes were achieved through the consistent action of the socialist countries and the democratic and progressive forces throughout the world.

The current manifestations of imperialism's aggressiveness against the socialist system run counter to the tendency for detente and harm the overall desires of humanity. The arms race and economic blackmail do not serve the peoples, nor do they serve the cause of development and peace.

In Mozambique we stand behind the efforts undertaken by the socialist countries in terms of strengthening the development of peace and cooperation.

Unity between our parties, peoples, and states constitutes a solid bloc in the construction of new values, in the construction of prosperity and happiness in our homelands.

Comrade President,

Allow me to propose a toast to you:

To the health of Comrade Janos Kadar, first secretary of the Central Committee of the Hungarian Socialist Worker Party,

To the health of Comrade Pal Losonczi, chairman of the Presidential Council of the People's Republic of Hungary and Comrade Anna Losonczi;

To the unalterable friendship between the Mozambican people and the Hungarian people,

To brotherhood between the FRELIMO Party and the Hungarian Socialist Worker Party,

To cooperation between the People's Republic of Mozambique and the People's Republic of Hungary,

To the victory of socialism and peace,

The struggle continues!

[Speech by President Pal Losonczi of the People's Republic of Hungary: "We Stand With the African Peoples in the Fight for the Consolidation of Independence"]

[Text] Responding to the address by President Samora Machel yesterday, during the state banquet, Hungarian President Pal Losonczi made the following remarks:

Esteemed Comrade Machel,

Esteemed Comrade Graca Machel,

Dear Comrades,

Allow me first of all to express my sincere gratitude for the warm words of brotherly greeting which are a living expression of the close relationships that were created between the People's Republic of Hungary and the People's Republic of Mozambique, between the Hungarian Socialist Worker Party and the FRELIMO, between our peoples.

It is with great expectations that we arrive in your beautiful homeland. It is a source of great joy to us to be able personally to familiarize ourselves with the life of your people, your daily struggle to build a better future, for the construction of socialist society. We came here with feelings of sincere friendship and we are convinced that our current meeting will contribute to the development of our relations.

The Hungarian people with great attention and sympathy followed the struggle of the Mozambican patriots to shake off the colonial yoke, it supported it actively, just as it is today likewise supporting our Mozambican friends who, after winning their independence, have set themselves the objective of socialist development. We are convinced that the Mozambican people will attain its magnificent objective. We know and we highly appreciate the gains achieved by the Mozambican people under the leadership of the FRELIMO Party in the grandiose struggle for liberation, and during the 5 years since the conquest of independence.

The Third Congress of the FRELIMO, the creation of the Marxist-Leninist revolutionary vanguard party of the working and peasant classes of Mozambique was hailed by us as an event of particular importance. It is our conviction that the application of the teachings of scientific socialism to your specific conditions, as well as the creation of the organized and united leading force constitute the guarantee of new successes for the Mozambican people.

In May 1978, our people received the delegation of the FRELIMO Party and of the People's Republic of Mozambique, headed by your comrade President Samora Machel, with much affection. Your visit to Hungary gave us the opportunity to have the first personal meeting between the leaders of our parties and states; it was a step of special significance on the road of the development of our cooperation and it opened up new prospects in the expansion of our relations on the party and government levels.

It has been more than 35 years that the Hungarian people embarked upon the road of socialist construction. Important successes were achieved during that time, historical tasks were accomplished, and at this time we are building the developed socialist society. The 12th Congress of our party, held in March of this year, ratified our policy which was approved and supported by our entire people. In the meantime, our road has not been easy either. It was necessary to overcome many difficulties and problems but we were always able to count on the solidarity of our brother parties, on the internationalist aid of the socialist countries.

Dear Comrade Machel,

Comrades,

The favorable changes which have taken place in international policy demonstrate the advantages which detente offers to peaceful construction and social progress.

At the same time, during the most recent period, the imperialist states and their allies are trying to turn the wheels of history back. The increase in their aggressiveness is accompanied by alarming phenomena in international life. They have launched a concentrated offensive against the gains of detente, they want to force the world once again into an arms race which would be even more dangerous and costly than all the earlier ones; they are about to intervene openly in the internal affairs of independent states under the pretext that they belong to their sphere of vital interests.

We believe that one cannot allow international relations once again to be dominated by these medieval habits of violence, threat, pressure, and blackmail.

This is why we assign great importance to the union of the forces of socialism and progress. The guarantee in overcoming current difficulties, in our opinion, springs from strengthening our alliance with the Soviet Union, with the forces of the communist and worker movement, with the national liberation movement, with the countries that have chosen the way of socialism.

But our allegiance is not directed against any other people. The objective we must promote--in the interest of all peoples--together with all forces that feel a responsibility for peace, for the future of humanity, is the cause of peace, disarmament, detente, progress, and cooperation.

At this time, the African continent has become one of the most important fronts in the worldwide struggle between socialism and capitalism. The victories of the people of Mozambique, Angola, and Ethiopia, as well as the other peoples, recently, the proclamation of independence of the Republic of Zimbabwe, the unquenchable struggle of the peoples of Namibia and South Africa for their national liberation have brought about profound changes and created a new situation on the continent. The development toward socialism of ever more African countries is a fact that creates enthusiasm, and their struggle for a better future is an important element in the international class struggle.

The changes which are taking place on the African continent, as well as throughout the world, profoundly worry international imperialism and its allies because they see their political, economic, and military influence threatened. To prevent the success of the struggle for independence, for social progress, the consolidation of the African countries, to prevent the final victory of the national liberation movements on the continent, and the elimination of the last bastions of colonialism and apartheid, they do not hesitate to resort to all methods, from neocolonialist penetration to brutal military intervention. But these aspirations will be frustrated by the best sons and daughters of Africa, by the progressive peoples and states on the continent who have the total support of the countries of the socialist community and of the solidarity of the international progressive forces.

Faithful to its internationalist foreign policy, the People's Republic of Hungary considers the progressive states of Africa its allies. Our people, as well as the other peoples of the socialist countries, believe that it is their duty to aid and support their struggle in all possible forms. Totally and without any reservations we stand side by side with the African countries which are struggling to conquer and consolidate their national independence.

In the course of our current visit we are likewise guided by the objective of strengthening brotherly cooperation between our parties, peoples, and states in all areas. All conditions exist for achieving this because our peoples are very close to each other; our principles and ideas are common; we fight on the same front against imperialism, neocolonialism, for peace and social progress. Our conversations that were held so far demonstrate that this desire, this determination are shared by you. I am convinced that our mission will be accomplished and will contribute to the expansion of our relations.

In the spirit of these thoughts I now raise my glass to drink to the health of Comrade Samora Machel and his esteemed spouse, the health of all Mozambican comrades and friends, the further development of our cooperation and solidarity, for friendship and cooperation between the Hungarian Socialist Worker Party and the FRELIMO Party, for friendship and cooperation between the peoples of Hungary and Mozambique.

INDUSTRIALIZED SOCIALIST COUNTRIES MUST OFFER ASSISTANCE

Maputo TEMPO in Portuguese 21 Sep 80 p 2

[Text] As we go to press on this edition, President Samora Machel is still in the process of visiting some socialist countries in Europe, especially Bulgaria, Romania, and the GDR.

In his speeches and remarks, the Mozambican chief of state emphasized the issue of cooperation between the socialist countries as a fundamental point and as a guarantee of victory of socialism against imperialism. The expansion of the liberated zone of humanity is inseparable--he asserted--from the expansion of cooperation between the more advanced countries which have chosen the way of development and the younger countries which have opted for the noncapitalist way.

This thesis has real political foundations: the visit by the Mozambican supreme leader comes at a moment when the imperialist forces are increasingly resorting to the use of military force and threat in order to impose or try to impose their interests over the will of the peoples. This is happening in Bolivia where American military specialists are helping the coupist forces carry out the massive murder of the people in revolt; this is happening in Africa where there is stepped-up collaboration between imperialism and the African reactionary forces, especially through the establishment of American bases and the provision of port facilities for the United States Navy; in the Indian Ocean and in the Persian Gulf there is a growing imperialist military presence which, in order to acquire what it calls "defense of the petroleum supply lines," seeks to create an environment of instability among the progressive riparian countries, especially Mozambique, Madagascar, Tanzania, the Seychelles, and others. The same is true of Ethiopia, Iran, and the progressive Arab countries.

This is why all of the words spoken by President Samora Machel are so relevant. More than anybody else, it must be the advanced socialist countries that must support the young countries that have adopted the Marxist option, such as Mozambique, not only to improve their economy but also to meet the imperialist threat which in recent times--after the excitement springing from the defeat in Vietnam--is becoming more and more aggressive and determined militarily to resolve issues to which there can only be a political solution. Here we might mention the failure of the attempted liberation of the American hostages as a result of a military adventure that misfired.

Fortunately for Mozambique, socialist support has been a fact which has existed for a long time, even before the existence of the RPM [People's Republic of Mozambique] as an independent country. It is this support, this collaboration which the Mozambican chief of state wants to see expanded and to take on a new quality above all now that the challenge to underdevelopment has been taken up.

MUTUAL ADVANTAGES TO BE DERIVED FROM COOPERATION WITH BRAZIL

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 31 Aug 80 p 15

[Article by Beatriz Schiller: "Mozambique Describes Ties With Brazil"]

[Text] New York--In an exclusive interview with JORNAL DO BRASIL, the Mozambique Minister of Foreign Affairs Joaquim Chissano stated in New York that, after the visit of the Brazilian minister of foreign affairs, Saraiva Guerreiro, to Mozambique in June 1980--"when we discussed our views in depth--it was clear that the rapproachement between Mozambique and Brazil was based on the definition of clear objectives of our economic, cultural, political and social cooperation."

Chissano, who took part in the UN Special Assembly on Development--New International Economic Order--there announced the formation of an integrated economic zone, a sort of common market of the front line nations of southern Africa. He also said Mozambique would further increase its imports of Brazilian products.

Cooperation

The Mozambique minister of foreign affairs stressed that the rapproachement of Brazil and Mozambique was not based on the common language. He believed that it was to the Brazilian Government's advantage and that of former colonies like Brazil to establish relations with independent, former colonies based on principles having nothing in common with the groups set up by the former colonial powers.

"The first Brazilian ambassador to present credentials in Mozambique was very respectful of our criteria for relations and prevented Brazil from assuming the views of the old colonial countries about grouping by language. Language is such an isolated element that it cannot serve as a basis for our cooperation," said Chissano.

He said that Brazil currently exports tractors, automobile parts, building materials, clothing, textiles and a wide variety of manufactured products to Mozambique. "Last year, our imports of Brazilian products increased a great deal. During the Brazilian foreign minister's visit, there were negotiations about Brazilian participation in agricultural and industrial projects, in which Brazilian technicians and technology will play an important role," said Chissano.

He stressed Mozambique's interest in distributing goods and in having a planned economy. "However, regional cooperation and cooperation with countries of other continents do not require imposition of systems."

Economic Strategy

At the United Nations, the Mozambique foreign minister presented the project of the countries of southern Africa to establish an integrated economic zone in which those countries--Angola, Mozambique, Zimbabwe, Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland, Zambia and Tanzania--would increase subregional cooperation to achieve the integrated development of their economies.

Chissano did not accept the designation of common market for southern Africa, preferring "not to label the integration of economies in the region. It will be a model in which all will cooperate as equals, for practical results." He said the economic model which is being established in this African region is that of interdependence.

The political goal of this economic strategy, stated Chissano, is to combat the economic dependence of all those countries on South Africa, thus fighting against apartheid. Close cooperation between the countries of southern Africa will bring about a "drastic cut in cooperation with South Africa, forcing it, because of that development, to make domestic changes more rapidly," he said.

On the subject of Mozambique's relations with the United States, Chissano pointed out that Washington believes that the withdrawal of Cubans from Angola is necessary for normalization with certain African countries. "Mozambique does not cooperate with the United States because of the embargo of the North American Congress. It accuses us of having ties with the Soviets and socialist countries and views us as a satellite of the Soviet Union. We do not understand this attitude. The United States has a much greater Soviet presence in its country than Mozambique does. They cooperate much more with the Soviets than we do," stated Chissano.

DEBRAY FINDS SIMILARITIES BETWEEN CUBAN, MOZAMBICAN REVOLUTIONS

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 4 Sep 80 p 3

[Excerpts] "The center of Latin American revolution is currently located in Central America," Regis Debray said yesterday morning during a conference with journalists and students at the National Journalism School. According to Debray, important foci in that center are Nicaragua, El Salvador and Guatemala, which are undergoing intense social upheaval.

"The Cuban experience is central to the Central American revolutions," said Debray. Offering some thoughts on the Cuban revolution, he said there were important similarities to the Mozambican revolution. In both instances, the revolutionaries "discovered" Marxism by practicing it; the leadership parties in Cuba and Mozambique emerged from the armies of liberation; and in both countries the socialist path of economic, social and cultural development was announced 2 years after the revolutionary forces took power.

Return to Paris

The distinguished French intellectual returned to Paris late yesterday afternoon, after an 8-day visit to the People's Republic of Mozambique [RPM].

During his stay in Mozambique, the French personality met with party and government officials and also visited some locales of economic importance to our country.

Debray was accompanied by Swiss academic Jean Ziegler, and was here at the invitation of the Ministry of Information to study the process of building a people's democracy in this country, which was recently liberated from the colonial yoke.

Jean Ziegler will remain in the RPM for a few more days.

AMNESTIED PRISONERS ARE REINTEGRATING INTO SOCIETY

Maputo TEMPO in Portuguese 21 Sep 80 pp 12-13

[Article by Tomas Vieira Mario: "M'sauize: The Future Has Begun"]

> [Excerpts] A vast offensive with two main objectives was launched a short time ago in the town of M'sauize, in Mavago. It is a part of the development programs of the communal villages in this district which has been designated as a pilot district in Niassa and which coincides with the start of the rehabilitation of former deserters, traitors, and undisciplined individuals who were amnestied by President Samora Machel in October. Here is a report from Niassa on this subject.

Activity among inhabitants in the area now resembles big city activity, amid dense forests which still surround the village. There are many people in M'sauize now. The movements of vehicles and machinery make us forget the monotony which sometimes prevails in rural life.

Work has begun on the rehabilitation of former traitors, deserters, and undisciplined violators of the Mozambique Liberation Front who were amnestied by President of the Republic Samora Machel during his historical visit to Niassa last October. As we know, these individuals are at the Chiputo reeducation center in the district of Majune.

The start of their rehabilitation in the communal villages in the M'sauize area coincided with the launching of a broad offensive designed to develop these rural communities. This is an effort which involves various agencies of the province, especially the Niassa executive program coordinator, the provincial commission for communal villages, the provincial directorates of agriculture and public works and housing, as well as others.

These are men who are being integrated now into the communal villages around the seat of the area, in Chilolo and Namacambale in that same area.

On Former Rehabilitees

The integration of individuals coming from Chiputo began in July of last year at which time they first started arriving in this locality.

The planning behind their initial activities of course revolved around the construction of their homes since they were going to be inhabitants of the sections of the villages to which they were assigned and that meant that they would have to keep in step with the methods and organization prevailing there at that time.

Talking about the process of his integration during the period of 2 weeks following his arrival, that same individual told us that "we never had any complaints from any of them about the local people nor did the local folk complain about them. Life is progressing here and there is even collaboration on the part of the local people in many things."

In M'sauize we also had an opportunity to talk to some of those persons about their life during this phase of getting started all over again. Botao Daniel, originally from Cabo Delgado, told us: "First of all, I would like to express my appreciation for the step taken by His Excellency, President Samora Machel in giving us our freedom. All of us really received that decision with much joy, even with great joy."

It is important to emphasize finally that the program calls for the integration of 700 families of those individuals into the three communal villages in the locality of M'sauize, that is, Chilolo, M'sauize, and Namacambale.

PROPAGATION OF SOCIALISM IS ITS BEST DEFENSE

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 23 Sep 80 pp 1,5

[Text] The official state visit which President Samora Machel made to Bulgaria, Romania, and the GDR--socialist countries in Europe--ended with highly positive results which raised relations between the peoples of Mozambique and those countries to a qualitatively higher level. Qualitatively higher in political terms and qualitatively higher in economic terms, as revealed by the important agreements and documents signed between our socialist state and those states in socialist Europe.

The successes achieved in the conversations that were held are fundamentally due to two factors constituting the basic points of our identity: our past as subjugated and oppressed people who fought for their liberation and our present struggle for the happiness of our peoples, for peace and liberty, in a word, for socialism.

Socialism confronts the threat of imperialism on many fronts on the four continents where it has already established itself--Asia, America, Africa, and Europe; imperialism carries out direct or indirect aggression through its agents or through attempts to perpetuate the economic dependence of the less developed countries.

In this context, the defense of socialism demands unity among the countries which have adopted its way of development and this necessarily involves efficient economic cooperation which will enable the countries with an underdeveloped economy to liberate themselves from economic dependence on imperialism.

The expansion of socialism and its consolidation therefore are conditions for its defense.

This is not a matter of asking or giving aid. This is a matter of cooperating with mutual advantages. This is a matter of intelligently combining the resources of all countries and their complementary aspects. This involves socialism in general, whose establishment on four continents confirms its historical inevitability.

The option for socialism is not confirmed by words. It is confirmed by concrete work, by sacrifices made in the struggle against misery, against hunger and nakedness, against underdevelopment; it is strengthened by concrete participation in the liberation of the peoples, in the struggle for peace.

The positions assumed by the Mozambicans in the international arena and, respectively, by Bulgaria, Romania, and the GDR--countries recently visited by President Samora Machel--are essentially common. As their highest leaders said on various occasions, this was also a point which led to a greater approach and better mutual knowledge.

In the meantime, Mozambique has just received Pal Losonczi, chairman of the Presidential Council of the People's Republic of Hungary. His visit is also a part of the strengthening of relationships of friendship and cooperation between the People's Republic of Mozambique and other, more developed socialist countries. Both Samora Machel and Pal Losonczi yesterday, during the state banquet given for the Hungarian leader, declared that they were in favor of greater development of economic cooperation based on mutual advantage.

In all of these contacts, socialism grows stronger and strengthens its base in the permanent, worldwide confrontation with capitalism and imperialism.

WORLD LUTHERAN FEDERATION REPRESENTATIVE EXPRESSES SATISFACTION

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 2 Sep 80 p 3

[Report on press conference with Geoffrey Mawalla Sawaya, World Lutheran Federation representative, in Mozambique, date not given]

[Excerpts] "Our main goal is to create something, with what little we have, to help the needy. This country suffered the Limpopo River floods in 1977, and, in 1978, the Zambezi floods and a cyclone in Nampula, in which 519,000 people were made homeless. After independence, during the process of national reconstruction, the Mozambican government also had to assist about 150,000 Zimbabwean refugees. These, then, are the major concerns of the federation here, and this is why we are in Mozambique," Geoffrey Mawalla Sawaya, representative of the World Lutheran Federation, said during an interview with representatives of the national news media.

The World Lutheran Federation is an association of Lutheran churches throughout the world. Created by a constituent assembly in July 1947 in Switzerland, the organization now has about 17 million affiliates, with 99 permanent member churches from 59 countries.

Replying to a question put by NOTICIAS regarding the activity of the church in a society such as ours, the World Lutheran Federation representative said: "Actually, I am quite pleased. When I arrived, as you know, we had no church here in the federation, but the government received us very well and gave us a house. We had no transportation, but the government provided us with transportation; it made it possible...They presented us to the Ministry of Education and Culture, the Health Ministry, the National Center for Refugees and Liberation Movements, and various other groups in areas of interest to us for our activities. During this process we have felt like brothers. I have never felt like a foreigner because, when any event came up, we were invited. I visited the provinces, where I learned about all the projects to be carried out. We talked freely and directly. I never felt as if I were not a member of FRELIMO; on the contrary, I feel almost like a party member, and this makes me happy," said Sawaya.

Material Support

"Why are you, a religious organization, giving importance to material support and not just to spiritual matters?"

The question arose because this institution is involved in various activities connected not only with spiritual well-being but also, and above all, with the physical well-being of people, regardless of their faith. Sawaya answered frankly.

"I don't know anything about the other churches. We certainly cooperate and work together, but it is hard to know about anyone's spiritual life. There is a Christian Council of Mozambique, but I don't know how they work. We have a good working relationship with them, but their functions are different from ours, and they have their own way of leading the people. We of the Lutheran Federation know, first of all, that there can be no soul without a body, leading us to the conclusion, on the other hand, that where there is life there is a soul. We are well aware that the body requires sun, air, water, food, a home, to sustain life, and only then can we think about the soul, because if there is no body, there is no life."

Geoffrey Mawalla Sawaya is 56 years old, and is a native of Tanzania. He worked with the Tanzanian police for about 30 years. At the police training school, he took part in the military training of many FRELIMO soldiers who passed through the camps of Mutuaro, Newala, Chidudo, Songea and, later, Chiwindi. From Songea he went to the Police General Headquarters as its director.

In 1969, when Eduardo Chivambo Mondlane, our first president, was basely assassinated, Sawaya conducted the investigation of the case. After a lengthy investigation that touched several countries, it was concluded that the bombs had come from Maputo, then Lourenco Marques, although the PIDE [Portuguese International and State Defense Police] made every effort to hide the fact.

Sawaya left the police force in 1974 and returned to his birthplace to farm. While he was there, the World Lutheran Federation asked for his collaboration, and since then he has devoted himself to this activity.

PORTUGUESE PUBLISHING COOPERATION--The Portuguese firm CDL [Central Book Distributor] will sign protocols of agreement on cooperation with INLD [National Book and Record Institute] and Tempografica about printing and joint publication of books, business matters, training of cadres and technical assistants, and bibliographic information, said Mario Lino, CDL director general, in a meeting with the media yesterday afternoon. "We agree to let Mozambique workers serve apprenticeships at no cost in our offices," he stressed, indicating CDL's readiness. This cooperation also includes sending Portuguese experts to help organize the INLD and to print books ordered by Mozambique within the agreed limits. At the meeting, Mario Lino--who was accompanied by Maria Emilia Saraiva, an official of CDL's export/import department, and Francisco Melo, director of the publishing houses AVANTE and CAMINHO--said that during his approximately 3-week stay in Maputo, he had contacts with the Central Committee secretary for ideological work of the FRELIMO Party, Jorge Rebelo; the governor of the Bank of Mozambique, Sergio Vieira; the Eduardo Mondlane University, Tempografica and CEDIMO and agreed to send the latter information regularly about books published in Portugal. The CDL delegation and the director of the AVANTE and CAMINHO came to Mozambique to help put on an exhibit of Portuguese books at FACIM [Maputo International Fair], at INLD's invitation. In the pavillion of that Mozambique firm, 1,500 titles of the 27 publishing houses represented by CDL are displayed. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 12 Sep 80 p 2] 9479

AIR CONNECTION WITH PARIS--During the talks held between the French UTA [Air Transportation Union] and LAM [Mozambique Airlines] on economic relations and promoting air traffic, representatives of the two companies discussed LAM's direct participation in the future in flying the Maputo-Paris route. Meanwhile, representatives of the French Government and UTA who traveled on the inaugural Paris-Maputo flight have already visited the port of Maputo. The delegations from the French Government and UTA have been in our country since last Wednesday; they arrived in Maputo from Paris on the plane inaugurating air service between our capital and Paris--which is not to say this was the first flight made since others had already occurred. LETTER FROM STUDENT IN GDR--As we know, the party and the government mobilized the young people to become the future cadres. We are here, in the GDR, directly in Wernigerode-Haus Buchenberg. We left Mozambique on 30 June 1980 at 0845. We stopped over in Angola and Nigeria. The INTERFLUG [East German Airline] aircraft landed at the International Airport of Berlin, capital of the GDR, at 0220. We were warmly received by our enterprise officials and some of our Mozambican brothers. Next we organized groups. Our group consists of 50 members. We are organized according to cultural, sports, and occupational activities. In sports, we formed a team--the Red Star of Mozambique--which is what we call it; to begin with, we had a friendly game with our German brothers in this city and it ended in a tie, 2:2. The purpose of sports is to contribute to peace, to the development of friendly relations and understanding between people. Please excuse all the space taken up by this letter and the poorly-written Portuguese. Revolutionary greetings to the entire Mozambican people and good success in your work. Antonio Aibo Mpelia, A. TIES WITH FRENCH AIRLINE--Continuing the program drawn up between UTA [Air Transportation Union] (French Air Transport Company) and LAM (Air Lines of Mozambique) with a view to the establishment of economic relations and the promotion of air traffic, contacts have already been held between representatives of these two air line companies with a view to future direct participation by LAM in services between Maputo and Paris. The newspaper NOTICIAS, in its 12 September issue, reported that the representatives of the French government and of UTA, who came on the inaugural Paris-Maputo flight made recently, on that day visited Ponta Malongane, as part of a program of visits to places of tourist interest in the country, so as to familiarize themselves with the country's potential in this field. SOUTH AFRICANS AID LAUNCH SEARCH--For 5 days, a team of South African divers took part in the second phase of operations to locate the pilots' launch that disappeared last month in the Bay of Maputo. The search ended last Sunday, although it failed to detect any remains of the ill-fated craft. Meanwhile, a spokesman for the Mozambican side in the operations told NOTICIAS that the team of professional South African divers should return in a few days to continue the search in a wider area of the bay, using a different type of equipment. From the results to date, it can be concluded that the accident (disappearance) was not the result of a collision or grounding, since there is no obstacle in the area, either on the surface or the bottom, that is not properly marked. Even if this had been the case, the launch would have been damaged, which would make it easier to detect the reasons for its disappearance. STATE PAYING OFF DEBTS TO PRIVATE SECTOR

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 27-28 Sep 80 p 3

[Text] Seven and a half billion have already been allotted for this.

The state has decided to pay off the debts that it has contracted with private industries, thanks to having received a portion of the French government's financial assistance at the end of the most recent visit of the prime minister in Paris.

Ten of the 21 billion 500 million will serve to finance investment projects, while the rest, made up of a bonded loan of 4 billion and a STABEX [expansion unknown] advance of 7.5 billion, will make it possible to settle the debts of the state that date back to the 1979-80 administrative period.

As a matter of fact, during the 1979-80 administrative period, the treasury accumulated arrears on the order of several billion because of very inadequate revenues due to a decrease in agricultural production and to the resultant slackening of economic activities.

The methods of payment were defined in a decree of the minister of finance and economy on 13 August 1980, which established an advisory committee for that specific purpose and in agreement with trade union groups and the National Association of Chambers of Commerce.

This committee met twice: in August and September.

At the first meeting, only the 4 billion from the bonded loan were available. They were divided among the various creditors of the state according to the amount of their credit.

The state's indebtedness with respect to the private sector is composed of three elements: debts ordered for payment, debts in the process of an order for payment, and those not incurred through usual methods.

The regularly incurred and ordered for payment debts on 20 August amounted to 6 billion; and those in the process of being ordered for payment, to 1.9 billion, that is, a partial debt of 7.9 billion.

At its first meeting, the committee had decided to pay this to the extent of available funds: that is, 4 billion, according to the following bill book:

- Immediate and entire settlement of those debts totalling 20 million, or less;

- Settlement of 50 percent of the debts totalling between 20 and 50 million;

- Settlement of 25 percent of a total greater than 50 million.

At its second meeting, in September, the advance from STABEX having been received, the committee decided to settle the balance of debts exceeding 20 million and debts that were in the process of an order for payment and that reached maturity. To that end 4 billion were set apart from the said advance.

In all, 8 billion will have been allotted for payment of the arrears of the state for demandable payment of debts, estimated at 7.9 billion.

There remain available 3.5 billion, earmarked for the cancellation of the state's direct, regularly incurred debts, obligations that were incurred in previous budgets. At present the minister of finance and economy cannot estimate their total, because loan administrators generally did not make their totals known to him. That is why a circular has been addressed to the various administrative departments, asking them to specify the amount of both the regular and the unusual obligations incurred with private enterprises.

It must, however, be specified that only regular commitments constitute state debts for which payment is provided within the framework of French cooperation.

The same information was also requested of the private sector through the intermediary of the National Association of the Chambers of Commerce, of the Regional Chambers of Commerce, and of trade union groups.

Upon completion of this survey, the state will have a more precise idea of the debts that it has contracted and will take useful steps to settle them.

He points to the Third World's debts, energy and population problems as the main problems facing the "South." RENE'S FOREIGN VISITS STRENGTHEN COOPERATION

Victoria NATION in English 4 Oct 80 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text] In the NATION of September 20 we published an editorial to give our readers an idea of how much has been achieved in the course of various visits paid by President France Albert Rene to several countries. It has been pointed out, and rightly so, that we omitted many facts and figures, which only serve to prove the real point we were trying to make.

Indeed since June 1977 the President has made useful visits to many other countries with which we have close ties of friendship and cooperation. The President paid official visits to Britain and France, two of our traditional and long-standing friends who have financed several major development projects. The President also visited Tanzania and Madagascar, two countries with which the Seychelles are now cooperating very closely in regional, political and economic development.

President Rene also paid a state visit to the Libyan Jamahiriya and paved the way for very close cooperation between the Seychellois and Libyan peoples in several fields, and while attending the summit meeting of the Non-Aligned Movement in Havana last year, took the opportunity for talks with several leaders, including Dr. Fidel Castro, Prime Minister Maurice Bishop of Grenada, President Sekou Toure of Guinea, whose country is helping us with our education programme, and others.

Another visit which Mr Rene undertook was in early 1977 when he was still Prime Minister. This was to Australia, where he negotiated the agreement which resulted in educational aid and a gift of rice to Seychelles.

His latest visits, of course, were to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Socialist Republic of Vietnam when new cooperation accords were signed with the DPRK.

Many other countries are also cooperating with Seychelles in its development programme, thanks to the President's efforts, although he has not so far physically paid official or state visits there. These include Belgium, Czechoslovakia, the United States, the Soviet Union, the Federal Republic of Germany, the German Democratic Republic, Canada and others, whose support though it may not be readily visible to the public eye, is still much appreciated.

MINISTER FERRARI REPORTS ON FOREIGN CONTACTS

Victoria NATION in English 8 Oct 80 pp 1, 2

[Text]

STRONG SUPPORT for a proposal to regionalise the World Bank as the best way of helping small island states has been given by Dr. Maxime Ferrari, Minister of Planning and Development and Seychelles' Governor at the Bank.

Speaking at the annual meeting of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund in Washington, United States, Dr. Ferrari said regionalisation would enable Seychelles to know much more readily where its development projects stood and would help the Bank to understand the Republic's economic problems and priorities.

With a centralised institution at the other side of the world it is much harder for small nations to make their voices heard than if the Bank had a base in Nairobi, Dar es Salaam or Antananarivo, he added.

Minister Ferrari has now returned to Seychelles after a tour which also took him to France and Sweden for talks on various co-operation projects.

In Washington, he said Seychelles was enthusiastic about becoming a new member of the World Bank at a time when recognition of the need for radical changes in both the Bank and the IMF was gaining ground.

Seychelles hoped that these institutions would show themselves capable of adapting to the new economic realities in the world, said Dr. Ferrari.

He urged the World Bank not to forget that Seychelles, like other small island states, is now suffering from severe economic constraints even though it has advantages of a healthy climate, food for its people and a tourist industry.

Because of the nature of the country, with its poor soils making agriculture expensive, its shortage of natural resources and its enormous transport problems, the Seychelles' Government had opted for tourism as a means of creating jobs and earning foreign exchange to improve living standards. During the 1970s this policy had worked well, but the world recession was now making istelf felt with an 11 per cent decline in tourists so far in 1980, said Minister Ferrari.

The impact of such a decline is great and it is to deal with the problem of dependency on tourism that the Government is now struggling to diversify its economy into areas such as fishing, agriculture and small industries.

"This task is made more difficult when we have to raise loans on the international money markets at the present high interest rates," he said. Yet despite these problems the people of Seychelles were an optimistic people with great hopes for the future.

The Minister went on to say that Seychelles welcomed the proposals of the Brandt Report and agreed with its basic argument that an improvement in material conditions in the Third World is essential to the solution of so many problems facing the world today.

The present climate in the industrialised world of increasing protectionism and reduced flows of economic aid to developing countries can only be harmful to the future of the world economy, he added.

Finally Minister Ferrari urged that though Seychelles was small, it should not be overlooked.

"Sometimes small is beautiful and sometimes small is impossible. Seychelles is small, it is beautiful and we are working to make the best of our possibilities," he said.

In Paris Dr. Ferrari met the French Minister for Co-operation, Mr. Robert Galley, to review the French programme of aid to the tuna fishing industry and also to discuss help in the hotel training sector.

In Sweden he had talks on the setting up of an energy programme for Seychelles in which the Swedish Institute will help and also on community development projects including a centre for the handicapped.

CENTRAL COMMITTEE OFFICIALS VISIT DISTRICT BRANCHES

Victoria NATION in English 6 Oct 80 pp 1, 2

[Text]

MEETINGS were held this weekend between officials of the Central Executive Committee of the Seychelles People's Progressive Front and members of the district branches of Grand' Anse and Baie Ste. Anne (on Praslin) and La Digue.

The Central Committee delegation was led by the Secretary General Mr. Guy Sinon and it also included the Chairman of the People's Assembly, Mr. John Renaud, and the Chief Coordinator Mrs. Sylvette Frichot.

At La Digue's meeting, the Assistant Secretary General of the SPPF, Mr. Matthew Servina and the Organising Secretary, Mr. Ogilvie Berlouis, were also present.

During the meetings which were well-attended, the Front's policies were discussed and Mr. Guy Sinon took the opportunity to explain again some of the Party's aims. He spoke on the SPPF's plans to provide equal opportunities to everybody particularly in the education field, the National Youth Service, the provision of jobs, houses and Social Security to everybody and the importance of voluntary work.

The role of SPPF members and committee members in the society was also among the topics of discussion at the meetings. At all three meetings questions ranging from applications for housing assistance to the performance quality of the district chairman, were raised by the members. Some matters which included the popularity of the chairman in his or her district have been taken to the Central Executive Committee for consideration.

Mr. Sinon left Seychelles yesterday to represent the Front at important meetings of the political parties of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the German Democratic Republic.

Mrs. Sylvette Frichot and Mrs. Lidya Pillay are still on Praslin and La Digue to attend to other SPPF business in particular regarding the setting up of branches of the Seychelles Women's Association there.

FARMERS VOTE TO DISSOLVE SFM

Victoria NATION in English 9 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

MEMBERS of the Seychelles Farmers Marketing Cooperative Society Ltd (SFM) voted yesterday to dissolve this cooperative society. This means that the SFM will be officially dissolved at the end of this year when the Seychelles Commodity Company (SEYCOM) will ultimately take over the marketing of all agricultural produce in the country.

The members of the SFM, mostly farmers and producers of vegetables and meat, were meeting yesterday for their annual general meeting at the Pirates Arms Hotel when they voted to dissolve their cooperative society.

At the start of the meeting, the Minister for Planning and Development, Dr. Maxime Ferrari, who was once involved in cooperative business and who spoke as a guest, explained to farmers how they would benefit more from SEYCOM. He said SEYCOM intended to buy all agricultural produce and would find marketing outlets for the produce at pre-guaranteed prices. Whereas the SFM deals with only a few farmers who are members, the SEYCOM will deal with all farmers and will make sure that all their produce is bought. This new parastatal company has plans to help preserve agricultural produce in times of glut.

As SEYCOM will assure a marketing outlet for all agricultural produce in the country, it is expected that farmers will be encouraged to produce more. On this, Minister Ferrari assured the farmers that producers' cooperative societies would be encouraged.

The SFM annual general meeting also discussed the organisation's activities and progress in 1979. A surplus of nearly R 498,000 was announced and the distribution of this money as profit shares and bonus among the members was discussed.

The next and last annual general meeting of the Seychelles Farmers Marketing Cooperative Society Ltd will be held at the end of this year to review the activities and progress of 1980.

OFFICIAL EXPLAINS GOVERNMENT'S YOUTH SERVICE POLICY

Victoria NATION in English 6 Oct 80 pp 1, 2

[Text]

THE Principal Secretary for Youth and Community Development, Mr. Ralph Adam answered more questions concerning the functioning and administration of the National Youth Service. He has reiterated Government policy that the service will be purely voluntary.

Any child will be accepted in the service only if both he or she, along with parents, are agreeable to it. Once all the forms which have been handed out are collected, the children will be interviewed individually along with their parents. The children will in addition be required to undergo a medical test.

Mr Adam has explained that the youths will be allowed to visit their parents twice each month and in both cases stay overnight. But beyond that there will be no holidays. Parents or people who are responsible for them will be encouraged to visit the children at the village. A day will be fixed for that each month and usually it will be during the week-end. Arrangements will also be made for children whose parents are residing on other islands to be able to go and visit them there.

The youths will have every right, of course, to write to friends and receive messages and letters, including from overseas. They will also be permitted to receive phone calls which will be passed on to them by those in charge. They will likewise be able to phone their parents, but this will be done on the condition that those responsible are satisfied that the reason is a valid one.

Mr Adam has explained that each child at the NYS camp will receive a pocket money of R. 25 per month. But this will not be handed over in cash, but rather in kind. The children will be able to purchase what they want at the camp's shop equivalent to the value of the given sum. He explained that each child in the service will receive three school uniforms, one uniform for ceremonial occasions, two sets of nightwear, shoes and socks. But the youths will have to bring their own swimming costumes, underwear and clothes which they ordinarily wear at home.

Amusements will include sports, films and concerts, which will all be under supervision. However any youth who is certified unfit by the camp's doctor will not have to participate in any activity.

Of course, the youths will be given every encouragement to study. But as has been explained already, education will not only be academic, but will also be furthered through other activities which will continue throughout the week at the camp.

DREDGER FINISHES FIRST PHASE OF RECLAMATION

Victoria NATION in English 8 Oct 80 pp 1, 2

[Text]

THE DUTCH dredger, Nieuwse Merwede, which is working on the reclamation project in Victoria, is being moved to the south of the New Port to complete the second phase of its task — to fill the area south of the New Port to the Rochon River mouth.

Work in the inner harbour area next to the Yacht Club has finished and the marshy area behind the Maison du Peuple south to the electricity power line causeway is being filled up.

This area has been partly filled with materials from the inner harbour pumped by the dredger through pipes laid across Latanier Road. A ramp made of earth on top of the pipes kept the road open to motorists.

The whole reclamation project being undertaken by the Dutch dredger will end at the mouth of the Rochon River at Mont Fleuri in four or five weeks. The area now being reclaimed along Mont Fleuri will extend from 50 to 250 metres from the shoreline and people living near or using this section of the waterfront are advised of this phase of activity.

In the new location south of the New Port the dredger is expected to work at a greater pace once it reaches the soft overlying coral and gravel deposits.

Up to date, the dredger has been able to produce an average of only 18,000 cubic metres of fill material per week compared to its capacity of 40,000 cubic metres.

The coral in the inner harbour in particular has proved to be progressively harder nearer the shoreline, resulting in an uneconomic performance by the dredger.

SEYCHELLES JOINS CPA--Seychelles has been admitted to the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association (CPA) by unanimous vote. This follows the adoption of a resolution by the People's Assembly on Friday, September 28 that our country become a member of the CPA. Seychelles was admitted along with newly-independent Zimbabwe. At the 26th Association meeting, seven of Nigeria's 19 State Assemblies were also admitted. The conference has brought together about 180 delegates from most of the 44 Commonwealth members for the eight-day meeting which ended on Saturday. Nigeria was admitted earlier this year following a return to Parliamentary government after 14 years of military rule. Conference officials said the other Nigerian states were still considering whether to rejoin or had not had time to submit applications. The Assembly on the tiny Channel island of Alderney also successfully applied. Debates since the opening of the CPA conference on Saturday September 27 have included international peace and security, the Brandt report on a new world economic strategy, Africa south of the Sahara and negotiations for a Law of the Sea Treaty. The CPA aims to provide a forum for an exchange of views among Commonwealth Parliamentarians. No resolutions are adopted and no communique is issued. [Text] [Victoria NATION in English 6 Oct 80 p 1]

CONTACT WITH ANGOLA TO RESOLVE NAMIBIA QUESTION ENCOURAGED

Johannesburg DIE TRANSVALER in Afrikaans 26 Aug 80 p 12

[Editorial: "Red and Black"]

[Text] The fact that South Africa is suspicious of Russia's Marxist allies in Black Africa is understandable. "The understandable, but unfortunate consequence has been that we have put too much association between red and black, but a clear differentiation must me made here as soon as possible." So stated Prof Hennie Coetzee of Potchefstroom University in the course of an Africa symposium last Friday.

Profesoor Coetzee's observation was made in connection with the stand taken this weekend in Durban by Southwest Africa's Administrator-General Dr Gerrit Viljoen, to the effect that South Africa should seek direct contact with African countries if the present negotiations with the United Nations on Southwest Africa fail.

It is, of course, unfortunate that Angola, the country most closely involved with SWAPO terrorism in Southwest Africa, is also a Marxist ally of the Soviet Union. The result of this is that South Africa and especially our public opinion are not inclined to negotiate with Angola over peace in Southwest Africa.

But, as Professor Coetzee stated, we must differentiate between red and black. The highest considerations of the Angolan government could well be the interest of a black country rather than those of its Russian ally. In view of the recalcitrance of the UNITA forces and the difficulties which the SWAPO presence is causing, it may be that Luanda could want to place peace in its southern region above all other considerations.

In any case, we should recognize this sort of possibility and the simple fact that Angola is a Marxist country should not deter us from doing so. we are still doing good business with Marxist Mozambique.

PROBLEMS CONFRONTING CISKEI INDEPENDENCE DISCUSSED

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 9 Sep 80 p 9

[Text] Port Elizabeth--The citizenship question and the economic position of Ciskei are among the things which can cause serious difficulties on the road to independence for this national state, but the problems are not unsurmountable. This is what Ciskei Commissioner General Johan Engelbrecht told DIE BURGER.

Engelbrecht is of the opinion that progress will not be made especially in light of the most recent developments.

The regional development plan held in prospect by Prime Minister P. W. Botha has helped a great deal in minimizing misgivings about independence.

Wires

The committee which is now going to look into the political development of Ciskei with a view to independence should be able to locate the "loose wires." They will start out with the simpler problems.

Most of Ciskei's people would like to see the state become independent. Nationalism and belief in the past is strong.

However, it is clear that the people do not want independence at any price and that certain guarantees will have to be provided. These requests do not appear to be unreasonable and impossible to satisfy, but there will have to be consultations until a consensus is reached, according to Engelbrecht.

He has no doubt that Ciskei is the nonindependent national state which has made the most progress on the road to independence. The people simply want the conditions to be more favorable after than before independence.

The final word still remains to be obtained with respect to consolidation. He is not of the opinion that land demands, such as the cession of East London to the so-called Greater Ciskei, present such serious problems as to spoil this whole affair.

Ciskei's government has demanded that the region between the Indian Ocean and the Sorm Mountains and between the Great Fish River and the Kei River must be ceded to Ciskei. With respect to citizenship it demands that the citizens of Ciskei must not lose their South African citizenship when the region becomes independent.

CHANGES IN PERSONNEL, POLICY IN SOUTH AFRICAN RADIO

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 11 Sep 80 p 3

[Text] Pretoria--It has been learned from a reliable source that the South African Boradcasting Corporation (SABC) will undergo far-reaching changes in several months.

This will coincide with the definite retirement of Dr Jan Schutte, one of the two directors general, who has already reached retirement age. Because of his abilities, some time ago he had been asked to stay on longer. Several other chiefs will also be retiring.

These changes are also tied to SABC management plans to improve and streamline broadcasting through simplification. Rumors are going around that the management is conducting a comprehensive study of top managerial positions and their functions.

In addition, Prof Wynand Mouton has been in Europe since the weekend also for the purpose of looking over the managerial systems of similar broadcasting official organizations.

The big question which is also being asked at the SABC center in Johannesburg is whether the position of codirector is going to be filled when Dr Schutte vacates it. If it is not filled, it will mean that Jan Swanepoel, the other director general, will be the only one managing the corporation.

Swanepoel can serve 2 or 3 more years before he reaches retirement age and it may be that the management will retain him as the sole director general.

Swanepoel was described to DIE BURGER as "a brilliant financial planner and a strong administrator.

Under him and Dr Schutte there is now also Gert Yssel, who is the corporation's deputy director. Yssel is still relatively young even though he and Swanepoel have worked together for many years. Before joining the SABC they were colleagues in the service of the South African Railroads.

DIE BURGER was told that Yssel's position will be greatly affected. He can be promoted to succeed Swanepoel if he retires on pension within a year (or perhaps earlier because of poor health) and if the management should decide not to bring in a person from outside as is being conjectured in some circles.

Weight

The thoughts that a public figure from the outside could be brought in on a top management level arise from the fact that the men who built up the SABC, in the years when the administration and organization were bearing most of the weight, would from now on be supplemented with people who could place emphasis on conservation within the country's total survival strategy.

DIE BURGER was told that the designation of Minister Pik Botha as the future responsible minister may perhaps mean that the expected changes in the SABC management will be more far-reaching than originally expected.

Important renovations have already been made under the tutelage of Hennie Smit, the present minister, who now bears the responsibility for the SABC. It is expected that in a few weeks Smith will be appointing a successor in the management to replace the late Willie, Maree, the former minister and past deputy chairman of SABC who passed away recently.

An important section of the SABC which has lately been sharply criticized on all sorts of important matters (and inconsequential matters as well) is the news section.

From an inquiry conducted by DIE BURGER it seems that the leaders of the SABC's news section: Jan van Zyl, director of the news services; Kobbus Hamman, controller of the news services; and Sakkie Burger, chief of television news, are all seasoned journalists with a strong professional approach.

According to information from authoritative political sources, there are indications that from now on the SABC's activities will be expanded for the purpose of having it play a greater role in creating better relations between the country's various population groups and in the dissemination of information abroad.

Last week Minister Botha already started current discussions concerning the participation of independent national states in the southern Africa television service.

ARREST OF AIR FORCE GENERAL RAISES QUESTIONS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 12 Oct 80 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text]

THE suspension of Christopher Kabwe only three days after being promoted by President Kaunda to major-general and commander of the Zambia Air Force DOES certainly cast a doubt on our advisory machinery.

One is bound to ask several questions about how it came to pass that a man could be honoured nationally today and two days later it is discovered he is under investigation over matters relating to his job.

We may not know the inside story but it is time those whose duty is to advise not only the President but also the other national leadership woke to the fact that information delayed is information denied.

Perhaps investigators had not reached a stage of "reporting" but when they investigate a senior public servant, especially one in a sensitive area, the Head of State must be well informed at all stages. He is one man and he cannot be everywhere.

He should not therefore be denied information. Doing so would in fact amount to misprision of felony which is a punishable offence in the Zambian law.

However unless it was deliberate and calculated, we are of the opinion that Major-General Kabwe's case would have been handled differently had the advisory machinery been working in normal order.

As it is the nation is left gasping: What happened?

YOUTH ALERTED TO DEAL WITH PERSONS DISCREDITING PARTY

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 13 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

THE Youth League in Ndola has been put on the alert to deal with anyone trying to discredit the Party and its Government.

"When I press the button, Ndola will become hell for someone to live in," the governor Mr Alexander Kamalondo warned yesterday at a ward election meeting of Party officials.

He said the district political committee had mobilised the Youth League to deal with certain residents who thought they could hold the Government to ransom. He declined to name the residents.

"There are some people in Ndola who think they can upset the system by holding the Party and its Government to ransom by demanding impossibilities," he said.

In his many years as a trade unionist, the governor said, he never knew of any charter which said the union could discredit popularly elected governments.

But since the action taken by the unnamed individuals was political, the Party in Ndola would fight such individuals politically.

Next time the individuals make a statement which is an affront to the Party and its Government and the leadership, the committee would discipline such people or set the youth on them, Mr Kamalondo said amid cheers.

"Of late there have been some outbursts from some people against a popularly elected government. But let me warn these people that we have launched a strong campaign to fight them," he said.

He said if there were people prepared to be jailed for trying to cause instability in the nation under the guise of championing the workers cause, then the district political committee in Ndola and its youth were prepared to go to jail for fighting them to maintain stability.

NO DIRTY TRICKS, VETOED CANDIDATES TOLD

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 13 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

SOME aspiring candidates vetoed by the Ndola district political committee have allegedly started using dirty tactics to frustrate Party elections on October 21, according to Ndola Urban governor Mr Alexander Kamalondo.

He said these people were confiscating UNIP and national registration cards from voters to make them unable to take part in the elections.

He warned them at a meeting of candidates and Party leaders at the Adult Education Centre yesterday that what they were doing was illegal and those discovered would be arrested and prosecuted.

He said some of the vetoed candidates had gone to him asking why the district political committee had withdrawn their candidature, but he was under no obligation to disclose the reasons because the Party Constitution did not allow this.

"If there are any of you who feel our action was unjustified, there is a provision in the constitution to appeal to the provincial political committee, but to engage in illegal activities would put you in deeper trouble," he warned.

Mr Kamalondo attacked people who opposed the introduction of the decentralised system of local government saying they did not know what they were doing.

"There is a clique of idiots who are bent on opposing whatever UNIP wants to introduce," he said.

He said Mrs Idah Simukwayi, a top trade union official and treasurer of the Zambia United Local Authorities Workers Union, (ZULAWU) had contested the Mushili ward as chairman and she had gone through unopposed.

Besides her, there were prominent people like Ndola mayor Mr Julius Sakala who had gone through in the Kavu ward unopposed as chairman, deputy town clerk Mr Cyrus Kasimba had assailed in the Kasini ward while director of housing and social services Mr Peter Changala is vice-treasurer in the Munkulungwe ward.

"Four senior police officers in Ndola have gone through unopposed in Kansenshi ward. Now who are these jackals who say the people do not want the new system. The enthusiasm with which the elections have been greeted is proof enough that people want the system," he said. He did not name the police officers.

There are no candidates in Kamba award because of discripances there and the case had now been referred to the Electoral Office which would decide what to do next.

LOW SALES OF PARTY CARDS IN CENTRAL PROVINCE REPORTED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 13 Oct 80 p 7

[Text] CENTRAL Province only sold 16,606 UNIP and 604 Youth League cards between January 1978 and March this year, according to a report just released.

The report of the Provincial Political Council, which met in Kabwe last week and released over the weekend disclosed that 41,994 cards were unsold out of a total of 58,600 for 1979/80 issued to the area.

Out of the five regions in the province only Mumbwa and Serenje managed to sell 604 Youth League cards out of a total of 30,000.

Other regions such as Kabwe Urban, Kabwe Rural and Mkushi did not sell even a single Youth League card by the end of March, it says.

The report says that the Party had 2,610 new members on the main body in the province between January and March -- Kabwe Urban (1,077), Kabwe Rural (489), Mkushi (646), Serenje (398) and Mumbwa (0) members.

The report dated April 10, was tabled at the council meeting opened by the area's member of the Central Committee Mr Pius Kasuta at the Kabwe's railways training school on Thursday.

Received

The report says for the few cards sold the provincial Party headquarters in Kabwe received K1,935 from the main body and K156 from the Youth League.

The report does not state the position of the Women's League.

It quotes provincial political secretary Mr Samson Mukando as having asked governors to give comprehensive reports on the matter.

Mr Mukando informed the meeting which was attended by member of the Central Committee and Chairman of Elections, Publicity and Sub-Committee, Mr Bob Litana, that he was aware of transport hitches district officials were facing but he hoped these would be ironed out.

The report says that Mr Litana was disappointed that the compilation of registers in preparation for the formation of sections, branches and wards was not satisfactory.

The report says "very little work" in supervising Party officials in villages and farms was done in Kabwe district because of lack of transport. The situation would change with the arrival of new vehicles.

Cadres

It was discovered that registers for the 23 wards from the some districts sent to Freedom House did not carry the required information, but Party cadres were working hard to rectify the mistake.

It also says a spate of armed robberies and strikes almost marred the smooth running of the Party in Kabwe Urban during the period under review.

In Mumbwa, the Party machinery was being revitalised to meet political, social and economic challenges ahead.

EEC SPONSORED CATTLE PROJECT LAUNCHED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 12 Oct 80 p 7

[Article by Dennis Kapata]

[Text] A TEN-YEAR cattle development project sponsored by the European Economic Community has started in Lundazi in the Eastern Province, provincial agricultural officer Mr Robert Wilima has reported.

He said the project, expected to provide a new approach in animal husbandry, resulted from a two-year feasibility study.

The aim of the project was to increase animal production through provision of improved facilities to cattle owners.

Initially, the EEC had provided about K279,000 for the project this year and more money was expected next year.

The money was used to construct dip-tanks, handling facilities and establishing grazing areas to be planted with improved pastures.

The project would be extended to other areas in the province after it had been evaluated in 1982, he said.

Mr Wilima added that the project would be handed over to the people after ten years to run it on co-operative basis.

To ensure success, several committees at provincial and district levels had been formed to spearhead various aspects of the project, Mr Wilima said.

Some of the committees would explore breeding facilities for milk and beef animals while others would try and expand grazing land.

Mr Wilima paid tribute to Senior Chief Mwase of Lundazi for mobilising his people to participate in the project by clearing grazing land on self-help basis.

He said: "The response from cattle owners is very encouraging. We just hope we shall receive the same co-operation from other areas when we extend the project."

Meanwhile, a research programme aimed at increasing the production of groundnuts has begun in the province

Sponsored by the Swedish government at the request of the Zambian Government, it is aimed at improving the Chalimbana groundnut seed by making it bigger and increasing yield.

Associate exporter for groundnut breeding in charge of the project, Mr Thomas Grath, says the research would improve disease resistance to other varieties of groundnut seeds.

Speaking at the Msekera regional research station, 15 km south of Chipata, Mr Grath said the project was prompted by a decline in the production of Chalimbana groundnuts.

The high cost of the Chalimbana seed contributed to the decline, he said.

The Chalimbana variety is the only one which the Eastern Province co-operative Marketing Union exports for confectionary purposes.

Mr Grath, who is from the Food and Agriculture Organisation, said: "Some farmers have used the seeds for about ten years resulting in loss of vigour and hence the decline in the yields."

EASTERN PROVINCE INHABITANTS REJECT YELLOW MAIZE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 12 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

THE Provincial Development Council in the Eastern Province refuse Namboard to haul maize from the area to Lusaka because people there do not want to eat yellow mealie meal, it was alleged yesterday. [as published]

Namboard's provincial manager, Mr Bisalom Kabolesha, told a meeting of Namboard officials and transporters in Lusaka yesterday that the council reached that decision on September 25.

Mr Kabolesha, who is a member of the council, said this when he was asked why 28 of the 30 maize haulage trucks returned to Lusaka empty when there was plenty of maize at depots in the province.

He was summoned to Lusaka by Namboard to explain the problem.

The provincial council made the decision to stop yellow maize from being sent to the area when white mealie meal ran out in the shops.

Mr Kabolesha said that when the decision was made, he was instructed to abide by it, but he refused to do so because he only obeyed instructions from his employers, Namboard.

But on October 6, he got a copy of a letter from Chipata governor instructing the police to impound any vehicle seen carrying maize heading for Lusaka.

"I then went to see the member of the Central Committee (Mr Joshua Mumpanshya) for clarification. The member of the Central Committee told me he agreed with the governor. When I returned to my office, I found a telex message from my general manager in Lusaka, instructing me to stop the movement of maize to Lusaka.

"I immediately started to run around the area to ensure that the instructions were carried out," he said.

The council's decision is contrary to President Kaunda's statement that doctors had discovered that yellow maize was "very nutritious".

Namboard general manager Mr Daniel Luzongo earlier said his organisation was geared to ensure every bag of maize was moved from all rural depots.

And Truckers Association of Zambia chairman, Mr Krish Naidu, attacked Namboard for its failure to load and off-load maize quickly at its depots.

Namboard later allocated 21 trucks, including those which had just returned from Eastern Province to reinforce the haulage of maize from rural depots to Chipata.

Sixteen others were assigned to transport about 1,000 metric tonnes of relief maize supplies to Senanga which is being threatened with famine.

DPRK: ZIMBABWE PRIME MINISTER MUGABE ADDRESSES 9 OCTOBER BANQUET

SK092310 Pyongyang KCNA in English 2232 GMT 9 Oct 80

[Text] Pyongyang, 10 Oct (KCNA)--Comrade Robert G. Mugabe, chairman of the Zimbabwe African National Union and prime minister of the Republic of Zimbabwe, on an official goodwill visit to our country, spoke at a grand banquet arranged yesterday evening in his honour by the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Workers Party of Korea and President of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

Follows the full text of his speech:

The great leader Comrade Kim Il-song, Madam Kim Song-ae, distinguished guests, comrades and friends,

When one man meets another and establishes friendship, the event is no doubt significant and memorable. But when (?setting) is that of two men of the same political and ideological persuasion, and the ensuing friendship becomes a binding alliance between them in the advancement of set identical revolutionary goals, the occasion is not merely significant but truly historic and honourable.

It was in 1978 that I first came to Pyongyang in quest of military aid for a national struggle whose objectives were the freedom of my people from settler-colonialist oppression, the achievement of sovereign independence and democracy. I had before then only heard and read about the great Korean leader, Comrade Kim Il-song. My memory of our first meeting is still extremely vivid. He had heard, he said, all about me and the national struggle I was leading. My request for aid would thus be granted substantially as submitted because our just cause was also the just cause of the Korean people and the Workers Party of Korea. And aid truly was given us in accordance with that undertaking. What a great close friend and indispensable ally Comrade Kim Il-song became. What a great event the meeting became as the first joint physical step in the forging of an alliance between the Workers Party of Korea and the Zimbabwe African National Union. Indeed, as we on that occasion met and planned the means of lending effectiveness to the Zimbabwean revolution, we were also meeting to unite the valiant people of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea with the gallant people of the would-be Republic of Zimbabwe. We had in reality defied our geographical apartness; and as we merged our principles and objectives and pooled together our resources towards their achievement we have also successfully blended our revolutions into one. Two years after we scored a joint brilliant victory over over the forces of imperialism, colonialism and racism which had for decades resisted our democratic-revolutionary struggle.

Comrade Kim Il-song, may I say no greater honour could have been conferred on me, my party, government and people than to be invited, only five and one-half months after my party's election victory and the attainment of our independence, to visit this great country and renew acquaintances with its great leader, its great party and its great people. Accordingly, I come to you with messages of warm congratulations upon the holding of the Sixth Congress and 35th anniversary of the Workers Party of Korea. I also bring you cordial greetings, profound gratitude and great admiration from our Zimbabwean workers and peasants.

We hail and salute you and the gallant people of Korea for two main reaons. The first is that you fought heroically against a common enemy--imperialism and colonialism on your territory. The second is that you used your political victory to achieve yet another victory in the socioeconomic sphere of your country.

We also express our profound gratitude to you as we begin the first phase of our independence for using your own political and military victory to achieve our victory, as indeed you had used your victory to help achieve the victory of Mozambique.

We admire you for your persistent quest for the just cause of the reunification of your country and for the consistent emphasis you lay on the principle that the people of Korea are entitled to being masters of their own destiny on the basis of the chuche idea. Our admiration grows greater when we notice that in spite of the greatest amount of provocation from the undemocratic and counter-revolutionary regime in South Korea you have continued to advocate the path of peaceful settlement of the Korean problem. We lend you our maximum support in your just endeavours and trust that the United States will accede to the wishes of the Korean people, recognise their right of self-determination and gracefully withdraw from the region so that Korean people can become masters in their own home without any interference from foreign quarters.

Your excellency, I believe the unity of our forces in the context of the victory and independence we have achieved in Zimbabwe is both the means and base for consolidating our relations in new dimensions. True, the anti-imperialist and anti-colonialist struggle must continue until both our regions are rid of the remaining imperialist forces in their southern parts. Yet we have, in our case, now to use our independence as an instrument for achieving the economic goals of our revolution. We have to deliver economic benefits on our golden independence plate. It is in pursuance of this objective that we would wish to see our friendship and alliance being consolidated. We welcome in this period the visit to our country, recently paid by a high-powered Korean delegation, to discuss areas of common action. When, soon after our independence, I sent to Pyongyang a delegation headed by the deputy prime minister and minister of foreign affairs, I had in mind this same exercise of extending our relations to the economic, scientific and cultural sectors. I trust the visits we have paid to each other have furnished us with enough knowledge of the most important and most urgent areas of cooperation. My delegation will, in addition to participating in the great historical event of the Sixth Congress of the Workers Party and the 35th anniversary of its founding, be interested in discussions between our two sides leading to the establishment of mutually beneficial relations in the areas I have mentioned above, namely the economic, scientific and cultural areas.

As we visualise the revolutionary process in Zimbabwe, the phase of national armed struggle now over, the immediate post-independence phase becomes inevitably one to repair the damage inflicted upon both the human and physical structures of the economy. As we analyse the situation, the programmes we must fulfill is that aimed at resettlement, rehabilitation and reconstruction. The resettlement and rehabilitation of our population involves nearly 2.5 million persons displaced by the war, only 200,000 to 250,000 of whom were refugees in Mozambique, Zambia and Botswana. Land is the basis of such resettlement programmes and land can only result from acquisition by the state from the white commercial sector. The state is constitutionally unable to acquire this land unless it financially can compensate the white farmer for the land acquired from him.

Our lack of funds is naturally rendering the process of resttlement rather slow. But where resettlement has begun as a result of land having become available, the view of my party and government is that such resettlement must be on a viable economic basis recognising a system of cooperative or collective units. We would gladly appreciate your placing at our disposal your expertise and experience in this field so we can benefit by them in our new endeavours to organise and socialise our peasant agriculture so it can become more economic and lift itself from a merely subsistence level.

The task of reconstruction is one which encompasses various areas of the socio-economic field as they straddle across it. The essential social services like education and health were not only originally inadequate among the peasants and the working masses, but also impaired either by disruption or destruction from the war. The road and rail systems suffered similarly during the war and so did the rural businesses. Reconstruction thus is a comprehensive process of repair and extension of the services most essential to the live of the rural population.

It is our hope that our resettlement, rehabiliation and reconstruction programmes will operate to alleviate the population pressures upon the cities and industrialised areas and result in the eventual decentralisation of industries. Your experience here will be rewarding to us to the extent that we find them to have a bearing upon our own situation.

We reckon that the crucial resettlement period will last some two years. Indeed, we are already working on a development plan extending over a period of three to four years aimed at bringing about real expansion in the economic and social fields.

Your excellency, I have tried to give you a brief background to our problems and the solutions we envisage for them. We reckon, however, that the success of the plans we have depends, among other things, upon the consolidation of our peace and independence. This is why I have time and time again appealed for greater understanding and reconciliation among our people, either across the political party line or across the colour line. Our policy of reconciliation is based on the principle that the change which we have achieved, namely the democratic system which has replaced the racial settler-dominated political order, must be accepted without qualification by all. Secondly, if those who have been overthrown as the overlords of an undemocratic racial system fully accept the new system and the government democratically elected under it, then those who have become the dominant political element as we have must be prepared to forgive the past sins of the former and join hands with them in a new spirit emanating from a single loyalty to the country and commitment to our independence. In the circumstances in which my party found itself after elections as the victor, it became imperative to unite in government ZANU and ZAPU so as to lay a basis for national unity.

I am glad that in gradual stages peace is getting consolidated as our people adjust to each other and reorientate their attitudes in the establishment of new positive relations. In the process of achieving the desirable equilibrium in human relations a few acts of violence are unavoidable as the negative but insignificant features of an otherwise successful positive process. Great success awaits our efforts, despite the acts of sabotage by South Africa and other internal reactionary forces. The people of Zimbabwe remain as determined to safeguard their hard-won independence as they were to achieve it.

During the liberation war the people of Zimbabwe fought a relentless struggle against a combination of imperialist and settler-pupper reactionary forces. The enemy combination included the forces of the South African regime right up to the time of our first democratic elections in February this year. When imperialist reactionary favourites were dismally rejected and dislodged by the people at the election polls and the verdict favoured the revolutionary forces that we represent, South Africa panicked.

She panicked because she dreaded the thought of a revolutionary neighbour to her north whose influence might engender an irreversible revolutionary trend on her soil as well as strengthen SWAPO in Namibia. Accordingly, she began recruiting disloyal and reactionary elements who had served as a quasi-military and quasi-political arm of puppet Muzorewas auxiliary force. To this day over 5,000 of these forces have been based in the Transvaal in South Africa ready to be deployed in Zimbabwe, Namibia, Mozambique, Angola or Zambia, to destabilise the situation and prevent the smooth process of economic development in our independent states.

South Africa has set herself up in our region as not only a detester of democracy but as also a manipulator and destabiliser of our hard-won democratic systems. We have refused to accord her this status as a professional aggressor and hence we have, of necessity, to maintain our military vigilance so we can effectively repel her insidious disruptive military antics as soon as we detect the slightest signs of them.

My country has, in spite of South Africa's aggressive activities, committed itself to a policy of peaceful coexistence with all its neighbours including South Africa herself. Acting, however, on the basis of their principle and in accordance with the OAU charter and resolutions, our young republic has refused to maintain any political and diplomatic relations with South Africa, though recognising as all our other neighbours have done the reality of existing economic ties with and dependence upon South Africa.

To lessen our economic dependence upon South Africa the nine countries of our Southern African region have resolved to establish a regional system of economic cooperation between themselves. In April, this year, an agreement to this effect was signed in Lusaka by Zambia, Angola, Tanzania, Mozambique, Swaziland, Lesotho, Malawi, Botswana, and Zimbabwe. Another summit conference will take place in Maputo next November to conclude the programmes and projects that have been planted as well as to appeal to international agencies to supply funds for their implementation. It is our belief that our political independence cannot have any real meaning and significance to our people unless it were accompanied and reinforced by economic independence as well. Our political liberation having placed into the hands of our broad masses the instrument of political power, that political power must now transform itself into economic power. Political independence must necessarily beget economic independence. One notes with a deep sense of admiration that the victorious people of Korea, guided by your wise leadership and the chuche idea, have in addition to being their own political masters also become their own economic masters. We who have just attained our political independence have thus your own example and experience to learn from.

It cannot be denied that the achievement of political and economic independence by the unwavering people of Korea was also made possible by the adherence to the policy of nonalignment. Our young republic of Zimbabwe has declared itself as a nonaligned state. We believe that the adoption of this posture places us in a sphere where we cannot be the international puppets of either world bloc who are prepared to become our friends on a mutual and reciprocal basis. It is also our belief that we should reinforce the voice of the Third World in demanding disarmament by the contesting powers, so as to reduce world tension and contribute to the creation of a more peaceful world.

Your excellency, Comrade Kim Il-song, the achievements of the people of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea under your leadership have been spectacular in both the political and economic fields. It cannot be doubted that the basic political instrument for the formulation of your politico-socio-economic goals and the identification of the correct means of achieving them has been the Workers Party of Korea. The 35 years of existence which the party has had is a record replete with numerous experiences and outstanding victories. Here again one admires how the party has become not only the basic instrument for galvanising the broad masses through the proletarian vanguard, but one also of formulating and presenting plans and programmes to government based on approved people-oriented policies. For, if the people are truly to be masters of their destiny in the exercise of their sovereignty, then the party which is the expression of the mind of the people as well as their collective voice must also comprise a dominant instrument of governmental policies.

Once again, I wish to congratulate the Workers Party on its long and brilliant record of performance. The record becomes even more illustrious when it is considered that the sovereignty of the people of Korea has been put to test by a vicious and completely unjustified war waged against them in 1950 and that this challenge continues to this day as the United States unreasonably persists in upholding an outmoded posture on the question of the unification of Korea. We admire the Workers Party and treasure the close association between it and ZANU. May I wish the party another 35 years of successive victories, the most important of which must inevitably be the successful reunification of Korea.

Comrade Kim Il-song, when we left Zimbabwe on Tuesday we expected that the whole people of Pyongyang, the entire machinery will welcome us. What happened this afternoon at the airport and what happened as we left the airport in coming into town is an event which we cannot describe.

The rousing welcome that was given us and the joy that we received all point toward one, an event that in fact underlines the reality of our solidarity and friendship.

We cannot thank you in words, nor can we thank you materially for what was displayed in receiving us this afternoon.

We cannot doubt after the events that the people of the Republic of Zimbabwe and the DPRK are one.

We cannot doubt the reality of our solidarity is one.

We cannot doubt the oneness of our people.

We cannot doubt the oneness of our objective and the oneness of our revolutions.

You are our great friend and the people of the DPRK are our great friends.

I would like to assure you that the people of the Republic of Zimbabwe are your great friends.

Accordingly, we wish to show you our continued commitments to this alliance forged through the armed struggles.

Finally, may I wish you, the great leader of the Korean people, many more years of good health so your people may continue to be illuminated by your wise advice.

The struggle to liberate our people has already achieved victory.

I hope that the friendship and solidarity between our two peoples will strengthen in the future in our struggle, the struggle to work in our country such as miracle as wrought by the Korean people.

The war for liberation has come to a close. But a war continues. It is a war. In other words, an economic war. We will win in this war in the future.

May I invite you to drink:

--to the joint victory achieved by the joint revolutionary forces of Zimbabwe and Korea

--to the continued friendship and solidarity between the victorious people of the Republic of Zimbabwe and the valiant people of the Democratic Peoples Republic of Korea

--to the continued alliance and solidarity between the Workers Party of Korea and the Zimbabwe African National Union

--to the continued good health, guidance and leadership of the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song and Madam Kim Song-ae.

MUGABE STOPOVER IN CHINA REPORTED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 14 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

PEKING.

THE Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, yesterday thanked the Chinese Government during a brief stopover in Peking for supporting his independence struggle, the New China News Agency reported.

"The Chinese people are the Zimbabwean people's trusted friends and brothers," it quoted Mr Mugabe as saying during talks with the new premier, Mr Zhao Ziyang, in the Great Hall of the People. Mr Mugabe was on his way home from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

Premier Zhao reiterated China's support for Zimbabwe and other African peoples, and invited Mr Mugabe to return for an official visit.

Mr Zhao later gave a luncheon in honour of Mr and Mrs Mugabe.

The Zimbabwe leader also had a brief meeting with the Communist Party chairman, Mr Hua Guofeng, Mr Zhao's predecessor as Prime Minister.

Mr Mugabe told Chairman Hua Guofeng his nation would not seek economic benefits at the expense of its hard-won independance, China's official Xinhua news agency reported, reports Iana-Rtr-AP.

Xinhua said Mr Mugabe explained to Mr Hua the Zimbabwean people's successes in consolidating independence and developing the economy, and the problems they had encountered.

● During Mr Mugabe's Korean visit he and Korean President Kim Il Sung signed a treaty of friendship and co-operation and general agreement on co-operation in the fields of economy, science, technology and culture.

Mr Mugabe was in Pyongyang to attend the sixth congress of the Korean Republic's ruling workers (Communist) Party.

● Several Government Ministers and foreign ambassadors waited in vain at the airport last night for the Prime Minister to return from Korea.

Mr Mugabe was expected in Salisbury at 10.15 but he was delayed in Peking. He is now expected at Salisbury airport at 10 a.m. today.

ELAM DISCUSSES FOREIGN AID PROSPECTS

Salisbury THE HERALD-BUSINESS HERALD in English 16 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

MR NICK ELAM, the deputy British High Commissioner in Zimbabwe, said this week there was too much gloom and doom in the country.

Speaking at a meeting of the Salisbury Chamber of Industries, Mr Elam said that both the British Foreign Secretary, Lord Carrington, and Zimbabwe's Government ministers, were taking the long-term view and were quite rightly keeping up the pressure on donors to give more aid.

"But in the meantime, people here should not be disheartened. In fact, only six months after independence, the total aid pledged to Zimbabwe has reached one third of a billion dollars. This compares favourably with the so-called 'Kissinger Fund' figure of one billion U.S. dollars over five years," he said.

PRIORITY LIST

Mr Elam said important multinational agencies, notably the World Bank, had not yet decided on the level of their aid, while many bilateral donors have as yet only committed themselves one year ahead.

"The Zimbabwe Government has yet to define its full priorities and formulate detailed projects for presentation to donors," he continued.

"Work is progressing, though, and there are welcome signs that its priority list will be completed before the aid donor's conference at the end of March."

Mr Elam said it was not unrealistic to suppose that the Kissinger figure could be reached or exceeded over five years.

Turning to investment, Mr Elam said that something like £10 million in new private sterling investment from Britain had already reached Zimbabwe, and projects worth a similar sum were nearing fruition.

Much larger sums were being invested out of blocked funds. What happened so far was only a beginning. There should be more, but confidence was a crucial factor. It was vital that the business community project a favourable image of the country in their overseas contacts.

Mr Elam sought to dispel misapprehensions about the availability of medium term credit on favourable rates of interest for the purchase of plant and equipment from Britain, backed by the British Government's Export Credits Guarantee Department.

PROGRESSIVE

Far from considering Zimbabwe a bad risk, the ECGD had moved progressively since independence to the point where it was covering trade with this country as a normal risk market.

It was not ECGD practice to announce its credit limits, but if it were, the amount available would be counted in hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr Elam said the commercial department of the High Commission would be glad to assist Zimbabwe importers who thought they were having difficulty in obtaining ECGD-backed/finance.

They were also able to help importers find sources of supply in Britain.

One substantial deal had recently been concluded in less than a week with the help of the Department of Trade's computer in London.

MOST will agree that bigness is not necessarily best. Smallness is often far better, but when it comes to choosing the top companies it is customary both here and abroad to select those corporations with the largest sales total for the year, greatest monetary value of assets or some other measure of bigness.

This year the Big Six have been picked from the top ten in each of the categories of sales, assets, earnings and market capitalisation. All these measures of worth have thei advantages and drawbacks but hopefully by considering all of them, one has arrived at six companies worthy of being called the Big Six of Zimbabwe.

In carrying out this survey I have excluded the mining companies because different considerations — e.g. mine life expectancy, product risk, etc.—apply to them.

Largeness of sales has been chosen as one measure of importance because it is usually an indicator of a company's viability and national importance. Total asset value is a guideline to corporate stability and potential.

Earnings production is perhaps the most important measure of all — without it the corporate body would wither away. Market capitalisation is a guidepost to the worth of the business as a "going concern".

The "top ten in total assets" shows that the two quoted banking companies easily lead the field. This is to be expected because assets are the working capital of bankers and it is from the lending of these funds that the profit must be generated.

In all cases the total asset figure excludes non-tangibles such as goodwill or cost of control and the comparisons are adjudged to be fair because all the companies revalue their fixed assets from time to time.

MERGERS

Much of the growth in the sales of T.A. came through mergers with other trading companies during 1979/80 and this also accounted for some of Delta's percent change

The benefits flowing from the cessation of national hostilities can be seen clearly from most of the results, with Rothmans and Afdis being exceptions and showing little if any real sales value growth.

A similar story is told by the "top ten in earnings". For example, the improved trading of Hippo, from the ending of the war and access to booming world sugar markets and the acquisition of Amato by T. Sales makes them enter the list of the top ten in earnings and cause Rothmans and Afdis to fall away.

Rhocables, a blue chip company, is to be found on the schedule of the "top ten in market capitalisation" and like P.G.I. could not be considered in the sales section because of non-disclosure of these figures. With the changed national situation Rhocables will give these in future but P.G.I. has no acceptable reason for not doing so.

The positional table on the "Big Six of 1980" shows the make up of the final ratings. This analysis reveals that there can be little argument about the two top placings.

Delta is a worthy top company being placed first in earnings, sales, market capitalisation and losing to Rhobank and unplaced RAL in total assets.

The table "the Big Six analysed" gives figures for the contestants over the headings of market goodwill, growth in earnings per share during 1979/80, dividend cover, sales margin, asset turnover, debt ratio, return on ordinary shareholders' equity, leverage, current ratio and quick ratio.

The areas chosen represent a blend of measures picturing investor confidence (market goodwill); structural strength and funding policy (leverage and debt ratio); trading trends in 1980 (growth in eps); management trading strategy (sales margin, asset turnover and debt ratio); management's effectiveness (growth in eps and "rose"); and liquidity policy (current ratio and quick ratio).

An examination of the Delta figures shows the overall strength, stability and profitability of the top company.

In market goodwill Delta is pipped to the post by blue chip Rhobank and staple food giant Natfoods. This latter company also leads the field in earnings growth and T.A. scores a growth rate of 28 percent, helped by its new acquisitions particularly the Blue Ribbon companies.

All six companies registered earnings growth in excess of the general inflationary rate of about 10 percent during the 1979/80 period and the 22 percent growth of Delta in 1980 is commendable in view of its steady growth trend in recent years.

The structural strength of Delta is highlighted by its low debt ratio of 0.3 : 1 (Delta's total liabilities total $63 million and are well covered by total assets of $91 million). A similar funding policy is followed by Natfoods and David Whitehead. The relatively heavy reliance on outside finance by T.A. is revealed by its debt ratio of 0.9 : 1.

GEARING

Delta's financial leverage or gearing is low with shareholders providing 92 percent of all long term funds. Rhobank and David Whitehead look only to shareholders for long term funds but T.A. and Hippo are relatively highly geared, turning to lenders for about 40 percent of their long term funds.

The policy of funding adopted by Delta ensures financial stability but can lead to less spectacular earnings growth than if higher debt and leverage ratios were adopted; however a change to this latter business strategy would bring with it increased risks, particularly in non-boom conditions.

Some would claim that Delta's funding policies are the reason for its relatively low return on shareholders' equity of 13 percent in 1980.

That a greater return for shareholders would result if part of its capital had been replaced by say 9 percent debentures cannot be denied.

However, Delta's return is in fact greater than 13 percent because over the years the company has followed a course of revaluing its operating companies' fixed assets — upwards by $3 million in 1980 and a similar amount between 1977 and 1979.

If these book adjustments had not been made the return in 1980 would be logged at almost 15 percent.

The importance of the interplay of the sales margin, asset turnover, and debt ratio to the return on shareholders' equity should be noted. By raising one or more or all while the remaining are kept steady, companies can improve the return to shareholders. A study of these three ratios as applicable to the various members of the "big six" shows the tactics adopted to achieve the profits earned.

For example, Delta and David Whitehead earn very similar percentage returns on equity for shareholders; both have a 0.3 debt ratio but David Whitehead produces its results from a larger sales margin than Delta, whereas Delta compensates for this through a greater asset turnover.

Financial strength and profitablity are vital for top company wellbeing but so too is social responsibility. Unfortunately company reporting has almost solely been concerned with financial accounting in the past and has ignored the importance of human resource accounting and reporting.

However, the picture is changing as boards recognise the need for communication in this area. Big business must show that it is of benefit not only to lenders and shareholders, but also of value to the nation and its people.

The significant worth of four of the "big six" to employees and Government is shown clearly by the table on added value. On average over 40 percent for the funds generated by them go to employees, with Government in all cases receiving more in cash than that paid to shareholders or retained by the company.

Delta leads the way, once again, in this field, with 81 percent of its generated wealth flowing to employees and Government.

If our companies are to be real top companies; and here I refer not only to the big six or top ten but to all our quoted companies; then they must pay more attention to social responsibility reporting.

The value added statement is only one small method. Delta's programme to build over 2 000 houses for its employees should be given great weighting when selecting a top company, so too should the P & C group's plan for shares for workers and Merlin's worker committees and Cape' bursary scheme.

So that this nation may continue to have a worthwhile private sector, let's hope that next year one can produce charts from company reports showing the top companies' national value from both profit and human resource angles.

Rio Invests in the New Zimbabwe

MINING companies are becoming the country's main foreign currency earners and are in the top three biggest employers of labour. Rio Tinto became the first overseas company to invest in the new nation of Zimbabwe when it made available more than $7 million to its subsidiaries in this country.

Recently, Rio Tinto (Zimbabwe) increased its share capital through a rights issue of 3,6 million ordinary shares and with the additional funds has implemented a number of projects.

The establishment of a medium-sized gold property is underway at Renco gold mine in the south-eastern lowveld, with the start of production scheduled for the beginning of 1982.

Destined to become one of the largest gold producers in the country, Renco has a mining target of 15 000 tonnes a month and is expected to produce about 1 500 kg of gold annually.

Zinca platinum mine near Hartley, is the site for a pilot plant to establish mining methods and to test a proposed treatment process. If the project is undertaken, the mine will become Rio Tinto's largest, treating in excess of one million tonnes of ore a year, and employing about 2 500 people.

Large reserves of coal have been found at Bengwa in the north-west of the country after an extensive exploration programme and test work is continuing on bulk samples. A report on the potential of the project is being prepared by a team of international consultants in conjunction with Rio Tinto management.

In July the group bought Rutala Mines near Gatooma, for $140 000 and completed its long-term plan to move back into ferrochrome production at Eiffel Flats where a small scale smelter has been in mothballs since 1976.

The purchase gave the group's mining rights to the Rutala chrome claims and completed its acquisition of chrome mines in preparation for its move back to ferrochrome production.

Other chrome mines owned by Rio Tinto are the Frances Mine, the Great Dyke Mine and the Feoch and Jester claims, on the North Dyke.

Rio Tinto management says further expansion by the group will depend on the availability of skilled manpower and the success of training schemes operated by the group. The metal market, however cannot be predicted with any certainty as the price determines the flow of investment.

The group employs about 5 000 people in Zimbabwe, with all employees being graded on the Paterson Plan and their rates of pay related to their grades. All employees at mining locations are provided with free housing and fuel and during the past three years, the group has spent more than $3 million on housing for unskilled and semi-skilled workers.

Training covers a wide field including semi-skilled training in all major engineering trades, adult literacy programmes, management and supervisory training, aptitude testing and basic mining instruction.

The are 32 cadets now under training, with 44 apprentices. Eight employees are being sponsored at various universiti s, six in engineering, one in mining and one in metallurgy.

The company also manages the Rio Tinto Foundation, formed in 1974 through a grant of 2 million shares from the overseas parent company to improve the living standards of Zimbabweans by the development of education and practical training.

All of its first completed projects was a hostel for African apprentices at the Bulawayo Technical College. The foundation has built a secondary school and a farming and building centre in the Zhombe rural area.

Finance has also been provided by the Foundation to buy school furniture in the Zhombe and Belingwe rural areas.

Scholarships have been made available by the foundation for students wishing to study engineering and agriculture at the University of Zimbabwe and other training institutions in the country.

Poised for Drugs Export Boom

Zimbabwe has the potential to develop a thriving pharmaceutical export market, says Mr Henry Briscoe, technical director of CAPS. Here, he outlines new developments in the industry as a whole and views export prospects for local pharmaceutical manufacturers.

IN Zimbabwe we have a viable pharmaceutical manufacturing industry that is poised to supply countries in the rest of Africa and even further afield. After 15 years in the wilderness, the promised land of new export markets for medicinal products cannot be invaded overnight.

CAPS (Pvt.) Ltd, major exporters of Zimbabwe's pharmaceuticals, are finding that, in far-off countries, competitive quotations in themselves are not sufficient to obtain orders. Buyers require an assurance as to the statutory authority vouchsafing the standards of manufacture.

The Zimbabwe Drugs Control Council, a commendable body indeed, do not, as yet, have the necessary world-wide stature.

It is necessary, therefore, to study the advances of good manufacturing practices (GMP) and to update our procedures accordingly. The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) of the United States is acknowledged as having the most stringent standards in this field.

CAPS have opened communications with this organisation, with a view to the eventual licensing by the FDA.

When embarking upon this exercise it soon becomes apparent that much of our machinery needs renewing. Overseas pharmaceutical equipment manufacturers incorporate GMP requirements into their designs.

The purpose of these features is to facilitate efficient cleaning between batches; to minimise the amount of handling of materials; to eliminate the emission of drug dust into the atmosphere; to bring variations of fill down to an absolute minimum; to monitor the manufacturing while it is in progress and to prevent leakage of contaminating material from seals, bearings and so forth.

Because of this degree of specialisation, prices of machines are astronomical. It is possible to buy five cars for the cost of a medium output tablet press that produces up to a million tablets per day. This does not included any more than the basic machine.

As far as CAPS is concerned there are two major considerations when buying new equipment. Our advantage in the export markets is that we are prepared to consider short runs, which requires versatility.

It is, therefore, of no value to buy complicated machinery that can take 18 hours to set up if the run will be completed in a matter of five hours. Second, the developed countries where pharmaceutical equipment is manufactured, favour automation, whereas we wish to employ as many workers as is feasible.

RESEARCH

At CAPS much research activity is centred upon improvement of existing formulations, methods of manufacture, and techniques, in the interests of enhanced product standards.

In the main, new product development hinges upon the expiry of patents on well-tried products that have been in use for 20 years. Before any new medicine can be offered for sale, however, it has to pass the detailed scrutiny of the Drugs Control Council (DCC).

This requires a two year period for formulation, stability trials and the provision of data that proves to the DCC that the drug, when taken by the patient, acts in the desired manner over an optimum period of time.

So there is a constant search for better testing techniques such as high pressure liquid chromatography and others.

For the immediate future the Zimbabwean pharmaceutical industry will need to expand in order to meet the increased local demand for medicine that will result from a National Health Scheme. Furthermore, it is on the cards that our pharmaceutical products will make deep inroads into new export markets.

In the longer term there is a distinct possibility of a common market among central and southern African countries. In terms of population this will be a large grouping, which, with increasing per capita incomes over the years, will offer a fertile base for expansion.

There would be possibilities for the building up of a chemicals industry using local raw materials. The one important ingredient we lack in Zimbabwe, chlorine, will become available from the salt pans of Botswana and Mozambique.

It might also become feasible to investigate the vast wealth of herbal medicines that have been utilised by ngangas over the ages. The active principle, of some herb, scientifically extracted, purified and evaluated may make a world wide contribution in the field of therapeutics.

Boost for Natfoods

NATIONAL Foods has launched a nationwide expansion programme which includes the development of a recently bought 20 hectare site at Aspindale, near Salisbury, at an initial cost of $8 million.

New depots are also being built at Shabani and Chipinga and the existing depot at Marandellas, is to be extended soon.

The National Foods group consists of eight wholly-owned subsidiaries and two 50 percent owned associates. During the year ending March 31, the group recorded an after-tax profit of $4 522 000, from a turnover of $74 322 000.

With mills and depots employing more than 3 000 people in all the major centres, National Foods products, including flour, maize meal, rice, salt and stockfeeds are distributed to mines, villages and business centres throughout the country.

The growing population and new export markets, however, have necessitated developments at Chipinga, Shabani and Aspindale.

Training is seen as an investment in the future and not just an expense of the present. The group provides wide-ranging training programmes for all levels of its staff.

Recently a trainee miller from Bulawayo sat the London City and Guilds miller's examination, and was placed second out of a total of more than 240 candidates from all over the world.

Apart from staff welfare and training activities, National Foods has also taken a keen interest in boxing throughout the country through sponsoring local and international fights and establishing a Boxing Academy in its pavilion at the Salisbury Showgrounds.

Sugar Boom at Hippo Valley

HIPPO VALLEY, the country's largest sugar producer, expects to produce 185 000 tonnes of sugar this year — an increase of 5 000 tonnes on last year's production.

Zimbabwe's total sugar production for this year should amount to about 330 000 tonnes, of which half will be consumed by the local market, says Mr Dave Dennett, a Hippo director.

Last year Hippo produced 180 000 tonnes on a total area of 14 321 hectares and this year's target of 185 000 tonnes, is the maximum possible production from the cane grown at Hippo Valley.

Labour unrest caused a loss of production in April this year, but by the end of June, the Hippo Valley mill had achieved an overall recovery of 88,43 percent. The recovery level for June alone was 89,26 percent and was the highest in Southern Africa.

Training plays an important part in the company's success, with instruction ranging from tractor-driving to plantation management, says Mr Dennett.

"At present, we have 37 apprentices in various forms of practical training, including fitting and turning, boiler-making, motor mechanics, and carpentry in an effort to offset the shortage of skilled labour in the country," he said.

"We also train people in various aspects of sugar production and run courses in cane husbandry, field supervision and cane cutting."

Modular training programmes have proved successful, with employees undergoing intensive training for about two weeks at a time, enabling them to put into practice what they have learnt while it is still fresh in their minds, says Mr Dennett.

Benefits Soar

THE ending of the war of independence resulted in an improved position for Zimbabwe in the internal sugar market and a steady growth in sales.

Increased purchasing power through wage increases and the ability to market in previously inaccessible rural areas brought about an increased demand which should continue to grow, said Hippo chairman, Sir Raymond Stockil, in his annual review in July.

Exports also benefited, he said, with sugar once again moving through the port of Maputo, resulting in a shorter rail haul and therefore lower marketing costs.

SUGAR PRODUCTION IN ZIMBABWE

ZIMBABWE'S estimated sugar production for this year is 330 000 tonnes — an increase of more than 30 tonnes on last year's national production.

The graph shows the growth of the sugar industry during the last 20 years, but does not show Hippo's contribution, which amounted to 180 000 tonnes last year.

Although domestic consumption is only expected to account for about half of this year's production, it will be up by about 30 percent on last year's figure of more than 120 000 tonnes.

Imports fell from more than 50 000 tonnes in 1960 to less than 10 000 tonnes in 1962 and were no longer necessary by 1963.

ITALIANS OFFER JOINT BUSINESS PROJECTS

Salisbury THE HERALD-BUSINESS HERALD in English 16 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

ITALIAN financiers have offered to be minority shareholders in joint business ventures with the Government and the private sector, the chairman of the Italian Chamber of Commerce, Mr Luigi Gasbarri, said this week.

The chamber's section responsible for Zimbabwe, Angola and Mozambique wanted to invest in banking, mining, agriculture, manufacturing and rural reconstruction projects.

"We are prepared to hold up to 40 percent shares in any venture acceptable to Zimbabweans. We shall leave the issue of shares to your Government and the individual businessmen," he said.

TOBACCO

In an interview, Mr Gasbarri who is also secretary-general of the Italian Institute for Africa, said they would also like to increase trade between Italy and Zimbabwe.

"At the moment trade balance is in favour of Zimbabwe." The main exports to Italy were tobacco, chrome and asbestos while imports were machinery and motor vehicle components.

Although Mr Gasbarri did not commit himself to any figure, it is believed the Italian businessmen were prepared to invest millions of dollars in Zimbabwe's development programmes.

"We are interested in almost every sector of economic development. Your economy has a brilliant future," he said.

BANKERS

Mr Gasbarri is leading a 12-man delegation of representatives of the Italian business community, including bankers and officials of Impresit, the company that built Kariba Dam. The men were on a fact-finding mission.

The Italian Chamber of Commerce was 100 percent private and had already engaged in joint ventures in Nigeria as minority 40 percent shareholders.

Speaking about African economy following his 40 years' experience on the continent as his country's ambassador, Mr Gasbarri said Zimbabwe offered a "wonderful" economic future.

The 68-year-old economics graduate was Italy's consul-general in Salisbury for five years before UDI. "My only son was born here," he said.

In their joint venture deals, the Italians offered feasibility studies, operational expertise and training facilities for local personnel.

The delegation, which is still in the country, leaves for Rome on Sunday after talks with representatives of various bodies including the Reserve Bank of Zimbabwe, the ministries of Economic Planning and Development, Agriculture, Commerce and Industry, Mines and Energy Resources and the Chamber of Commerce.

FERUKA REFINERY OPERATION SET FOR 1982

Salisbury THE HERALD-BUSINESS HERALD in English 16 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

THE Feruka oil refinery at Umtali is unlikely to be in operation until mid-1982, sources in industry said this week.

Officials from the Dutch subsidiary of the American-owned Fluor Corporation which built the refinery have been in Zimbabwe since independence to inspect and survey the installation.

Sources indicated that these experts are now looking at what improvements and modernisation are required before the plant comes on stream again.

The cost of renovation and updating is understood to be around $3 million.

Meanwhile officials from the Ministry of Commerce and Industry, together with representatives from the oil companies which own Feruka, are discussing future petroleum, diesel and oil requirements which can be channelled through the refinery.

But neither the Ministry nor the oil companies were prepared to comment.

A spokesman for Shell and BP said on Tuesday: "We are not privileged to say anything at this stage." Ministry officials were not available.

Meanwhile testing the pipeline from Beira to Umtali has begun. Mr Ken Scheepers, managing director of Lonrho, told Business Herald: "We are busy testing pressures on each section. Sixty km have now been satisfactorily tested from Umtali."

The pipeline, owned by Lonrho, is 288 km long. Mr Scheepers said that so far no leaks had been discovered. Tests began in mid-September and should be completed by the end of December.

TRANSPORTATION WORKERS WAGE AGREEMENT REACHED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 16 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

AGREEMENT was reached yesterday on wages payable to employees of member companies of the United Transport Group after two days of talks in Salisbury between management and representatives of the companies' workers' committees.

A spokesman for the companies declined to say what the new wages were.

The meeting, held in the wake of a strike last week in Bulawayo by employees of the Zimbabwe Omnibus Company, a group company, was chaired by the chief executive of the United Transport group, Mr Peter Stead, in Salisbury and was attended by officials from the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare.

Describing the talks as cordial and constructive, Mr Stead said that the meeting ended with positive assurances from the representatives of the workers that in future management could rely upon the full support and co-operation of the workers they represented.

Mr Webster Chinduta, a spokesman for the representatives of the workers' committees, commented that the offer made by the management to the workers was much appreciated, as was the co-operation the workers had received from the United Transport Group in solving the issue.

● The afternoon shift at Wankie's No. 3 Colliery stopped work for about 30 minutes yesterday over what management called a "misunderstanding".

The 600 workers went back to work after being addressed by a senior member of the management, said a company spokesman.

BLACK PROSPECTORS HIT AT MULTINATIONALS' SURVEY BID

Salisbury THE HERALD-BUSINESS HERALD in English 16 Oct 80 p 2

[Text] A GROUP of small prospective black miners has objected to applications for exclusive mineral prospecting orders in Zimbabwe by two multinational corporations.

Mr Pollant Mpofu, the secretary general of the African Business Promotion Association, which is trying to assist the small workers in their effort to extract the minerals, urged the Mining Affairs Board to reject the applications by Union Carbide Rhomet and Corsyn Consolidated Mines.

STRATEGIC

"The granting of exclusive prospecting rights to foreign-owned companies is contrary to the national interest in that it puts the mineral resources of the country, some of them strategic, at the disposal of foreigners," he said.

Mr Mpofu said his organisation had already entered into agreements with foreign companies for joint mining ventures. The companies were mostly from the United States and West Germany and were interested in mining tantalite, scheelite, tin, iron, copper, coal and uranium.

"The majority of the shares will be held by black Zimbabweans and this will ensure that money remains in the country for the benefit of all."

The companies were prepared to finance the project, and supply the necessary expertise.

A local company, African Mineral Development Company, had been formed and was negotiating to buy a building with 14 offices.

The organisation would finance and advise the small miners. The Association has 8 400 members, some of whom had mineral claims throughout the country. More than $280 million has been negotiated by the association.

In a strongly worded memorandum sent to the Mines Affairs Board, Mr Mpofu said indigenous Zimbabweans were aware of the presence of minerals throughout the country but were not immediately in a position to extract them because they were making financial arrangements for joint ventures.

"To this effect, the AMPA is trying to obtain finance for the indigenous people, especially the excluded black population so that they can extract the minerals for the benefit of the country."

Their efforts would be frustrated if the rights to prospect for the minerals were granted to multinationals.

"The Government will find it more difficult to spread the wealth of the country among the masses if mineral rights are given to foreign companies."

Mr Mpofu said economic power should be in the hands of indigenous people so that they can enjoy full independence. "Political independence is meaningless if the economy of the country is controlled by outsiders."

He said if free enterprise was going to survive in Zimbabwe it should be on the basis of equity participation under which the blacks were increasingly involved in the development of the country's resources.

MEMORANDUM

Secretary for the Ministry of Mines and Energy Resources, Mr Christopher Ushewokunze, had received the memorandum and would circulate it to the applicants for prospecting orders.

He said the objections would be discussed at the Mines Affairs Board meeting on October 23. "The authors of the memorandum will be invited to answer queries," he said.

AFRICAN UNIVERSITIES' ASSOCIATION MEETS

Cotonou EHUZU in French 25 Sep 80 pp 1,6

[Article by Philippe Hado: "Conference of the Secretary General of the AUA [African Universities' Association]; For a Better Definition of the University in Africa"]

[Text] After his arrival in our country on Sunday 20 September, the secretary general of AUA, Professor Levy Makany held a conference last Tuesday in the amphitheater of the medical faculty in Cotonou.

Brother Makany introduced his association. He described its structure, objectives and problems in detail.

The director of grants and cooperation for the association, brother Adjete Wilson and the secretary general of the national university of Benin, Comrade Assani, took their place at his side.

Although AUA has happily attained some of its objectives, we are still far from seeing the light at the end of the tunnel. AUA will henceforth put particular emphasis on the subject of the structure of African universities, which explained its Secretary General Makany, is especially to make the universities actually offer their services to Africa. Beginning in December, AUA's general conference will have to take an interest in this problem. As proof of the above, three subjects are proposed for the attention of the university members:

--the role of the university in Africa's development

--research for development

--education, permanent training.

At this time AUA is studying the creation of an association for African physicians and botanists, for the purpose of enabling African scientists and research workers to work side by side.

The AUA came into being in Rabat, Morocco, on 12 November 1967. This date does not correspond, as is so well said by the secretary general, to the date of conception of the association. In fact, the idea to create the AUA goes back to 1962. It burst forth precisely in Madagascar during a meeting organized by UNESCO. This meeting pertained to the development of higher education in Africa.

From the outset AUA was comprised of about 30 African universities. Today it numbers 70. However, ten or more universities do not belong to AUA as yet. This is principally the case of some Algerian (4) and Egyptian (9) universities. The universities of Guinea and Bamako are not members either. The case of the two latter universities results from a misunderstanding on the subject of the definition of the university. This misunderstanding, as pointed out by Makany, seems to have been resolved. It is probable that at the next large-scale meeting of the association in December 1980, these two universities will request admission to the AUA.

As to the objectives of the AUA, they pertain to the promotion of cooperation between the African universities, and the establishment of relations with the international academic community.

AUA assumes this mission by organizing meetings and symposia on the level of African universities. It also establishes a program of inter-African grants. Up to the present time 127 Beninese students have benefited from this program of inter-African grants. The amount of the grants allocated to the Beninese students reached $2 million.

AUA maintains close relations with UNESCO, OAU, AUPELF [Association of Universities Partiallv or Completely Using the French Language]. CAMES [African and Malagasy Council on Higher Education] and the Association of Arab Universities.

AUA includes many organizations: the general conference, the executive council, general secretariat, the conference of rectors, presidents and vice chancellors of the universities.

The general secretariat has its headquarters in Accra. The rectors, presidents and vice chancellors' council will meet in the near future in Yamoussokro. They will have to study the practical problems relating to the exchange of professors.

It should be noted in regard to the grants program that AUA has always relied on the contributions of U.S. AID [United States], ACDI [Canadian Agency for International Development] and the Inter-University Council of Great Britain.

NIGERIAN, CAMEROONIAN TERRITORY DISPUTE--An extensive part of the country's territory along with her citizens has been grabbed by the Cameroun Republic, it has the Cross River State, said the panel. [as published] This area is inhabited by several villagers known as Effiat Mbo community of the Cross River said the panel. The panel was appointed by the state government to look into the creation of new local government areas in the state. A witness, Chief Joseph Atte told the panel that lack of the country's precise knowledge of the extent of her territory in the southeastern borders with the Cameroun Republic had robbed her of those villages. This lack of knowledge by the past military regime and ineffective administration of the area by local authorities from Eket and later Oron had resulted in parts of the Effiat Mbo community being expropriated, against their wishes to the Cameroun. The panel which further heard evidence from Effiat Mbo community at Ibaka, was told that this situation exposed Nigerian citizens inhabiting this part of the country to frequent acts of molestation and harassment by Cameroun gendarmerie. Chief Atte told the panel that Cameroun's claim to ownership of these villages came during the civil war when the villagers fled their homes. [Text] [Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 20 Sep 80 p 1]

DACKO SAID TO HAVE DONE NOTHING GENUINE TO OVERCOME PROBLEMS

Paris LE MONDE in French 24 Sep 80 p 1

[Article: "Dacko's 'Distress'"]

[Text] In a private visit to Paris, David Dacko, chief of the Central African State publicly shows unjustified anger. A luncheon guest of President Giscard d'Estaing, on Monday, this man who arrived a year ago in the luggage of the parachutists at the time of the Barracuda operation, has come--for the second time in a few months--to express his gratitude to the French Government. It is true that, simultaneously, Dacko is presumed to present the first statement regarding his operation.

It is quite evident that if he has delivered a diatribe on the steps of the Elysee against the press, denouncing what he calls a "campaign of denigration," it is because Bokassa's successor in Bangui is dissatisfied with himself. Certainly no one will deny that he inherited heavy economic and financial liabilities. But nothing prompts us to believe that he has earnestly done anything to get out of this impasse. Worse still, some of his friends who, for a while were counted among his close collaborators, contined shamelessly to aggravate the difficulties of the Central African treasury.

In the political arena, renewing the autocratic methods which were the cause of his own eviction on the night of 31 December 1965...by Bokassa himself (strange recurrence of events insufficiently emphasized as yet), Dacko augments his statements of policy in favor of a single party. In the same manner as the former emperor, he imprisons his opponents and turns a deaf ear to all those who do not espouse unconditionally his points of view and who call for a dialog. In Paris he alludes to elections, with a straight face which leaves everyone speechless, which, he says, will be "very free," a formula, which by itself, provokes scepticism.

Using a method, which is as common as it is abusive, the Central African president accuses the newspapermen of being responsible for the economic and social situation and the serious internal tensions which they report, he becomes angry and gets up a case against them. Moreover, hoping to please the president of the French Republic, he mentions his "distress" when he notices the French newspapermen "publicising Bokassa."

A French citizen, the former emperor could be tried either in France, or in Central Africa. Dacko played a role in a scenario which made it possible for this criminal to remain out of reach of the Ivory Coast. He can only blame himself.

COFFEE QUOTA SET AT 84,000 TONS BY INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATION

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 8 Oct 80 pp 1, 4

[Text] Addis Ababa (ENA)--Ethiopia has been granted a quota of 84,000 tons of coffee by the recently concluded, International Coffee Organization's Conference in London.

This was stated by Comrade Yoseph Muleta, Permanent Secretary of the Ministry of Coffee and Tea Development, who returned here recently after attending the Organization's conference at the head of an Ethiopian government delegation.

With the latest allotment of 84,000 tons for Ethiopia's coffee by the Organization this coffee year, the country's coffee export added to that supplied to non-member countries could total 110,000 tons, Comrade Yoseph stated.

Comrade Yoseph noted that failure on the part of the coffee producing countries to meet their alloted quotas for the year will lower their share of supply next year, which will in turn, make it difficult for them to manipulate world coffee market.

Comrade Yoseph said Ethiopia has no other alternative but to curb undue coffee consumption at home, while at the same time tightening control over coffee smuggling and contraband activities, to meet the quota allotted to it by the Organization, and to save the country a substantial currency in foreign earnings.

On world coffee price, Comrade Yoseph noted that the price fixed for coffee by the London Conference was reliable and lasting and warned that it would be unwise to hoard coffee based on speculations that coffee price may jump up due to temporary crop failure like the one that behald Brazil last year.

Ethiopia, a founding member of the International Coffee Organization which was set up 27 years ago has been re-elected board member of the Organization, Comrade Yoseph disclosed.

The Organization, made up of 45 coffee producing and 28 coffee consuming countries, has been instrumental in acting as a rendezvous for co ee merchants and consumers alike and also in bringing about understanding between them in the coffee price, according to Comrade Yoseph.

SCHOOL STATISTICS COMPARED WITH PREVIOUS YEARS

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 11 Oct 80 p 3

[Text] Addis Ababa (EH)--A nine per cent rise in student population is expected in all the schools across the city in the 1980-81 academic year compared to last year's total which stood at 275,947, it was revealed here yesterday.

Comrade Taffesse Asfaw, Education Officer of the Addis Ababa Schools' Office, informed the ETHIOPIAN HERALD that the growth in student population has maintained an upward trend since the eruption of the on-going popular revolution. The education officer said in the 1977-78 school year the number of students was 231,737 while in the 1978-79 period it rose to 253,379, thereby registering an annual growth of about 9 per cent.

Comrade Taffesse mentioned however that there was a slight fall in student population in the 1975-76 and 1976-77 period as a result of the anti-people acts carried out by reactionary elements. He said the trend has otherwise remained a positive one.

Speaking about the student population for the previous year, the education officer said a majority of the students or 183,983 of them were enrolled in grade 1 to 6. Those enrolled in grades 7 to 8 totalled 40,820 while 51,144 were enrolled in grades 9 to 12, bringing the total to 275,945. The students were enrolled in government schools and non-government schools including those placed under public control, mission and church schools as well as community schools. The total number of schools in the capital city is given as 223, out of which 65 account for government schools consisting of elementary, junior and senior secondary schools.

According to the education officer, the number of non-government schools or those placed under control is 126, made up of elementary and junior secondary schools. The student enrollment in these schools is 90,759 compared to government with 168,181 students. There are 19 mission schools with a total enrollment of 9,072 students, nine community schools with 4,628 students and three church schools with 3,307 students.

The education officer gave the number of teachers for Addis Ababa for last year as 5,371 and the breakdown showed that 3,411 are employed with government while the remaining 1,960 are attached to non-government schools including mission, community and church schools. The number of teachers for the years 1977-78 and 1978-79 were given as 5,094 and 5,101, respectively.

Comrade Taffesse observed that the number of teachers has to be increased for the 1980-81 academic year in order to cope with the ever-growing student population. He said last year they had the services of 220 part-time teachers and said they hope to do the same this time as well. He said the Addis Ababa Schools' Office hopes to get many teachers from the different parts of the country coming to the capital on transfer.

The education officer further revealed that in the previous academic year 30,075 grade 6 students sat for the national examination out of which 21,052 passed. Those who sat for the grade 8 examination totalled 25,641 and 17,949 passed. In addition to that a total of 7,895 grade 12 students attending government schools had taken the Ethiopian School Leaving Certificate Examination.

Comrade Taffesse said all this shows that a massive increase in student population, which is being accompanied by classroom shortage and staffing. He said in an effort to ease the problem it is planned to strengthen four vocational technical schools within the city in the next four years. He said the technical vocational schools will in the meantime help to alleviate the shortage of skilled manpower in the country. The Entoto Vocational Technical School will begin operations in the current academic year. The other comprehensive schools that are to be converted into technical vocational schools will be the General Wingate, Misrak and the Nefas Selk.

The education officer pointed out that the three-shift system introduced a few years ago is designed to alleviate the classroom shortage prevalent in many schools in Addis Ababa. He said the former Ecole Normale Francaise has been handed over to the Addis Ababa Schools' Office and is believed to be of considerable service in accommodating about 2,000 students in three shifts. The school has been re-named Black Lion Secondary School.

Comrade Taffesse feels that evening schools will in a way help in alleviating the classroom shortage. He said evening school attendance has shown a marvelous progress in the past three years. In 1970 E. C. the number of students attending grades 1 to 12 was 30,000 while in 1971 it climbed to 56,000 and last year it reached 84,450 and the figure for the current academic season is hoped to make a considerable increase.

In his closing remark the education officer noted that studying under the three-shift system might be a bit uncomfortable for students but stressed that it is up to students to pursue their studies diligently. He said for that matter it is imperative for students to study hard during their sparetime as well in order to keep abreast with their regular classwork.

GRAIN DISTRIBUTION IMPROVEMENT--Addis Ababa (ENA)--The grain purchasing task force of Shoa region, would up its meeting Saturday after agreeing on a nine-point declaration on improving and streamlining the purchase and distribution of grain. Comrade Debela said that no matter of how high the production increase, if these do not reach the public at reasonable prices there will be no market stabilization. Appeal had been made from the area for more labour force to harvest the sesame and sorghum crops which were described to be very encouraging this year. In the first round of the campaign period in 1971 E. C. the Humera State Farm was alloted a quota of 24,000 hectares of which it cultivated 21,340 hectares and placed the land under sesame and maize, the two main crops of the area. In the second phase it cultivated 40,196 hectares and places 32,598 hectares under sesame and 7,598 under sorghum. It is believed that agricultural production in the area will be considerable if the existing crops are harvested in time. [Text] [Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 12 Oct 80 p 1]

NATION REPORTEDLY AT 'CROSSROADS OF SURVIVAL'

[Article by Rex Quartey: "The Realities of Our Time"]

[Excerpts]

THE excitement, euphoria and the merry-making which marked the 1st year in office of the Limann Administration will soon erode into the arms of History. Today the hard, grim, depressive realities stare us in the face. A lot seems to be achieved on PAPER. The Minority Parties have never minced words in criticizing the actions of the Government whenever they have felt the need and the inspiration to do so.

The U.N.C.-P.N.P. alliance has been abrogated. The impasse of the afloat officers of the Black Star Line is still in limbo. One seems however to be impressed by the candour and frankness with which the President faced the recent Press Conference; he admitted disappointments in certain sensitive areas and as expected hoped for improvement in the years ahead.

One is not unmindful of the wrecked economy which the Government inherited; one is sympathetic to the Government for inheriting empty coffers as a legacy. Our foreign exchange position, we are daily told, is in a very bad shape. But I believe that it is a cliche to drum on rooftops that we are richly endowed with mighty natural and human resources; the brain migration is climbing to high disturbing levels.

Our industries are producing at low capacity. Inputs are woefully lacking. The queueing hysteria is still with us. The future may be bright but the picture is very gloomy and bleak today.

crying for permanent repairs — the "potwells" are getting more deeper, destructive and treacherous to both motorists and vehicles. The meandering taxi queues are acutely frustrating and time-wasting. Enough room is not created for creativity and Initiative. The Schools are without textbooks.

Ghana A.D 1980 is at the crossroads of survival. We have travelled a long way since independence. We have inspired others to greatness. Unfortunately we lost our bearing and lustre. By divine grace, we are back again to Civilian Rule, armed with a formidable Constitution.

But how soon shall we replace the thick tears on the faces of the starving masses with joyous smiles of satisfaction, hardwork, motivation and economic prosperity? The numerous protocol agreements signed, plans and any blue print for economic recovery and rejuvenation should begin to show real results now to drown the near despair, gloom, frustration, apathy and the pessimism which seem to have engulfed us.

IRAQI MOTIVES IN WAR WITH IRAN QUESTIONED

Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 7 Oct 80 p 2

[Editorial: "The War for What?"]

[Text] The war going on between Iran and Iraq poses serious questions for the world. But fortunately, the reasons why the war may go on and the reasons why it must end seem to be equally weighed.

One must at the moment discount big-power interest in either the outbreak of the war or in its continuation, since destabilization in the oil-rich Gulf region cannot really mean any sense to anyone.

There is no doubt that Iraq caused the war or wanted it. This must be seen in Iraq's unilateral abrogation last week of the Algiers Pact (1975) between the two countries which ceded pockets of Iraqi territory to Iran (under the Shah) and divided the vital Shatt al-Arab estuary between the two to give port facilities to both countries.

Analysis also point out that the Iraqi leader, Saddam Hussein, is interested in toppling Khomeini's Shi'ite revolution in Iran in order to prevent the possibility of its influence spreading into Iraq, which has a large, activist Shi'ite Muslim population.

Above all, Saddam is seen to be on a course of establishing Iraq as the regional power in the Gulf (as Iran was under the Shah).

Placed against these ambitions of the Sunni Muslim leaders who rule Iraq are what look like more powerful reasons why peace must return between the two neighbours soon enough.

Internally, the Iraqi rulers are believed to be on a suicide course in prolonging the war, because the Shi'ite Muslims make up the majority in the Iraqi armed forces.

A Coup

The Shi'ites in the Iraqi army, even if they had no sympathy for the Ayatollah's Shi'ite revolution in Iran, are thought likely to use the war to organize a coup against Saddam Hussein's regime in order to end the long dominance of the Sunni Muslims in the political affairs of Iraq.

It is also feared that if the war escalates, each may destroy the other's oil industry in the first place. In the second place, the passage of oil through the Gulf may be blocked.

If these happen, many countries would be deprived of oil from Iraq, which is the world's second biggest oil exporter after Saudi Arabia. Oil exports from Saudi Arabia itself and from Iran, Kuwait, United Arab Emirates, and Quatar would be blocked. [as published]

And the unnerving possibility is also that the super-powers would come into the war eventually, particularly since politics over the Gulf has become a major element in their global confrontation.

Iraq's unilateral abrogation of the Algiers Pact is certainly illegal; it is also immoral if the importance of access to the Shatt al-Arab waterway is taken into account.

However, with Iraq reportedly willing to renegotiate the pact, most probably emphasizing its claim to the pockets of territory taken by the Shah, the Iranian authorities should find it reasonable to compromise on the territorial issue which was the immediate occasion for the war.

Saddam Hussein's other ambitions are pointless; they do not justify his course of violence that may bring serious problems to the world--and he must be told this.

UNC ALLIANCE PULL-OUT DEPLORED, UNITY URGED

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 29 Sep 80 p 2

[Editorial: "The End of PNP-UNC Alliance"]

[Text] A serious evaluation of the decisions and resolutions passed by the Popular Front Party (PFP) and United National Convention (UNC) at the end of their respective week-end delegates conferences in Accra clearly indicates that a widening gap is steadily developing between the Minority Parties and the ruling People's National Party (PNP).

Unsavoury remarks and criticisms were levelled by the Minority Parties against the Government in its approach to the many and varied problems facing the country.

To cap it all, the UNC, by an overwhelming majority of 164 votes to 44, decided to abrogate its alliance with the PNP. Whatever the justification for the abrupt end of the alliance the view is being expressed in many circles that the UNC could have done with more time to learn the arts of alliance and that the two parties would, no doubt, like any other human institution, make mistakes and learn from them in the supreme interest of the nation.

On the part of the PNP, the hard facts of political life should dictate a cautious reaction to the UNC decision.

In a country of conflicting interests, political intrigues and uncertainties operating under the Constitution of our Third Republic, the PNP has got to settle down to work harder than ever before to justify the confidence reposed in it by the electorate who voted it into power. It should muster enough strength and courage to push through an effective programme in the solution of its problems and in this exercise procrastination is a great obstacle to progress.

To this end, mere assurances of greater tomorrow is not enough. What the PNP Government does in its various fields to hasten the realisation of its goals is what really matters to the people. Above all, the party must be able to stand on its own and not look for friends and allies where they do not exist. Indeed, the PNP should never have deceived itself into thinking of a lasting wedlock between it and the UNC. The UNC itself has been bold enough to declare that it "never committed to the alliance in perpetuity."

However Mr William Ofori-Atta, leader of the UNC, is reported to have declared at the closing session of the conference that "since his party recognises the country's need for sound economy, peace and stability and firmly established constitutional and civilian rule, the supreme interest of the country would be its paramount concern. The supreme interests of the nation will always supersede purely party and personal interests."

Unity today should be our greatest concern and it is the duty of every Ghanaian, irrespective of his party affiliation, to work to strengthen this unity. Bitterness due to political differences will carry the country no where and party leaders and supporters should therefore try to control their party feelings.

Whatever arguments are advanced to justify the abrogation of the alliance, it would be interesting to know the reaction of UNC members who are holding sensitive key posts in the PNP administration.

BRAIN DRAIN CAUSED BY PARTISAN POLITICS

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 30 Sep 80 p 2

[Editorial: "Rich With Knowledge"]

[Text] GHANA, no doubt, is one of the few African States with a large number of well-trained and adequately — educated persons.

Besides the top bracket, this country boasts of a large concentration of skilled middle-level manpower. These include technicians, teachers, nurses, all shades of artisans etc.

Again, Ghana is one of a few African States which, in recent times, have not benefited from the expertise of her children.

Consequently, this country faces all sorts of social and economic problems. It is not surprising, therefore, that the Vice-President, has criticised those "who have rich professional backgrounds but are not willing to go down to earth to help in rebuilding the country's shattered economy".

A fair comment on the Vice-President's criticism should not be restricted to the period of the PNP Administration, so we begin with the Ghanaian elite of the First Republic.

After independence, the ruling group narrowed its selection of men with expertise to loyal, faithful members or activists or functionaries. It did not matter if one possessed all the chains of degrees and professional qualifications or accumulated experience in one's field of work or area of operation; membership of the ruling class was the basic criterion.

On the fence, therefore, went the large population of experts born, bred in Ghana with the acquisition of expert knowledge supported by the tax payer.

Then came the military interregnum of 1966. The military elite ignored the contributions and services of the learned they (military) considered "enemies of the revolution".

Meanwhile, other African countries and international agencies were gradually benefiting from the refined expertise the neglected Ghanaian was carrying about.

The Second Republic came, and the 1972 military intervention followed and the traditional pattern remained unchanged.

By the end of the SMC regime almost all men with rich professional backgrounds had left the country because of neglect and a fast-fading economy.

It is from the foregoing that attempts were made from the onset to have national administrative machinery made up of all men and women who possess proven professional expertise and intellectual ability to steer Ghana out of the hydra-headed economic mess.

It is unfortunate that that arrangement could not materialise. It is not too late, anyway and the "Graphic" calls on the Vice-President to take steps to assembly all the country's experts irrespective of one's political leaning.

It is only when this is done that Ghana can use the brains of her men and women who have rich professional backgrounds to help rebuild the country's shattered economy.

PFP POLITICIANS SPLIT OVER VALIDITY OF RESHUFFLE

AB240736 Accra Domestic Service in English 0600 GMT 24 Oct 80

[Text] The PFP [Popular Front Party] parliamentary chief whip, Dr Manson, has rejected a statement by Mr Kwaku Baah, former leader of the parliamentary group that changes in parliamentary portfolios can only be done by (?him). He said the recent reshuffle in portfolios by the party leader, Mr Victor Owusu, and the steering committee is well within democratic practices and norms which all democrats should respect and accept.

At a news conference in Accra, Dr Manson, MP for Dormaa, asked Mr Kwaku Baah to accept decisions of the highest authority of the party. He emphasized that the question as to who is the leader of the PFP parliamentary group has been settled by the appointment of Mr Odoi-Sykes, MP for Ashiedu-Keteke. Dr Manson explained that after the election in 1979, all the PFP MP's elected agreed to accept shadow portfolios assigned to them by Mr Victor Owusu. He said Mr Baah's leadership of the PFP parliamentary group was confirmed by Mr Victor Owusu and the steering committee in a letter which stated that the appointment was for 1 year and that it was subject to review. The same letter confirmed other appointments and nobody raised an objection. Dr Manson said it should therefore not have been difficult for Mr Baah to accept the changes in responsibility.

Meanwhile, Mr Kwaku Baah has said that his removal as leader of the PFP parliamentary group was a unilateral decision taken by the party's leader, Mr Victor Owusu, Mr Da Rocha, and seven out of the 29 members of the steering committee. Addressing a general meeting of the party in his constituency at Nkawkaw, Mr Kwaku Baah said since the steering committee is not properly constituted, the decision to remove him is [word indistinct]. He maintained that he is still the leader of the PFP parliamentary group. Mr Kwaku Baah noted that dictatorship is creeping into the top hierarchy of the party. He urged party members who believe in democracy to stand against anyone who arrogates to himself the power to run the party as his personal property. Mr Kwaku Baah said the current rift in the party is a result of the stand against the party's leadership, which contributed to the dismal performance in last year's elections. He added that the PFP has no hope for forming a government in future under the leadership of Mr Victor Owusu.

He noted that the difficulties "are only a guide to progress and if the people really work hard to overcome them, they will surely be on the road to prosperity." Kim Bang Mun was addressing a press conference at the DPRK Embassy in Accra yesterday to mark the Sixth Congress and the 35th anniversary of the founding of the Workers Party of Korea (WPK) which falls today. He said what was happening to Ghanaians today was exactly what happened in Korea some 35 years ago, but with dedication determination and united front, the workers and people of DPRK had been able to transform the country to a prosperous nation. SAVINGS FROM OIL RATIONING--Ghana saves about 200,000 gallons of petrol a day through the coupons system. This represents 20 per cent of the one million gallons the country consumes everyday. Talking to the TIMES in an interview, the Minister of Lands, Natural Resources, Fuel and Power, Prof George Benneh, said "the 20 per cent of petroleum being saved as a result of the voluntary rationing would be used as a national Petroleum Reserve." Commenting on the effect of the Iranian-Iraqi war on Ghana's petroleum supplies, the Minister explained that if the war continued for a longer period, there would be a short fall in the petroleum industry and this could lead to a scramble for the little oil available on the world market. The scramble, Prof Benneh said, could also result in the raising of prices. Sources close to the Tema Refinery said that the plant would be closed for six weeks beginning from next March for maintenance and other repair works. This would not affect the normal flow of petrol in the country. [Text] [Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 1 Oct 80 p 1]

CHINESE TECHNICAL AID RICE PROJECTS DETAILED

Blantyre DAILY TIMES in English 8 Oct 80 p 5

[Text] BLANTYRE
Tuesday

RICE, which for a long time was grown on a small scale, has now steadily become a staple food and is bringing a lot of cash to the pockets of local farmers throughout the country.

This is mainly as the result of the technical co-operation between Malawi and the Republic of China.

The co-operation in this field began in 1965 when the two countries signed an agreement on technical co-operation in agriculture. Under the agreement, the Government of the Republic of China sent an agricultural mission to this country in December, the same year.

The mission opened up a farm at Karonga in the Northern Region, demonstrating to local farmers improved techniques in the cultivation of rice and other crops.

Because of the success of the demonstration work performed by the Chinese agricultural technicians at Karonga, the Government of Malawi in October 1966 requested the Chinese Government to develop a rice scheme at Njala in Zomba District.

From 1967 to 1969, the Chinese Agricultural Mission developed a number of rice schemes from the Northern Region to Southern Region at such places as Hara, Wovwe, Limphasa, and Tangadzi.

Besides doing farm demonstration work, the mission also assists local farmers in opening up waste land for farming, constructing irrigation systems in the process.

According to a brief report on Chinese Agricultural Mission of January this year, the largest rice scheme so far the Chinese Agricultural Mission had developed is the Domasi Irrigation Rice Scheme at Mpheta in Machinga District.

Construction of the scheme started in May 1972 and was completed in December 1975.

Construction of the Bua Irrigation Rice Scheme in Nkhotakota, started in May, 1975 and is expected to be completed in December 1980. Rice paddies in this scheme will total 750 acres when completed in December.

Nkhate Rice Irrigation Scheme was launched in 1978 in Chief Makhwira's area, about 20 miles east of Chikwawa Boma. It has 600-acre piece of arable land earmarked to benefit economically over 3,000 people in the area on smallholder farming scale.

The Chinese Agricultural Mission, at the request of the Ministry of Youth and Culture, also assists the Malawi Young Pioneers in carrying out their Vegetable production programme.

Spearhead vegetable farms in Blantyre and Lilongwe produce a variety of vegetables for the local market and for export as well.

Previously there were 12 rice schemes, either opened or technically assisted by the Chinese Agricultural Mission, throughout the country, however, eight of them were turned over to the Government of Malawi in early 1977.

Chinese agricultural technicians, however, at times visit these schemes to see whether local farmers need assistance. At present, rice schemes in Nkhotakota, Kaporo, Zomba and Chikwawa, and vegetable farms in Blantyre, Dedza and Lilongwe are under direct technical assistance of the Chinese Agricultural Mission.

As of December 1979 the Chinese Agricultural Mission had developed a total of 4,750 acres of rice paddies in this country.

The Chinese also assist technically in the cultivation of rice and other crops in farm schemes developed by the Government of Malawi, which cover 11,300 acres.

A total of 34,000 tons of rice from these schemes was reaped in 1979, compared to 29,539 tons from 1966.

With a view to providing Government agricultural workers and local farmers with advanced agriculture know-how, particularly in the cultivation of rice, the Chinese Agricultural Mission established a training centre at Domasi Irrigation Rice Scheme, incidentally the Mission's headquarters as well.

The training centre has facilities for 30 trainees at a time. Trainees are chosen by the Government of Malawi. They are as follows:

Senior Government agricultural workers: Those who are college graduates receive four weeks on — job training in theory as well as practical work.

Junior Government agricultural workers: Those who are secondary school graduates receive a four-month training programme, of which 80 per cent is field practice. The trainiees are then assigned by the Government to rice schemes as junior agricultural workers after completion of their course.

Local farmers: those farmers wishing to acquire a plot in the rice scheme receive a six-month field training.

A total of 7,204 persons so far had received agricultural training in the training centre. Of these, 1,024 were Government agricultural workers, according to the report.

Domasi Irrigation Rice Scheme, some 25.6 kilometres northeast of Zomba, covers 1,250 acres of rice paddies.

The Chinese Agricultural Mission built an irrigation system for this scheme, which enables the Domasi River to water 350 acres of paddy during the dry season, and a drain for the overflowing water from rice paddies during the rainy season.

At present, there are 1,432 farmers in this scheme. Of these, 145 are Malawi Young Pioneers.

On the average, every farmer has at least an acre of paddy. One acre yields 28 bags of rice (72 kilogram per a bag), according to statistics conducted in the past three years.

Water from Domasi River is used to irrigate some 350 to 400 acres.

Since rice is also grown during the dry season, the farmers thus get to have two crops a year.

Before the construction of the Domasi scheme, there were only about 500 inhabitants in the Mpheta area.

However, the area's population has increased to more than 6,000 as a result of the completion of the project. — MANA

IMPROVED FACILITIES NOTED AT CHIPOKA HARBOR

Blantyre DAILY TIMES in English 9 Oct 80 p 5

[Text] LILONGWE
Wednesday

CHIPOKA Harbour is at a point of interchange between lake and rail traffic and it is important to the through transport of agricultural produce from the Northern Region and inputs to the North.

Chipoka is a southern terminal of the Malawi Railways Lake Service, Monkey Bay is the other.

When the Life President travelled to Chipoka yesterday to commission the newly assembled ship, he found that the harbour has better facilities than it did in the past.

The need to improve the harbour was identified some time ago and was made more urgent by the initiation of the Karonga and Chitipa Rural Development Project.

In 1976, however, it became clear of the urgent need to expand the port in view of the Viphya Pulp and Paper Project.

Later, the International Development Agency (IDA) of the World Bank made available funds for the development of the harbour under the rural development project.

The Government commissioned Howard Humphreys and Sons to undertake designs while contractors Ascon Limited of the Republic of Ireland carried out construction works.

The actual work on the improved harbour started in November, 1977 and it was substantially completed in 1979. The total estimated cost was a little over K2 million.

The improvement works required the construction of a new quay wall, an 800 square meter cargo transit, a passenger shelter with ticket office and kitchen/bar space.

In order to facilitate the loading of fuel cargo onto the lake service vessels and the bunkering of vessels, a new fuel installation was constructed.

This consists of steel pipelines direct from the Oilcom Depot south of the port area to the quay side with an additional storage facility for diesel and petrol for the lake service.

Timber-piled dolphins were constructed to provide an additional berth for the loading of fuel cargo.

Water supply, sewerage and sewage treatment, an electricity supply by diesel generator and fire fighting installations were provided.

Staff houses and gate houses were also constructed among other things.

A northern terminal jetty at Chilumba, Karonga, was the first to be constructed and it was opened by His Excellency the Life President, Ngwazi Dr. H Kamuzu Banda in 1973.

It is anticipated that these improvements along with the commissioning of the new ship yesterday, would enable the lake service to cope up with the volume of cargo and passengers forecast at least until 1985, according to a spokesman from the Ministry of Transport and Communications here.

Further expansion may be necessary later to cater for specific projects such as the Viphya Pulp and Paper Project, the spokesman said. —MANA

TRAORE ON ECONOMY, WESTERN SAHARA, NONALIGNMENT

Bamako L'ESSOR in French 11 Sep 80 pp 3,6

[Interview with General Moussa Traore by the British press agency REUTER]

[Excerpts] Mali's internal situation, party life, economic problems, the Western Sahara and the issue of nonalignment were the topics of an important interview given by General Moussa Traore to the British press agency REUTER. We are printing below the responses of the President of the Republic in their entirety.

[Question] Mr President, in your New Year's message, you yourself said that 1980 would be a difficult year for Mali. In reality, it seems that this year has not been an easy one. Have the difficulties encountered reached or surpassed your predictions?

[Answer] In stating in my New Year's message that 1980 would be a difficult year for Mali, my purpose was not to make forecasts, but to bring to the Malians' attention the necessity of taking adequate measures in order to face the difficult economic situation. Two measures seemed indispensable to me; to reduce the expenses of government, especially by fighting wastefulness, and to make some readjustments in the economy in order to correct certain imbalances, so that the national economy would not stagnate. These methods would necessarily have direct consequences on the standard of living of our citizens and would require new sacrifices. It was my duty to solemnly inform the nation.

[Question] The scholastic and student crisis was undoubtedly one of the main events of this year. Don't you think that the authorities had a share in the responsibility for the successive outbreaks of the crisis everytime one had the impression that it was settled?

[Answer] At the present time, the major preoccupation of the Malian peop' is not so much to place responsibility, but to provide for the future of Malian education and the future of our children. Believe me, we consider this a very serious task towards which the government is actively working. Meanwhile, the government has clearly resolved to accept its responsibilities in this crisis, in order to assure the normal functioning of Malian education.

[Question] It is publicly rumored that the assigning in your new government of the portfolios of National Education and the Interior to the military shows your intention of dealing severely with this problem when school opens. What do you think?

[Answer] What doesn't the public opinion say... It is not the first time in our country that the portfolios of Education and the Interior have been given to the military. In any case, I have a clear idea of my mission towards the people. Being responsible for the smooth functioning of institutions, I have by virtue of this, the duty to assure that the country will develop in order, harmony and accord.

[Question] What was and what should be the role of the only party, the Democratic Union of the Malian People, whose structural weakness, in your own words, was dramatically revealed by previous events?

[Answer] The role of the party is and will be a role of directing, mobilizing and educating the Malian people in order to satisfy their deepest aspirations. Our party is young, less than two years old. Steps have already been taken to make it more dynamic and effective. The Emergency Congress which will be held very shortly must answer this need of vitalizing the party, and of mobilizing party members around its objectives.

[Question] In spite of these events, Mali has not often been spared by inflation nor by the constant rise in oil prices and its consequences, nor by the whims of the climate. What exactly is the present situation?

[Answer] Mali, like other countries of the Sahel, has been affected by the international economic crisis and the unfortunate effects of the hazards of the climate. From 1975 to 1980, oil prices have climbed at a dizzying rate. The grain shortage has been put at 269,000 tons for the 1979-1980 season. We must confront this deficit, but we must also take other emergency measures such as saving the livestock that is seriously endangered by the lack of water and the shortage of grazing land, protecting farming and harvesting, and reinforcing the services responsible for environmental protection and the struggle against desertification. In brief, a comprehensive program of water conservation and rehabilitation of the Sahel.

[Question] They are also saying that uranium will soon be mined. The West is also talking of diamonds and of cooperation with a Western European country in this area.

[Answer] The mining of uranium!...It is one of our many hopes. Mali's partners, who are the beneficiaries of search permits in this field, are now doing on-site work. This also goes for the search for diamonds.

[Question] And the search for oil?

[Answer] It is continuing in conjunction with permits granted to several foreign oil companies.

[Question] What solution do you advocate for the settlement of the conflict in the Western Sahara, after the majority vote in Freetown?

[Answer] Actually, in Freetown, the request for admission of the RASD (Arab Saharan Democratic Republic) obtained 26 votes out of 50 member states, which was a simple majority as required by Article 28 of the OAU Charter. This is not a question of interpretation, which could lead to differences in opinion, but a fundamental, established fact which must be recognized. But as I have already stressed, the admission is not an end in itself. After this majority vote, Mali's opinion is that the solution must take into account two main ideas:

First, all parties, and I repeat all parties, affected as well as concerned parties, must admit and accept the right of the people of the Western Sahara to self-determination, and agree that, as the Monrovia resolution of the Organization of African Unity very pertinently stated, the people of the Western Sahara have not yet exercized their right to self-determination.

Secondly, when all the parties have agreed upon this principle, everyone must acknowledge that it is in the interest of all the states of the region that the basis for this self-determination must be peaceful. If all the parties have agreed upon the self-determination of the people of the Western Sahara, as declared by the Organization of African Unity, there will only be a question of terms and conditions left to consider.

[Question] Mali is considered one of the few countries that is really non-aligned. What are the advantages of this?

[Answer] To answer your question "what advantages does Mali derive from a policy of non-alignment"?, I say that the advantage cited above seems to me to be self-sufficient. Mali will honor its commitments. Our country freely created with 16 other countries the Nonaligned Movement and it participated freely in the preparation of the OAU Charter, which includes nonalignment among its basic principles. In few words, it is in complete sovereignty that Mali is carrying out an uncompromising and vigorous policy of nonalignment.

JOINT COMMUNIQUE WITH USSR ISSUED ON HEALTH COOPERATION

Bamako L'ESSOR in French 13-14 Sep 80 p 3

[Text] Dr N'Golo Traore, minister of Public Health and Social Services, returned to Bamako Tuesday morning at the conclusion of an official visit to the USSR made on the invitation of the Soviet Government. Upon leaving the airplane, the minister of health was welcomed by S.E.M. Malik Fazilov, Soviet ambassador to Mali, who was accompanied by his wife and several workers from the Department of Health.

During its stay in Moscow, the Malian delegation had two working meetings with Soviet Department of Health officials. Their work was officially brought to a close with a final communique which appears in this article.

Throughout its visit, the Malian delegation had the occasion to observe the high level of medical care in the USSR.

We will present a detailed review of this visit in our next editions.

Final Communique

On the invitation of the Soviet minister of Public Health, a five member Malian delegation, led by Dr N'Golo Traore, minister of Public Health and Social Services, made an official visit to the Soviet Union from 28 August to 8 September 1980.

During its visit to the Soviet Union, the Malian delegation held meetings with the Soviet minister of Public Health Academician B.V. Petrovski, with the Soviet vice minister of Public Health, Dr D.D. Venedictov and with the vice president of the State Commission on Foreign Economic Relations, I.I. Tchernichev.

At these meetings, opinions were exchanged on the present state of and the prospects for further development of public health in the USSR and in the Republic of Mali and on Soviet-Malian cooperation in the area of public health.

The two parties noted the great deal of attention given by their governments to the questions of public health protection and expressed their satisfaction with Soviet-Malian cooperation in the area of public health. The Malian delegation is pleased with the excellent work Soviet specialists are doing in Malian medical facilities and with the help the USSR has given in the area of the training of national medical staff.

The two delegations exchanged views on greater international cooperation in the field of public health, including the OMS (Malian Health Organization).

Minister N'Golo Traore expounded on the problems and difficulties that exist in his country's public health sector, especially stressing the training and continued improvement of medical personnel and the reconstruction of a group of medical facilities. Much attention was given by the Soviet party to the problems set forth by the Malian party and they promised to send a group of experts to Mali for this reason.

The Malian delegation had the opportunity to visit medical facilities in the cities of Moscow, Leningrad, Volgograd, Tashkent and Samarkand.

The two delegations expressed their satisfaction with the visit and their certainty that it will aid in fruitful future cooperation in the field of public health between the two countries.

The minister of Public Health and Social Services of the Republic of Mali, Dr N'Golo Traore, also expressed his gratitude for the warm welcome extended to his delegation during their stay in the USSR and invited the Soviet minister of Public Health, Academician Petrovski, to visit the Republic of Mali.

COMMENTARY CONDEMNS ISRAEL ON JERUSALEM ISSUE

Bamako L'ESSOR in French 29 Aug 80 p 1

[Text] The Islamic Conference Organization devoted the entire week of 21-27 August 1980 to Palestine, and decided to make the present year, year 1400 of the hegira, the year of the holy city of Jerusalem (Al Qods).

The justification for this initiative was further reinforced by the latest developments in the Middle East situation. The entire world is opposed to the Israeli authorities' policy of Judaization of Al Qods. The progressive world is working towards the strengthening of the Palestinian people's resistance in Jerusalem and in occupied Palestine. Year after year, the international community has called for Israel's withdrawal from all occupied Arab territory and the annulment of the measures of annexation and alteration of the character of Jerusalem.

Today, Mali is following with great concern the present development of the Middle East problem, the Palestinian question, and more particularly, the serious dangers that imperil the holy city of Jerusalem. The basic law promulgated by the Israeli government proclaiming reunified Jerusalem as the eternal and indivisible capital of the Hebrew state is a challenge to the whole world. Unfortunately, it is not the first that Zionism is sending to world opinion.

The Israeli settlements, the Judaization of the Palestinian and occupied Arab territories, the repeated Israeli violations of the rights of man and the refusal to apply the Geneva Conventions of 1949 are integral parts of a far-reaching colonialist plot meant to take possession of Palestine in its entirety and a part of the neighboring Arab territories.

A so-called concern for security and futile historical pretexts have been given as justifications for the state of affairs. In reality, Israel's objectives are neither peace nor security, but domination and expansion.

Since 1948, when the Jewish state was founded, there have been many violations; including violation of the United Nations Charter and resolutions, violations of provisions of international law, of the Universal Declaration of the Rights of Man, and the Geneva accords on the protections of civilians in times of war. This warmongering and arrogant attitude is the most serious obstacle to the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East. Because of its historical conscience and its regard for human values, Mali denounces these acts which go against the most basic of ethics.

The holy city of Jerusalem remains engraved in our hearts as the sacred place where the Prophet ascended; the place which inspired our deepest and loftiest spiritual beliefs and traditions.

Because of these historical and spiritual reasons that make Jerusalem infinitely dear to our hearts, the act of the Israeli parliament is an intolerable challenge that the future will condemn.

President Machel highly praised the great achievements of the Hungarian people in building an advanced socialist society under the leadership of the Hungarian Socialist Workers Party. He voiced his appreciation for the foreign policy of the People's Republic of Hungary, directed toward international rapprochment and consolidation of world peace and security, toward the strengthening of the international workers' movement and in support of the National Liberation Movement in its struggle against imperialism, colonialism and neocolonialism.

President Machel informed President Losonczi about the successes of the Mozambican people, led by the FRELIMO Party, in transforming the social life and establishing the structures of the popular democratic state, in accordance with the decisions of the Third FRELIMO Congress, and in building a socialist society in the People's Republic of Mozambique.

He also reported on the political and organizational offensive now in progress in the country, and stressed its importance in carrying out the tasks defined by the FRELIMO Party for the 1980/1990 decade, considered the decade of victory over underdevelopment.

President Machel asked President Losonczi to express to the Central Committee of the Hungarian Socialist Workers Party and the people of the People's Republic of Hungary the gratitude of the FRELIMO Party Central Committee and the government and people of the People's Republic of Mozambique for their prompt response to the Mozambican Government's appeal for international assistance in combating the effects of the drought prevailing in Mozambique. That response is further proof of the internationalist spirit of the Hungarian people.

He also reported on the peaceful foreign policy of the FRELIMO Party and government of the People's Republic of Mozambique, directed toward strengthening the unity of the world revolutionary movement and consolidating the forces that struggle for full independence on the African continent, against the imperialist attempts to divide the African states and to set them against one another.

He noted his government's concern for the consolidation and development of the socialist countries on the African continent, and praised the foreign policy of Mozambique, directed against colonialism, neocolonialism and imperialism, for international pacification and for world peace and security. He lauded the efforts and the active role of the People's Republic of Mozambique in strengthening the nonalined movement.

The two chiefs of state analyzed the international situation and observed with satisfaction that the positions of the two countries are identical with respect to the major international issues.

They were pleased to note that the world revolutionary process is going forward and that countries of the four continents are building socialism to achieve the happiness and welfare of their peoples. They observed the progress of peoples throughout the world in the struggle against colonialism, neocolonialism and imperialism. They particularly stressed the importance of the victories of the people of Angola, Mozambique, Ethiopia, Zimbabwe, Nicaragua and Afghanistan, altering the balance of power in favor of peace, democracy and social progress.

They also observed, however, that world imperialism had not given up its intent to dominate the peoples. To this end, the imperialists undermine the pacification process, foment the Cold War, develop the arms race and interfere in the internal affairs of other states. The two chiefs of state vehemently condemned the imperialist, reactionary and hegemonist powers, whose goal is to create foci of tension, threatening international peace and security.

The two parties praised the efforts and proposals of the member states of the Warsaw Treaty Organization, aimed at achieving demilitarization and disarmament throughout the world, particularly in Europe. They stressed the importance of continued negotiations on strategic arms limitation, as well as the need for ratification of the SALT-2 accord.

Analyzing the situation in southern Africa, the two chiefs of state observed that the balance of power in the region is in favor of the forces of liberation and progress. In this regard, both parties hailed the victory of the Zimbabwean people over colonial and racist domination. They praised the national government constituted after Zimbabwe's independence and noted their conviction that it is vital to maintain the unity of all the Zimbabwean people in order to consolidate national independence and to rebuild the country, to insure it will have peace and social progress.

President Losonczi paid special homage to the internationalist support given by the People's Republic of Mozambique to the Zimbabwean people in their struggle to liberate their country.

In this regard, they strongly denounced the maneuvers of the South African racist regime, which is occupying the country illegally, and of South Africa's imperialist allies. They reiterated that any political solution to this problem must conform to the resolutions of the UN General Assembly and Security Council.

The two leaders reaffirmed their support for and militant solidarity with the just struggle of the South African people, led by the ANC, against racism and the system of apartheid. They condemned the repressive action of the racist government of Pretoria against the South African people, and denounced the Bantustanization of South Africa. They condemned the imperialist powers' support to South Africa, in violation of UN resolutions, support aimed at the expansion of the Pretoria regime's military and nuclear power, constituting a threat to the security of the countries in the region and to world peace. They strongly condemned the attacks perpetrated by racist South Africa against the People's Republic of Angola and the Republic of Zambia.

The two leaders reaffirmed their support for transformation of the Indian Ocean into a denuclearized zone of peace, and called for the dismantling of the military bases in the region. In this regard, they condemned the imperialist attempts to establish new bases in the Indian Ocean and on the African continent.

Analyzing the situation in the Middle East, both parties resolutely condemned the capitulatory Camp David accords. They particularly condemned the negotiations regarding Palestinian autonomy, based on this accord, which seeks to give the appearance of legality to the Israeli occupation of Arab land.

Both parties reiterated that a just and lasting solution can be reached only with the withdrawal of all Israeli troops from the Arab territory occupied since 1967, recognizing the Palestinian people's inalienable right to self-determination and creation of an independent state. They also expressed their support for the struggle of the Palestinian people, led by the Palestine Liberation Organization, their sole legitimate representative.

They condemned Israel's illegal decision to proclaim the city of Jerusalem as the capital of Israel.

The two chiefs of state saluted the victories of the people of Afghanistan in their struggle to consolidate national independence. They condemned the imperialist provocations and aggression against the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan and voiced their support for the revolutionary government of that country.

They hailed the victory of the democratic revolutionary forces in Nicaragua and expressed their solidarity with the just struggle of the peoples of Chile, Bolivia, El Salvador and other Latin American countries for their democratic rights and social freedom, against the military dictatorships imposed and supported by North American imperialism.

The two parties recognized the positive role of the Movement of Nonalined Nations in the struggle against imperialism, colonialism, neocolonialism, racism, Zionism and apartheid. They also stressed the importance and the role of the Organization of African Unity in the struggle against these evils and for the consolidation of national independence and inter-African cooperation.

They spoke against the imperialist maneuvers to perpetuate the present system of international economic relations, and in favor of the establishment of a new international economic order, based on equality, mutual interest and respect for the right of peoples to possession and use of their natural resources.

Both parties stressed the need to strengthen the role of the United Nations in maintaining and consolidating world peace and security, and reiterated their adherence to the principles and goals defined in the United Nations Charter.

The two parties examined in detail the status of their bilateral relations. They stressed that the fraternal cooperation between the FRELIMO Party and the Hungarian Socialist Workers Party plays a decisive role in the rapid development of relations between the Mozambican and Hungarian peoples. They concluded that the meetings between the highest party and government leaders of the two countries are very important to the expansion of mutually advantageous bilateral cooperation.

They noted with satisfaction that the discussions, conducted in a cordial atmosphere and with full identity of views, have helped to strengthen relations between the two countries. They determined to promote an exchange of delegations in various areas in order to expand the fraternal relations of friendly cooperation between the two countries.

The president of the Presidential Council of the People's Republic of Hungary assured that the Mozambican people may continue to rely on the Hungarian people's solidarity and internationalist cooperation in carrying out their program to build socialism. The Hungarian Socialist Workers Party, the government and the people of Hungary are fully prepared to develop an exchange of experiences, looking to strengthen the friendship and cooperation between the two parties, governments and peoples.

During the visit, a Treaty of Friendship and Cooperation was signed between the People's Republic of Mozambique and the People's Republic of Hungary, constituting a solid foundation for the development of fruitful cooperation between the two countries and contributing to strengthening the common struggle for peace and socialism. Other important agreements were also signed, which will strengthen multilateral cooperation between the two brother countries.

In his own name and on behalf of his delegation, President Losonczi expressed to President Machel his appreciation and gratitude for the warm welcome and brotherly hospitality offered by the Mozambican people during his stay in the People's Republic of Mozambique.

Pal Losonczi, president of the Presidential Council of the People's Republic of Hungary, speaking for Janos Kadar, first secretary of the Central Committee of the Hungarian Socialist Workers Party, and in his own name, invited Samora Moises Machel, president of the People's Republic of Mozambique, to pay an official visit of friendship to the People's Republic of Hungary. EDITORIAL CAUTIONS AGAINST HEADLONG RUSH INTO INDEPENDENCE

Windhoek DIE SUIDWESTER in Afrikaans 7 Oct 80 p 4

[Editorial: "Independence"]

[Text] At some time or other Southwest Africa must and will, of course, become independent. But the way some individuals and organizations view, conceive and broadcast this fact is really ridiculous, not to say ludicrous.

With all the ruckus being raised one would swear that Southwest Africa had to make a mad dash for independence. It bears too close a resemblance to change for its own sake. Everything must now be purely and simply "recast" and people are racking their brains to come up with all sorts of councils, committees, unions, etc., for "SWA/Namibia," determining whether things are genuinely what they should be. And lurking in the wings is South Africa.

It is really great for people and businesses and subsidiaries and things to want to be independent in this way. But why the frantic rush? Who is chasing anyone? It is as though an authentic condition of independence were now really materializing. But that simply is not the case. On the surface everything seems to be and has become "independent," but below the surface it is a different tune.

For example, there is a certain bank that makes one appear important as so-and-so from "SWA/Namibia." But it always has to communicate with Pretoria to get authorization before making any arrangements for a customer.

Southwest Africa wants independence not quasi-independence. We will not be bluffed into independence.

We do not want a "glossy paper independence" and we do not want to become a banana republic where everyone thinks everything is hunky-dory when in fact things are deteriorating. Such is the typical African pattern. May Southwest Africa be spared that!

COAST GUARD PATROL BOAT—In early November, SWA/Namibia will have its first fishing patrol boat come into Walvis Bay harbor. But it will have to be registered under a foreign flag. Since SWA/Namibia still does not have a flag of its own, the vessel has to sail under South Africa's flag until independence. Secretary for Economic Affairs Piet Kruger will fly to Gibralter on Sunday to take delivery of the vessel. It had been purchased earlier for nearly 4 million rands some months ago. The coast guard boat's technical parameters and equipment are impressive: 45 meters long; 2,000 nautical mile range at top speed of 15 knots; 3,000 nautical mile range at lower speed; stabilizers; satellite navigation system; radar; echo depth sounder; radios, etc. The vessel can also be used for sea rescue operations because it is double-ended and extremely maneuverable. It was built in a German shipyard and has up till now been active mostly in the Mediterranean. Kruger opined that it would cost nearly 6 or 7 million rands to have it built today. The vessel can accommodate a crew of 20. Once it reaches Walvis Bay it will be somewhat modified to make it suitable for research operations. In his interview with AZ [ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG] Kruger stated that it will carry a crew of from 11 to 13 individuals. It will first be necessary to declare a 200-mile zone in order to effectively protect Southwest Africa's fishing grounds. A name still has to be found for the new coast guard vessel, but its inspectors can demand boarding rights onto any trawler or fishing boat of countries belonging to the International Commission for the Southeast Atlantic Fisheries (ICSEAF). All the same, Southwest Africa has no legal recourse against those who violate certain agreements under the ICSEAF. Once SWA/Namibia does proclaim a 200-mile zone a single patrol boat will, of course, no longer suffice. It will then be necessary to consider aerial surveillance. FEDERAL GOVERNMENT URGED TO INVEST OIL MONEY

[Text] THE Federal Government has been called upon to invest a greater part of the country's oil revenue in the industries in the country.

The chairman of the board of directors of the Nigerian Institute of Journalism (NIJ), Chief Mike Olu Pearse, said this on Monday in Lagos while declaring open the ninth National Oil Seminar.

Chief Pearse said that such an action would be in pursuance of the country's self-reliance policy.

The week-long seminar, which is being attended by over 25 journalists, researchers and scholars from all over the country, is jointly organised by the Gulf Oil Company (Nigeria) Limited and the NIJ.

He declared: "We cannot remain forever a dumping ground for the manufactures of other nations."

Chief Pearse thought that it would not be in the country's economic interest to be contented with the present role of "professional distributors and commissioned agents."

He added that Nigerians had often complained that their overseas friends determined the prices of their raw materials and dictated the costs of the products they made from them.

Chief Pearse wondered how Nigerians could expect a better treatment when they chose to export their primary products instead of processing them at home.

He declared: "We must as a nation take our destiny in our hands."

He also urged Nigerians to start thinking seriously about the numerous by-products of crude oil and urged participants to be concerned about the future of the oil industry in the country.

According to him, this was necessary because the industrialised countries were busy looking for alternative sources of energy to replace oil which they considered "an expensive commodity."

Chief Pearse also advocated having energy correspondents on the media staff corps.

SAPELE, ONNE PORTS TO BE DEVELOPED BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

[Article by Aliu Zubair]

[Text] TWO major ports — Sapele, in Bendel State, and Onne, in Rivers State — are to be developed by the Federal Government at a cost of ₦178 million.

Disclosing this in Lagos yesterday, the Minister of Transport, Alhaji Umaru Dikko, told the Press at the beginning of the Nigerian Ports Authority, silver jubilee celebrations, that the Sapele ports, being modernised at a cost of ₦48 million was expected to be completed in two years.

"This," the Minister said, "is in pursuit of President Shehu Shagari's promise to the people of Bendel State and the Federal Government's programme of intensive development of the inland waterways transportation potentials of the Delta area.

Alhaji Dikko explained that as part of its projects in the Eastern sector of the country, the NPA had built a new port of six main-line berths in Calabar.

The four main-line berths at the Port Harcourt ports had been expanded to 10, he added.

Further extension of the old site of Port Harcourt port, Alhaji Dikko said, was being hindered by land shortage.

The Minister said that the Onne port was being built at a cost of ₦130 million.

Operations

The port is to have six berths with container and roll-on, roll-off facilities.

It is expected to serve the Ajaokuta Steel Mills.

On the authority's second and third extension projects, Alhaji Dikko disclosed that Lagos Port had been expanded to 20 berths.

The Minister announced that cargo coming in and out of Nigeria had been effectively decentralised.

This is to assist all importers and exporters to achieve faster and cheaper operations and enable the country to achieve optimum spread of traffic between ports.

Other plans to further modernise operation were that the NPA is currently installing bulk handling facilities for cement and grains in the ports of Calabar, Warri and Port Harcourt.

NLC REPORTED BACKING DOWN ON MINIMUM WAGE

Lagos BUSINESS TIMES in English 23 Sep 80 p 24

[Excerpt] The Nigerian Labour Congress is to shelve action on the N300 minimum wage pending legislation on the issue by the National Assembly.

A decision to this effect was reached last week at an emergency meeting of the National Executive Council of NLC. The meeting was attended by the general secretaries and presidents of the 42 industrial unions.

At a meeting of NEC of NLC last month, after the withdrawal of the congress from the Tripartite Talks on the minimum wage, the meeting was slated for last week probably to assess the discussion with President Shehu Shagari.

The congress also at that meeting expressed its willingness to discuss the minimum wage with the President when it said that all other government organs handling the matter had not made any meaningful move to meet up with the congress's demands.

It is not known if the delegation of NLC mandated to meet the President at the last NEC meeting did had an audience with the President, results of which should have been the core of last week's meeting. [as published]

For a minimum wage to be legally enforceable, the congress resolved, it must be an Act of the National Assembly. A House of Representatives Committee on Labour under the chairmanship of Mr Bassey Etinam, is currently taking evidences from the Industrial Unions, the Nigerian Employers Consultative Association and members of the public to enable it make recommendations to the National Assembly on the N300 minimum wage.

On the issue of car loans and basic allowances, the NLC still stands by its demand and has therefore mandated a body of the congress involved in the negotiations with the various government organs to keep up such negotiations.

CORRUPTION OF NIGERIANS BLAMED ON ASIANS

[Editorial report] In an article entitled "Asiatic Businessmen and Nigeria's Economy" published in the Lagos English-language DAILY TIMES on page 3 of the 10 September 1980 issue, author Oguike Achonu described several incidents in which he or his friends had run into corruption by Asians in Nigeria. Most of the incidents mentioned involved Asians paying authorities to overlook illegal acts or illegal businesses.

"As [Banji] Adeyanju [author of a recent series in the DAILY TIMES on corruption] appeared to have discovered during his investigation, the corrupting influence of the Asians has many ramifications which have permeated every aspect of business life in this country. Nigerians have learnt so fast from them that even if you drive all the Asiatic businessmen out of the country, a certain measure of corruption will still remain with us. So quickly have Nigerians internalised the practice that there is hardly any measure that wil purge them of it. We can however see that the Asians and other aliens are not entirely to blame. It takes two to dance a tango. If they offered and we did not accept, incidences of bribery and corruption would be minimised.

"The Asians are not all evil. As Adeyanju found out, there are a few good ones who go as far as setting up foundations to help Nigerians, are assisting in the industrialisation of the country and contributing to the economic development of Nigeria, even if as my friend believes, they come in as paupers and leave as millionaires.

"While I believe that stringent action should be taken to curb the Asians of their excesses, I would not go as far as my friend who said that if he became the President of this country, his first executive action would be to purge this country of the Asiatic malady--Idi Amin style!"

EPE STEEL FIRM MAY NOT START OFF AS SCHEDULED

Lagos SUNDAY TIMES in English 21 Sep 80 p 1

[Article by Weyinmi Ejekukor]

[Text]

THE mini-steel industry established by the Lagos State Ministry of Trade and Industry at Epe may not take off on schedule as expected.

This is because the Lagos State Waste Disposal Board may fail to provide the major raw material—crushed car metals—needed for the industry.

Sources close to the Waste Disposal Board revealed that it was now negotiating with a foreign firm at Ilupeju, the highest bidder, to buy vehicle scraps.

It was gathered that the Federal Government's proposal to buy the crushed metals for use at the Ajaokuta Steel Industry was rejected by the Board.

The mini-steel industry was relying on the Board as its chief source of raw material for the factory.

The Waste Disposal Board has been removing derelict vehicles from Lagos roads with a crane to the car crushing plant at Iganmu where the auto crusher uses powerful hydraulic rams to flatten and reduce five cars to the size of one.

With the present development, the Epe Steel Industry which was formerly a textile factory may not find it easy to get an alternative source of raw material.

Contacted, the chairman of the Lagos Waste Disposal Board, Alhaji T. A. Mumuni, denied the allegations.

He claimed that the Federal Government did not at any time approach his Board to buy the crushed car metals.

At the office of the Lagos State Ministry of Trade and Industry, an official at the Industrial Division refused to comment since the mini-steel industry was still at its embryo stage.

Also contacted, sources close to the Federal Ministry of Steel claimed that the ministry did not approach the Lagos State Government to buy the metals.

Disclosing this in Ibadan was the Minister of Agriculture, Alhaji Ibrahim Gusau. The minister observed that this development had given appreciable concern to most households which ate cassava and yams. He lamented that the situation had not eased even with the new production techniques envisaged for yam which he said had been slow in coming. Speaking at the first symposium of the International Society for Tropical Root Crops (Africa branch) holding at the International Institute of Tropical Agriculture (IITA), Alhaji Gusau, said it was imperative that rapid improvements be made in the production of the two important crops. The minister regretted the recent situation in Nigeria where "two pests came in place of one just as we began to expect bumper harvest of cassava." He stated that cassava mealybug and red spiders were now known to be ravaging the crops in Central and West Africa sub-regions. The minister also observed that many farmers were known to have abandoned the planting of yam crop. [Text] [Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 15 Sep 80 p 5]

USING ALL OIL LOCALLY--Nigeria can utilize all her oil more gainfully locally, the External Affairs Minister, Professor Ishaya Audu, said in Lagos. "We can use the oil internally in manufacturing a lot of our requirements. Import substituting industries could also be established to effectively use the oil." Professor Audu was speaking in an exclusive interview shortly before he left for Vienna, Austria for the OPEC ministerial conference which began on Monday. It was far cheaper to utilize oil locally and get more revenue than export it. Industries such as fertiliser, synthetics and allied petroleum products used in motor industries, could be established, he said. Professor Audu said that the claim that the developed countries would not need oil by 1985 was a mere propaganda stunt. "We have heard that before. We are yet to see it done and instead of reduced demand, there has been increased demand for oil by these nations," he added. The OPEC countries, he noted would not succumb to such a cheap propaganda. The Minister disclosed that it was OPEC that was forcing the developed nations to cut down their oil consumptions and not the reverse. OPEC had contributed more than even the developed nations to the economic advancement of the underdeveloped world. [Liad Tella] [Excerpt] [Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 17 Sep 80 p 1]

POLICE FACILITIES, TRAINING SCORED--A Benin high court judge has expressed concern over the poor state of the equipment and facilities at the disposal of the Nigeria Police Force. Mr Justice Augustine Maidoh, speaking at the opening of the Benin September assizes, said that the police force was not sufficiently equipped to combat the increasing crime wave in the society. Mr Justice Amidoh said: "How can you expect a man without even a cutlass to go and confront someone armed with a rifle?" He then called on the Federal Government to provide the necessary facilities and equipment for the Police force. Mr Justice Amidoh also called for better incentives to lure qualified persons into the police force. Earlier, Mr Justice Maidoh announced that the opening of the assizes would not be ceremonial. He added that all the parties involved in the 18 cases to be treated should be fully prepared as he would only grant adjournments on "reasonable ground." Mr Justice Amidoh, appealed to the Police, defence and state counsels to ensure that documents relating to cases in the court were ready. Among the cases listed were three murder cases, two armed robbery, four entry, criminal appeals, four breaking and one case each of manslaughter and defilement. OIL SALES TO KOREA--Nigeria is now ready to sell oil to Korea, but shipment has been delayed due to some differences in oil prices among oil exporting countries. Nigeria is one of the oil exporting countries in Africa that has joined the list of major African and Latin American oil suppliers to Korea, whose intention is to diversify her oil supply source from the politically unstable Persian Gulf region. In a story titled "Diversification scheme--Rok Alter Oil Sources" published in business and finance column of the KOREAN HERALD of August, Korean Industry sources were quoted as saying that "major oil-producing countries in Africa and South America have joined the list of oil suppliers to Korea--thanks to the government's persistent efforts to further diversify its import sources. The sources expected that more oil producing in Latin and South America will also follow suit, the newspaper, KOREAN HERALD, reported. In this connection, Kyung In Energy Company--one of Korea's major local oil refineries, the paper said, had begun to import some 5,000 barrels of crude oil daily from Venezuela since July on a long-term supply contract basis. The sources were quoted saying that the Korean Government had already completed negotiations for oil imports from Nigeria--described as the largest oil producer in the African continent. But, the paper said, shipment of crude oil from Nigeria to Korea had been delayed due to some differences in oil prices. [Kingsley Alumona] [Text] [Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 20 Sep 80 p 9]

STUDY ON GAS POWER--Bendel State government is presently studying the possibility of using gas source of power supply. If the study proved positive, gas stations would be set up in a number of town in the state. This indication was given last week at Patani Bomadi L.G.A. by the Commissioner for Energy and Water Resources Dr Jacob Obinyan during an inspection tour of establishments under his ministry. The Commissioner however said that until the project became a reality, two new electricity generators would be installed in the area to ensure regular power supply. Dr Obinyan assured the Patani Community that the state government would not neglect their area in the implementation of its programmes and provision of necessary infrastructures. In his own speech, the Commissioner for Lands and Survey, Mr Godwin Eikyor said everything was being done to see that roads in the Patani locality was improved for better access to other areas. The Chairman of the Bomadi Local Government Management Committee, Chief J.S. Ogodori had earlier informed the two commissioners that his people had not enjoyed good drinking water for quite some time now. [Text] [Enugu WEEKLY STAR in English 14 Sep 80 p 3]

WORKERS UNION DELEGATION RETURNS FROM MOSCOW VISIT

Victoria NATION in English 14 Oct 80 pp 1, 2

[Text] A DELEGATION from the Seychelles National Workers Union led by Mr. Jean Johnson returned home this week after having spent over a month in Moscow where they participated in a trade union course at the N.M. Shvenik Higher Trade Union School of the All Union Central Council of Trade Unions (AUCCTU).

Other members of the delegation were Mr. Marcel Gappy, Mr. Henry Charles and Mrs. Taciana Berlouis. The course which lasted for five weeks dealt with theoretical aspects of the trade union movement and the experience of the movement in the Soviet Union.

Among the many topics covered during the course was the contemporary stage of the struggle of the national liberation movements throughout the world and the trade unions' contribution to the solution of the problems of the movements.

Giving his impression on the Soviet trade union system, Mr. Henry Charles said they had been impressed by the Soviet experiences.

"In the Soviet Union, there is no unemployment. The people with whom we spoke are all aware that the well-being of the country depends on their work," continued Mr. Charles.

"The trade union plays a very important role in all spheres."

Mr. Charles said they were also impressed by the cleanliness of the country and the good organisation in the different enterprises which they had visited.

"In the Soviet Socialist Republic of Georgia, for example, there are 900 cooperatives and 500 state farms; it's amazing to see the way they work," said Mr. Charles.

Earlier this month another member of the Seychelles National Workers Union returned home after having attended a one month course in Algeria.

She is Mrs. May Vel, who during the whole month of September was at Ben Aknoun (Algeria) taking part in a workshop for African countries which had as theme "Hygiene and security in work".

The workshop was organised by the Arab Labour Organisation (ALO), an organisation which is greatly interested in labour education.

The ALO aims at improving the working conditions of the Arab manpower in conformity with the dignity of the Arab man, the endeavour to achieve his material and spiritual welfare and the realisation of equal opportunities and social justice. The ALO's interest to help other third world countries is very remarkable.

Meanwhile the National Workers Union has announced that in order to familiarise the people with the important tasks the Union has, and to enable them to realise the need for a maximum contribution at all levels in our society, it will be holding a basic trade union course on Praslin later this month.

The course is also aimed at providing the necessary knowledge and techniques to the participants to enable them to solve their everyday problems.

TEACHERS IMPRESSED BY DPRK's ACHIEVEMENTS

Victoria NATION in English 14 Oct 80 pp 1, 2

[Text] The delegation of Seychellois teachers which has just returned from a 15-day educational tour of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, has expressed its impressions on the Korean education system and described the visit in general as very interesting and positive.

The ten-member delegation, led by Mrs. Marie Thérèse Choppy, the Senior Education Officer for Research, visited several Korean education institutions and found how the State there provided the greatest attention to children and accorded priority to the education of the people.

Mrs. Choppy said they found the education system in Korea very practical and adapted to the people's mentality, the country's realities and its political life. She compared Korea's 11 years of universal education to nine years in Seychelles.

Education in Korea starts at a very early age, she said. There are creches for small children from the age of 17 months--in these creches the children are provided with everything free and are well looked after. This is also where they begin to learn about their country. The cleanliness of the creches struck the Seychellois visitors who had a busy programme of visits and lectures.

In schools, Mrs. Choppy said, the Korean children have a practical system of education. They learn theories and adapt these to the realities and development policies of their country. She said schoolchildren are also taught how to organise themselves and take decisions on their own. During the visit the delegation witnessed how the schoolchildren were organising themselves into working teams to help voluntarily with the rice harvests.

Mrs. Choppy also spoke of the importance accorded to people in the teaching profession in the DPRK.

Sports is also accorded great importance among the schoolchildren who begin training while still very young.

The Seychellois teacher-delegation was very well received in the DPRK where they were struck by what Mrs. Choppy described as "first class discipline, where everybody works, where education, food and lodging are guaranteed to the people by the State and where money is of little importance in the daily life of the people."

The delegation left Seychelles on September 18 on the same plane which took President France Albert Rene to the DPRK. The teachers returned last Thursday.

MUGABE SAYS USSR FREE TO OPEN EMBASSY

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 15 Oct 80 p 1

[Text] The Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, yesterday dismissed suggestions that his Government was opposed to the Soviet Union establishing diplomatic ties with Zimbabwe, and said the Kremlin was free to open an embassy here.

"We have told them everything--that they are free to establish an embassy here and the initiative is entirely their own," Mr Mugabe told an airport news conference on his arrival yesterday from a five-day visit to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

"It's up to the Soviet Union to send people here to discuss the formalisation (of our relationships). As and when they would want to do so, they will find us extremely responsive and we have sent word to that affect to them."

He was answering a questioner who wanted to know if Moscow had been snubbed in its efforts to establish diplomatic links with Salisbury as claimed by certain politicians.

The Prime Minister told journalists that his visit to Korea had been "very successful" as closer ties between the two nations had been forged and an awareness of Zimbabwe's problems realised.

Korea had pledged its support for Zimbabwe's success and the country's leaders had complimented his Government about the way in which it was tackling the problems of unity and consolidation of Zimbabwe's independence.

He had also signed some general agreements covering economic, scientific, technical and trade affairs.

Peking

On his way home Mr Mugabe had a stopover in Peking, where he held talks with Mr Zhao Ziyang, the Chinese Prime Minister, and Mr Hua Guofeng, the Communist Party chairman.

Mr Mugabe said the Chinese leaders had also assured him of Peking's support and that there would be economic cooperation between the two countries.

The Prime Minister, whose delegation included two Cabinet Ministers and several deputies, said he had taken them on his tour to enable them to study the relevant ministries in Korea, which had excelled over the past 10 years, despite being an agricultural country.

On South Africa, he said Korea and China had been unanimous in their support for all democratic forces that were trying to "transform and destroy" apartheid in Pretoria and Namibia.

Iana-Reuter reports that the Korean President yesterday named his 38-year-old son Mr Kim Chong-Il as his political successor.

REPORTAGE OF NKOMO STATEMENTS, ACTIVITIES

Defends Police

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 15 Oct 80 p 4

[Text] THE Minister of Home Affairs, Dr Joshua Nkomo, yesterday appealed for an end to "blanket statements" which he said were eroding confidence in Zimbabwe's police force.

He told the Senate that, with some exceptions, the recent deployment of the police and the National Army against dissident elements had been meeting with success. Murderers and other criminals had generally been tracked down, he said.

"It's a question of the few who are not apprehended making the news," the Patriotic Front leader said during consideration of the Home Affairs vote in the committee stage of the Appropriations Bill.

He told Senator Terence Oatt, a former senior police officer, that Zimbabwe was like a land after a huge veld fire. "You are bound to have smouldering in the form of violence."

SURPRISED

However, the world war "pleasantly surprised by the level of violence after this war," he said.

The forces of ZANLA and his own ZIPRA, it had been predicted, would be "at each other's throats".

"But we are in one government together," said Dr Nkomo

"The police force we trained outside the country is being integrated with the Rhodesian police force. I think this is remarkable."

Senator Oatt had asked Dr Nkomo whether wanted criminals had been taking refuge in assembly points, where they were hard to trace.

Dr Nkomo said some murderers had been through the camps and then gone to ground outside.

APPREHEND

"But despite the difficulty, the police have been able to apprehend quite a number of those who committed crimes," the Minister said. He believed violence was at a "manageable level".

Dr Nkomo said the police faced a problem because they were on the "other side" during the war and some members still had those days in their minds.

The police were a big body of men, not all of whom were angels. There were bound to be individuals who misbehave

But there was also the problem of "people who misinterpret what has happened — people who believe that because we are independent and free we must therefore do as we please".

PRESTIGE

During the war, the liberated areas had their own law courts and some people who had enjoyed a certain prestige wanted to continue with those institutions after the new Government took power.

"Of course this did have a frustrating effect on the police force," the Minister said.

He went on to accuse some MPs and senators of making irresponsible statements which were harmful to the police. "Criticism of the police as a whole, not individual people . . . implying that the force is not loyal to government."

Such statements were destructive and tended to demoralise the country, Dr Nkomo said.

He told Senator Oatt that there had been a "sizeable number" of resignations from the police. It was essential that "blanket statements" should therefore be withdrawn so that Zimbabwe would not lose its best policemen.

It was not possible to make a policeman "overnight", but the Minister said a large number of Zimbabweans were entering the force, especially at the Patrol Officer entry point previously reserved for whites.

Senator Alec Ndlovu alleged that people had been killed and the murderers never found. That was a sweeping statement, said Dr Nkomo.

In criminal cases the miscreants were not always all arrested, but that did not mean the police were not doing their job.

PEACE

"I can assure the House that our police force is doing everything in its power to keep the peace and apprehend offenders," he said.

But no police force could do its job properly unless it had the support of the public, he went on. The force was composed of human beings who had their shortcomings, but nevertheless they were on the side of the public.

Dr Nkomo appealed to the public to accept the police force.

"Possibly we may have to change the uniform, but take it from me you have a very fine body of men and women who as a whole form a most efficient Government machine," he said.

Dr Nkomo told Senator Johnson Hungwe he was wrong to accuse the police of harassment. "That is a misstatement, because the police are not there to harass the people."

Far from that, the police made it possible for the public to sleep in their beds at night. "The police are the friends of the people and we should give them all the cooperation and support that we can," said the Minister.

"People are saying the police force belongs to Nkomo, that it is a ZAPU force," Dr Nkomo said. "They are trying to create a false image of me. Let me assure this House that I control the police force only in my capacity as Minister of Home Affairs

SERVANT

"No one man, myself or the Commissioner, could hijack this force. It is a well-founded machine, the servant of the public.

"These men and women are dedicated people who have undertaken to serve the Government and they deserve all the encouragement and support we can give them."

The Minister urged anyone with complaints against individual policeme. to report them to the proper quarter, where they would be investigated.

Dr Nkomo told Senator Jack Mussett that although police members in charge had not been given political directives which inhibited their performing their duties, they had been told to avoid friction in certain areas.

By refraining from doing certain things which the public regarded as harassment, the police were making their job easier in the long term.

He said the Government found itself encumbered with much legislation which could not be removed overnight—"We have to do the best with what we have until the time comes to change that legislation," he said. There was also the problem of widows, disabled people and large numbers of unemployed.

Because of these problems the police were not, for example, enforcing laws on unlicensed hawkers, despite some complaints from people who had hawking licences.

There was also a shortage of transport in the country, and as a result the police had been told to turn a blind eye to operators of pirate taxis.

Dr Nkomo, who confessed: "I used to be a poacher myself," said that where people were denied legitimate means of hunting, hunting by other undesirable means resulted.

Until the law could be changed over hunting, the police had been told not to undertake wholesale searches of private homes, demanding to know where meat had been obtained or what wire had been used for.

Police had been told only to search houses in an immediate area if spoor could be followed to that area from a farm where poaching took place.

Dr Nkomo said the police had been told: "Hamba kahle: Don't push people."

THANKED

Senator Mark Partridge thanked Dr Nkomo for his statement.

The main issue was the relationship between the police and the forces belonging to the political parties of ZANU and ZAPU. There should be only one police force in the country acting in terms of the laws passed by Parliament.

He was impressed by the way the Minister had stood four-square behind the law and he congratulated him on his stand.

Senator Partridge referred to the removal of the Physical Energy statue from outside the Rowan Martin building in Salisbury and asked that it be retained in the country.

MAGNIFICENT

The statue's future was a responsibility of the Ministry of Home Affairs. He considered the statue "magnificent" and "something we can all be proud of".

Senator John Shoniwa congratulated the Minister on his "excellent speech on law and order", and said that the position now was a good deal better than it had been a few months ago.

"It was gratifying that both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Home Affairs should speak with one voice in urging reconciliation and reconstruction in healing the wounds of the war and maintaining law and order," he said.

He asked how the integration of ZANLA and ZIPRA forces with the police was getting on. He said he understood that it was going very well so far as the army was concerned

ARCHIVES

Replying to points raised, Dr Nkomo admitted that he was responsible for national monuments but not necessarily for statues. He suggested it would be fitting if the Physical Energy statue were placed in the archives.

He assured Senator Shoniwa that the integra- with the police was comparable with that in the army.

They had had some problems with educational qualifications, he added.

He thought they were too high and ruled out some very suitable men. It was more important that a man should make a good policeman than that he should have passed standard six.

Dr Nkomo told Senator Mudomeni Chivende that police were being discouraged from carrying arms except when this was strictly necessary.

Guest House Plans Rejected

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 18 Oct 80 p 1

[Text] Herald Correspondent
BULAWAYO.

BULAWAYO City Council has ruled that Mrs Joanna Nkomo, wife of the Minister of Home Affairs, Dr Joshua Nkomo, cannot build a guest house beside their home in Pelandaba.

But the $20 000 guest house of three bedrooms, two bathrooms, and two lounges is up and almost finished.

Asked to comment on the council's ruling, Dr Nkomo said yesterday: "I don't want to know about it. I will continue to build it. The roof is just going on. I am not going to have any nonsense from anybody about it."

Mrs Nkomo said: "It is not a case of two dwellings on one stand. I bought the stand next door, pulled down the old house on it and this is where we are building the guest house. We need more accommodation when guests come. Our house has only four rooms."

Mrs Nkomo said she personally lodged the architect's plan with the municipality, and paid a fee.

The acting Town Clerk, Mr Mike Ndubiwa, said: "We dealt with this application in terms of the Regional Town and Country Planning Order. It is not our order: it is central Government legislation but we have to administer it.

"When Dr Nkomo built his present house, the stand adjoining his was consolidated with it. That made it possible for him to put up a house of the size that is on it.

"Now they want to go further and build another house. This is where the order comes into play.

"However, realising the problem that has now come about, if Dr or Mrs Nkomo or their architect approach me or the Town Clerk (Mr Ian Edmeades) we can discuss with engineering officials the best way out of the difficulty."

Condemns Tribalism

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 18 Oct 80 p 4

[Text] BULAWAYO.

CALLING for unity and reconciliation in Zimbabwe, the Minister of Home Affairs and leader of the Patriotic Front, Dr Joshua Nkomo, yesterday denounced tribalism as being "more deadly than racism".

The battle for freedom, he said in an address at the Mzilikazi High School open day in Bulawayo, had been won and the people must now "work together to build the nation".

"We did not fight against the white man: we fought against an evil system.

"It does not matter who is in charge of that system. If it is evil in the hands of a whit man it is evil in the hands of a black."

He warned that nothing could stop the aspirations of the blacks in South Africa.

"How can anybody with a brain believe that you can hold millions of people in South Africa in subjugation?

"How does anybody really believe that machine guns and bombs will hold back the people?"

History had shown that the will of the people would win through.

On the unrest in Zimbabwe, the Minister said this was to be expected after war.

"We are free and independent, but we have born of blood — of a raging fire.

"When you are able to put out such a fire you are bound to get smouldering."

The smouldering, he said, would burn themselves out. The most important thing now was for the people to work together as one.

"Are you going to make the white people in this country uncomfortable because you are in charge of the country?

"We have got to behave in a manner that makes the other person feel we accept him after what has happened. He must feel you are there to accept him.

"We have to do more than him to enable him to be a white citizen of his country.

"On the other hand, I have said to our European friends that things have changed, but you belong here and make no apology for being here."

However, said Dr Nkomo, whites should not say that they were staying to assist the Government.

They should stay "to make their contribution towards the country. They are part of us and whatever they do they are not helping anybody — they are contributing to the welfare of the country."

He said the people of Zimbabwe must be free to pick the leaders of their choice.

"Everybody in the country has a right to do anything which is lawful without any fear.

"Do not expect much. Let your country expect much from you."

ZIPRA Warned

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 13 Oct 80 p 1

[Text] ZIPRA soldiers now encamped at Chitungwiza were yesterday told that their arms should not be used to intimidate people but to defend the country.

The PF president, Dr Nkomo, also advised the men to be respectful and behave in a dignified manner towards women and elders and warned them against heavy beer drinking.

Addressing a welcome rally for the ZIPRA men at Chitungwiza, Dr Nkomo said women in the area must not feel unsafe when moving alone because of the men's arrival.

"People of this township must now sleep with their windows open without fear of grenades being thrown into their homes," he said.

The men, whom he said should ultimately be members of the Zimbabwe National Army, should be servants of the people and not their masters.

"These weapons you carry are weapons of the people. All the weapons we got from those who assisted us were with the understanding that they were for freeing and not dominating Zimbabweans."

The PF leader advised the men not to drink too much "or drink at all as a drunken person does not know what peace is".

Any soldier who drank too much while outside the camp, must be immediately taken to his commanders, he said.

Dr Nkomo also said it was a "tragedy" that the former fighters had gone to Chitungwiza as ZANLA and ZIPRA.

He blamed Britain for not heeding the call by the PF alliance during the Lancaster House conference for the formation of one army before independence.

He said, however, the guerillas must disappoint and confound those who thought there would be fighting and instability because of this separation of armies.

Although there would be initial problems in the integration of the forces, he was confident this would be ultimately achieved.

Soviet Aid in War Praised

THE Patriotic Front leader, Dr Joshua Nkomo, yesterday criticised people whom he said were trying to minimise the role played by the Soviet Union in Zimbabwe's liberation.

He also described as "nonsense" fears by these people, whom he did not name, that Zimbabwe could become a "pawn" of the Soviet Union. The Soviets had no such designs, he said.

Addressing 1 275 ZIPRA guerillas, some of whom he said were Russian-trained, and a huge crowd of PF supporters at Chitungwiza, Dr Nkomo said:

"Never at any one time in my dealings with them did they say they wanted an inch of Zimbabwean territory."

The Russians saw their contribution to Zimbabwe's liberation as "a duty to humanity", he said.

Dr Nkomo said the AKs and bazookas, used by the guerillas during the war were originally Soviet weapons, no matter what brand they were.

"People talk of the Soviet Union with shyness but if it was not for the socialist October 1917 revolution in Russia, Africa would still not be free today because imperialism was not going to let go," he said.

There was a resounding "No" when he asked his audience if they had ever heard of Russia buying farms or property in Zimbabwe since independence.

"It is those countries who fought against us which are now running here and want to make themselves Zimbabwe's champions," he said.

He also announced that a contingent of ZIPRA pilots trained in the Soviet Union would be returning to Zimbabwe in about two months after completing their training.

"These boys can fly supersonic jets — the MIG 23 and the MIG 25," he said.

Discusses TTL Problems

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 19 Oct 80 p 3

[Excerpt]

BULAWAYO.

COMMERCIAL and peasant farmers in the Plumtree district have launched a good neighbour programme based on sharing available grazing for the next few months and having full respect for private property.

Agreement in principle for the scheme was reached at a meeting yesterday in the Plumtree Town Hall under the chairmanship of the Minister of Home Affairs, Mr Joshua Nkomo.

After almost two hours of frank and hard-hitting talks the 150 commercial farmers and delegates from neighbouring TTLs set up a small working party to finalise details.

Opening the meeting, Mr Nkomo told delegates that he had called them together to discuss the common problems of the area, the main two being the shortage of grazing in the TTLs and the "invasion" by peasant farmers of the commercial lands.

"The tribal trust areas are heavily overpopulated and cannot carry the number of people and livestock in them.

"It was the land question which was the main cause of the war and so people in the TTLs (some of them, not all) have interpreted independence as meaning that all land now belongs to the people and so they have invaded it.

"The people are saying that if the Government does nothing about land then they will move on their own, as they are doing throughout almost the whole country.

"But I have said to the people that the people who own farms own them in accordance with the laws of this country: and the laws have not been changed. There can be no invasion of private property.

"Despite the problems the people in the tribal trust areas face they have got to give the government time to bring about changes."

Besides the squatter invasion, commercial farmers were having their fencing stolen and were finding snares on their land. "We all know the law of this country doesn't allow snaring," said Mr Nkomo.

"The police enforce the laws and will continue to enforce them. If you want changes, tell your MP to do his work. Don't expect the law not to take its course. So if I catch you hunting I will set the police on you.

"On the other hand, commercial farmers should realise that people feel bitter when they see hunters coming from the United States, the United Kingdom and all over the world to hunt here when they are not allowed to."

Mr Nkomo said people must work together as citizens of Zimbabwe. Blacks should lose their inferiority complex and discuss problems with their white neighbours, not insult them behind their backs and just disobey the law.

Whites had also to change their attitudes, cutting out the insults and declaring that blacks didn't understand the problems.

During the discussions the Press was excluded from the meeting, but it is understood that problems talked about included the fierce fires raging through the commercial lands, the problems of water and the indifference of both groups to each other's problems.

Should the scheme work fully, sources said, peasants would approach certain commercial farmers for permission to graze cattle on their land and in return would help establish water points and fight grass fires.

PRESIDENT DISCUSSES LIVING CONDITIONS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 18 Oct 80 p 3

[Text] PRESIDENT BANANA says there is still a lot that needs to be done to improve living conditions in Zimbabwe's prisons.

Summing up his visit to the Salisbury maximum security prison and the Chikurubi prison complex yesterday, the President noted that there had been a few improvements since independence "particularly in the area of diet".

"All prisoners now have a common diet and beds are now being provided until they become available for everybody. However, there is still a lot that needs to be done to improve the living conditions."

He had listened to a lot of complaints from the prisoners and had assured them that these would be investigated and where neccessary corrections would be made.

Men and women prisoners at Chikurubi appealed to President Banana to have their sentences reviewed.

The President, who was accompanied by the Minister of Justice and Constitutional Affairs, Senator Simbi Mubako, was shown around by the Director of Prisons, Mr Frank Patch, and other senior prison officials.

At the women's wing of Chikurubi, he was presented with tablecloths and a handbag for his wife, Janet, sewn by the prisoners from materials given by charitable organisations.

Throughout his tour, the President was greeted with chants of chimurenga songs and slogans.

Thanking President Banana for his visit, Mr Patch said the prison staff and inmates felt privileged in that he could find time to see them.

RHODESIAN INGENUITY TO BEAT SANCTIONS BAN DESCRIBED

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 19 Oct 80 p 7

[Text] Sunday Mail Reporter

IN a cup of coffee and over a piece of cheese, there is a clue of how Rhodesians used their ingenuity to build home industry and bust sanctions.

They are typical commodities which at the time of UDI were expensive imports to the country.

During the rebel years, in the face of sanctions and with a need to save foreign currency, the country became virtually self-sufficient in both making vital economies and bringing smiles at the treasury.

In 1966 the country was importing gouda and cheddar cheese at $110 000 a year. By 1975, and throughout the ensuing years, there was no need to import any at all.

From 1966 to 1978 the total cheese import bill dropped from $136 000 to just $5 000 a year.

Coffee produced a similar story. In 1966, in raw and various other forms imports were running at $263 000. By 1978 the country needed to import only $6 000 worth

In the same period the the country developed from a cheese exporter earning $17 000 to an income in 1978 from foreign sales of $449 000.

The development of home industry was repeated scores of times as Rhodesia produced its own substitutes for imports or to fill in for the scarcities.

The story of how Rhodesia did it "my way" to sink sanctions is outlined in a Statement of External Trade by Commodities, covering the years 1966, and 1975 to 1978. It was compiled by the Central Statistical Office.

From 1965 to 1979 the country defied the world and still managed to build up a visible trade balance from $83 242 000 to $151 394 000. The peak year was 1978 with a surplus of $206 225 000, and only in 1968 did it go into the red, to the tune of $19 280 000.

From the start to the end of the era, the country's yearly exports went up from $274 851 000 to $702 302 000 while imports rose by $334 057 000.

Cotton was another big success.

Ginned cotton lint did not figure among exports just after UDI, though unginned raw cotton seed earned $1 579 000.

Meanwhile, the tobacco farmers more than held their own.

The tobacco floors' foreign earnings rose from $15 458 000 to $96 579 000.

On the export front, earnings for manufactured goods went up by nearly $125 million, other manufactured items ranging from plumbing equipment to fashion wear rose by 50 percent, and crude materials, including mineral ores, went up almost four-fold, all over the 12-year period.

COMMITTEE RULES BANNING OF WALLS LEGAL

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 15 Oct 80 p 1

[Text] THE Senate Legal Committee has ruled that the Government has not violated the Declaration of Rights enshrined in the Constitution by its action to bar Lieut-General Peter Walls from re-entering Zimbabwe.

The four-man committee told the President of the Upper House, Senator Nolan Makombe, that by a three-to-one majority decision its members found that none of the "statutory instruments" promulgated by the Government during the month of September violated the Constitution, reports Iana.

Among the September statutory instruments was a regulation published in terms of the 14-year-old state of emergency, empowering the Government to exile any citizen whose presence it felt was a threat to law and order.

When the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, announced the introduction of the law in the Senate last month, he said it was aimed specifically at General Walls, the former head of Joint High Command.

INTERVIEWS

General Walls stands accused of having tried to undermine confidence in Zimbabwe and the authority of Mr Mugabe's Government by his remarks in two controversial interviews.

The Legal Committee has the duty of scrutinising incoming legislation and Government statutory instruments for possible infringements against the Declaration of Rights. The Senate as a whole has the right to accept or reject their reports.

Three of the four members of the Senate Legal Committee are Senators nominated by the ruling ZANU (PF) — Senator John Shoniwa, Senator Johnson Hungwe and Senator George Chinengundu. However, they elected as their chairman the man who has held the job since the inception of the Upper House in 1970—Senator Sam Whaley.

CURBS ON 'UNDESIRABLE, IRRESPONSIBLE' FOREIGN JOURNALISTS ANNOUNCED

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 19 Oct 80 p 1

[Article by Giles Kuimba]

[Text] THE Government was taking immediate steps to curb the activities of "undesirable and irresponsible" foreign journalists, the Minister of Information and Tourism, Dr Nathan Shamuyarira, said at Mtoko yesterday.

In an interview at the ZANU (PF) office at Mtoko, where he was on a tour of the party's branches and districts accompanied by Mr A. Kabasa, MP for Mashonaland East, Dr Shamuyarira said:

"It is with deep regret that we have been forced into a position where we have to take positive administrative measures with effect from today to control the activities of some foreign journalists operating in our country.

"When we came to power we removed all restrictions on journalists because we believe in the principle of freedom of expression and freedom of the Press.

"It is still and will always be our intention to uphold this principle.

"But we now find there are some foreign journalists who want to continue to make money from the foreign newspapers they work for through sensational but totally unfounded stories, at any cost to Zimbabwe, regardless of the truth and the effect to this country."

Dr Shamuyarira said the Government was worried about the very bad Press reports that had been published in Britain in particular, and Western Europe in general.

He said in the six months since independence the overseas Press had painted a very gloomy picture of chaos, pending civil war, and a situation of continuing tension in Zimbabwe.

Culprit

The South African Press had been the chief culprit, the Minister said.

According to it, he said, Zimbabwe had been on the verge of a disastrous conflict since independence.

Dr Shamuyarira said it was unfortunate for Zimbabwe that many of the overseas correspondents who reported on events in Zimbabwe were based in South Africa.

For example, he said, Mr Holger Jensen, correspondent for the American magazine Newsweek, lived and worked from Johannesburg.

The Minister accused Mr Jensen of writing a biased and unfounded report against the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, and the country, in an article titled "Reign of terror in Zimbabwe".

He said: "As a result of these misrepresentations and distortions of news, the Government is taking these measures to control undesirable and irresponsible reports in the overseas Press."

He said one of the measures the Government was taking was to reinstitute the temporary employment permits for all foreign journalists.

Regret

This would enable the Government to know about all foreign journalists operating in the country, who they worked for, and to deny facilities to those journalists who "continuously and maliciously" misrepresented Zimbabwe, he said.

The Minister made it clear that the Government did not intend to reintroduce other measures which were being used by the previous government to control journalists, such as censorship and "D" notices.

Although the Government was reintroducing the temporary employment permits with regret, the Minister said, it had become clear that for some foreign journalists, freedom of the Press meant licence to malign Zimbabwe.

"For these journalists, real news is only bad news about Zimbabwe," he said, adding that according to them there was no ray of hope about this country's future.

"We cannot permit this situation to continue. That is why we are having to take this action," the Minister said.

He said he could predict with accuracy that even this action by the Government would be reported by the same journalists falsely to imply that censorship had been reintroduced in Zimbabwe.

"We are not reintroducing censorship, but only making an effort to safeguard our country and its interests," Dr Shamuyarira said.

VIOLENCE IN HARARE, DZIVARSEKWA REPORTED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 18 Oct 80 p 1

[Text] About 100 ZANU (PF) women from Mufakose yesterday demonstrated outside the Ministry of Home Affairs offices in Vintcent Building, Salisbury, over alleged police brutality during a funeral party for a man who died after a grenade incident in Harare on Tuesday night.

Police later issued a statement in which they "strongly" denied any allegations of brutality.

The women were addressed by the Deputy Minister of Home Affairs, Senator Tarisai Ziyambi, who told them their complaints would be looked into immediately.

The Minister of State in the Prime Minister's office, Mr Emmerson Mnangagwa, went to the scene and was given a briefing by Senator Ziyambi.

The women said police forced them to disperse while attending the funeral of a ZANLA ex-guerilla, Mr Edmore Gobera, alias Comrade Killer. His body had been taken to Mufakose.

"Police said there were too many of us at the funeral and a row developed and then police started beating people," the women told Senator Ziyambi.

They claimed a number of women and a child were injured during the beating. Senator Ziyambi told them to make official statements about the alleged incidents.

The women were later driven back to Mufakose in a vehicle provided by Mr Mnangagwa's office.

The police later issued the following statement: "During the night of October 16 a funeral party was held in a house in Mufakose for a man who had died of injuries received in a grenade incident in Harare on Tuesday night.

"The house was stoned and two men involved were apprehended by persons at the funeral party and were detained at the house by these persons.

"On the morning of October 17, as a result of a report received, police proceeded to the house and located the two men in question. The two men concerned and six persons involved in their detention were questioned and later released pending further investigations by the police."

Police strongly denied any allegations of brutality, a police spokesman said, and nobody had complained to police about the matter.

Beerhall Grenade Blast Injures Sixteen

SIXTEEN people were injured when a group of men hurled a grenade at people outside Tangai Beerhall in Dzivaresekwa on Thursday night, a police spokesman said yesterday.

Police said the attack at the beerhall occurred at about 8.20 p.m.

"The injured were taken to Andrew Fleming and Harare Hospitals," said the spokesman.

A hospital spokesman at Andrew Fleming said yesterday that the two men who were admitted to the hospital were in a "satisfactory condition".

The rest of the injured were taken to Harare Hospital. They were treated and later discharged, sources at Harare Hospital said.

Mr David Friday Nyamutumba was standing about 20 metres from where the grenade landed. He escaped unhurt, but his car was badly damaged.

Bounced off

"The grenade was thrown from quite a distance," said Mr Nyamutumba. "It hit a tree and bounced off.

"It landed a metre from the front side of my car and shattered the windscreen, some of the side windows, punctured three of the tyres and dented the left side."

He escaped unhurt by diving through the entrance of the beerhall where the wall protected him from shrapnel.

He said a group of men appeared under one of the trees outside the berhall. They threw the grenade and ran to a car and made off towards the east.

The bar manager, Mr Chamunorwa Masomera, said the grenade had sent a thick cloud of dust into the air. There were more than 1 000 people in the beerhall when the explosion occurred.

Streamed

"After the explosion all the people streamed out of the beerhall and went home. There was a lot of blood outside where the injured were," said Mr Masomersa.

A patrol truck with six men was parked outside the beerhall yesterday.

Police said yesterday that the type of grenade used by the attackers had not been identified. Investigations were still continuing.

● The body of the man who died in the shooting incident in Chitungwiza on Wednesday night was not found outside the Munyuki restaurant in Ghuza, the owner, Mr N. Munyuki, said yesterday.

Mr Munyuki, referring to yesterday's report in the Herald, said the body was found outside another business some distance from his own.

HARTLEY TEXTILE WORKERS DOWN TOOLS

Workers Allege Discrimination

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 18 Oct 80 p 1

[Text] Herald Reporter

MORE than 1 000 workers, the entire afternoon shift at David Whitehead Textiles Ltd at Hartley, went on strike yesterday alleging racial discrimination by the management.

The strike, started late in the afternoon after negotiations between management and the workers became deadlocked, said a source in Hartley.

The entire shift then downed tools and left. Police were called in to guard the premises.

Soon after the strike started the workers' committee contacted the Ministry of Labour and Social Services in Salisbury which urged them to carry on negotiations with the management, the source said.

Meanwhile an official in ZANU (PF)'s publicity department, the Rev. Thompson Tirivavi, arrived at the scene to mediate between management and the workers.

The workers mentioned irregularities in the appointment of workers to higher positions as one of the areas in which discrimination was being practised.

● African firemen on duty at Bulawayo's three municipal fire stations yesterday refused to attend anything but serious fires, our correspondent reports.

Representatives of the firemen held talks at the Famona fire station with the city's chief fire officer, Mr R. P. Ganga, throughout the day and evening.

Mr Mike Habgood, director of the municipality's building and amenities department, said the men's grievances included rates of pay.

Strike Condemned

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 19 Oct 80 p 1

[Text] A leading trade unionist last night called on the Government to investigate a wildcat strike at a Hartley textile factory.

Mr Phineas Sithole, general secretary of the United Textile Workers' Union, said the walkout had been called by a non-elected workers' committee imposed on the plant by ZANU (PF).

More than 1 000 workers--the entire afternoon shift--downed tools at David Whitehead Textiles on Friday.

The committee has told them to wait outside the factory gate tomorrow morning while talks with management are held.

The strikers will be told to stay out if negotiations falter.

But Mr Sithole, who claimed that 90 percent of the workers were members of his union, urged the men to return to work.

Deputy Labour Minister Mr Robson Manyika went to Hartley yesterday morning in a bid to settle the dispute.

The workers committee, which was set up two weeks ago after a meeting in a hotel, have demanded that:

--All staff should be subject to factory gate security checks after work. The committee alleges that only blacks are frisked.

--Grading, promotion and disciplinary procedures should be altered.

--A white nurse at the plant should be sacked.

Company chief Mr John Hillis [words indistinct] officer from the Ministry of Labour were due to arrive at the plant tomorrow.

He denied that only black workers are searched. "Anyone suspected to taking company property is searched," he said.

Mr Sithole said the works committee was set up by 50 people at a meeting in a hotel.

"The meeting was attended only by ZANU (PF) members and most of them didn't even work at the factory," he said.

RATIONALE FOR EMIGRATION EXAMINED

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 19 Oct 80 p 14

[Henry Maasdorp's column "On Sunday"]

[Text] IT is impossible to produce a universally applicable rationale on the question of emigration. In the end it is a personal matter.

It is not that there can be no generalisations about it. It is, rather, that different generalisations, like different mass-produced clothes, fit or don't fit different people.

With this reservation the writer plunges into the subject. Questions fall into two broad groups. The first concerns the home setting we do or do not propose to leave, the second the environment to which we propose or do not propose to go.

The first sub-divides into two. There is the underlying sentiment about "home, sweet home", and there is the question of the degree to which, here and now, home has become, is becoming or seems likely to become less than sweet.

In a childhood and working career involving eight moves between towns and (on a rough count) 27 changes of dwelling, "dulce domum" has asserted itself for me in a quaint but I suppose significant way.

In middle life a recurring dream during sleep was that I had bought back a house and plot in the environs of Salisbury where my family lived for seven years of my boyhood.

In the dream I savoured the joy of going home at last. No other place deserved the name. (It looked unaccountably different, but that is the way of dreams).

How much importance should one attach to such workings of the subconscious?

Perfect

"The Subconscious," wrote Arnold Toynbee, "may be likened to a child, a savage, even a brute beast, which is at the same time also wiser, more honest, and less prone to error than the conscious self. It is one of those statically perfect works of creation that are the Creator's stopping places . . ."

A few years after moving to my present home, where I have managed to stay for more than 11 years, the dream came no mor

I imagined that this was because for the first time since boyhood I was lucky enough to feel, subconsciously, at home again; and that, were I to leave for whatever reason, my subconscious — "wiser, more honest and less prone to error" — might see fit to punish me with dreams of still being here.

This is the largest generalisation I have to offer: I believe it can be treated lightly only at the peril of the psyche.

"How small, of all that human hearts endure,
That part which laws or kings can cause or cure!"

"Laws and kings" do play a part. But when one moves on to the social, political and economic environment in which "dulce domum" happens to be located, the generalisations become more tentative, conjectural and subject to qualification by individual circumstances.

Mine, it must be said at once, are those of a pensioner — assured income, I hope — and father of grown-up children — no decisions to be made on their future behalf.

It is not yet clear precicely what new mode of organising society in Zimbabwe will in practice replace the old.

I find far from unattractive Mr Mugabe's envisaged blend of Christianity with African morality — and also with African vitality and spontaneity, one hopes, after that forbidding glimpse of the Korean Leviathan on television the other night.

At the same time a certain independence of spirit is called for. One cannot assert that everybody is obliged to possess it, for people will please themselves. But it is required if we are to combat a false distinction, drawn most recently by the egregious Dr Ushewokunze, between those who are prepared to accept "change" and are graciously permitted to stay, and those who are not so prepared and should leave.

Vulnerable

Are there people so vulnerable to propaganda that, not liking the "new order", they blindly take the word of such men that therefore they ought to go?

Perhaps there are. But I think people should decide for themselves — staying or going, or standing on their heads if the spirit moves — what change to accept or not accept any and why. Those who stay must not let it be assumed that because they stay they are putty.

Observations about the environments to which emigrants may go have to be short, for the good reason that, except for the South African one, the writer has little or no firsthand experience of them.

It seems to me — I say this tentatively — that emigrants from Zimbabwe to South Africa who take with them an unresolved problem of how to live with other ethnic groups will be going to a place where there will be more to fuel their inner conflict than there is here, and where the upshot, whatever it is, will reach further into their lives.

To all appearances South Africa has reached the stage of a Rhodesia in the mid-seventies — defending "civilisation" against "communism" by a combination of force and belated and, in practice, inadequate concessions.

Any conceivable outcome is going to be hard to live with.

CANADIAN OFFER TO HELP TTL's REPORTED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 19 Oct 80 p 1

[Text] A CANADIAN organization is offering aid to promote research in Zimbabwe to better the lives of families in the rural areas.

It is the International Development Research Centre, which has given C$50 million towards research projects in 100 developing countries since it was formed 10 years ago.

Its president, Mr Ivan Head, said in Salisbury at the end of a two-day visit: "Funds are available immediately for sound research projects here."

These could amount to thousands of dollars. The centre, a public corporation supported by the Canadian Government, is prepared to back practical research directed at the rural areas.

Mr Head has already discussed a project with Ministry of Agriculture officials aimed at improving methods and crop yields for peasant farmers.

He also suggested suitable subjects for study could be methods of providing health care in rural areas, disease control and the gathering of "social data", including information on nutritional, hygiene and educational levels of rural families.

Mr Head met the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr Simon Muzenda, the Minister of Agriculture, Senator Denis Norman, and the Minister of Economic Planning and Development, Dr Bernard Chidzero, during his stay.

The talks were aimed at getting Government recognition for research backed by the centre.

The projects must be approved by the centre's board, which includes world experts. Half its members are from Third World countries.

"We are not concerned with pure research or the development of cash crops," said Mr Head. The centre operated to a mandate — to help the world's poorest people to make life better for themselves.

Mr Head said: "Until the centre was set up, 97 percent of research was done by people of the developed nations. Much of the other 3 percent was not applicable to the under-developed parts of the world."

To improve the wellbeing of the "have-nots", the centre encourages the adaption of science and technology to their needs. It finances projects in agriculture, food and nutrition, health and social and information science.

The projects are usually put up by scientists working in ministries, parastatal bodies, research institutions and universities.

Zimbabwe will be one of 18 countries covered by the centre's regional office at Nairobi, headed by Mr Bruce Scott (30), a Canadian agricultural economist,

SWITCH TO MAIZE SEEN ENDANGERING JOBS

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 19 Oct 80 p 7

[Text] THOUSANDS of farm workers are in danger of losing their jobs, according to a three-man University of Zimbabwe agricultural team.

The main causes are pay rises and the mass switch in the commercial farming industry from labour-intensive tobacco growing to maize crops.

Sackings have already begun on some farms. They come hard on the heels of the widespread minimum wage redundancies.

Farmhands face a double tragedy when they are laid off — they lose their jobs and their homes.

The prediction is made in a price and wage policy paper written by postgraduate student Kay Muir, Professor Malcolm Blackie and lecturer Louis de Swart, all of the University's department of land management.

They believe 7 000 workers may be sacked merely in the changeover to maize.

Many more may be jobless because of wage increases.

"Some farmers say we're exaggerating — others say we're wildly underestimating," said Kay.

The working paper forecasts that pay awards may lead to:

- A fall in the demand for labour
- Mechanisation to replace workers
- Tightening up of work organisation to cut out surplus labour
- A switch to less labour-intensive crops,
- Bankruptcy for the less profitable farms.

"In other words, workers could price themselves out of the market," said Kay.

Pay increases could be passed on to the consumer in price rises.

And redundancies could be blocked by local political party committees — farm labour is not organised enough on its own to offer much resistance to farmers, says the paper.

Another possible threat to workers is the change from tobacco to maize.

Tobacco farmers employ more than 120 000 full-time workers, whose wages represent 30 percent of their production costs.

They have suffered a catastrophic season, with their crops fetching rock-bottom prices. Many have been driven to the wall or the bank manager.

In a bid to force up prices, the Zimbabwe Tobacco Association has introduced a quota for the new season, which will lead to a 30 percent drop in production.

And the Government has brought in a $120-a-tonne pre-planting price for maize, a 40 percent increase on last season.

The incentive to switch from tobacco to maize is there.

"A big changeover is taking place," said Kay. "It's not too difficult for farmers to switch."

The drop in tobacco growing will mean that 32 000 fewer workers are needed, but the increase in maize production will need another 25 000 farmhands.

The 7 000 workers not needed may be sacked.

"This may not happen," said Kay. "Farmers won't just change from tobacco to all maize. They'll have other interests and may still need the staff.

"Others may 'carry' their excess workforce for a season to see if they can grow tobacco again with better prices."

Kay refuted the rumour that white farmers who produce 95 percent of agricultural produce, are quitting their land.

"Some have left, but there's no exodus," she said. "They are impressed by the Government's moderate and sensible policies on agriculture."

CONTROVERSY OVER ROLE OF TRADITIONAL MEDICINES DISCUSSED

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 19 Oct 80 p 7

[Article by Desmond Kumbuka]

[Text] WHILE arguments on whether traditional African medicines have a place in Zimbabwe's national health services rage on, one man has come up with a compromise that could break the stalemate.

He is 34-year-old Dr David Matthe, whose research work into the medicinal properties of herbs and other traditional African medicines has already begun to bear fruit.

Of the present controversy regarding the use of traditional African medicines in hospitals, Dr Matthe says: "I believe it is people who are traditional and not the medicines. The real problem is application and research to determine the quantity and quality of medicinal properties of the so-called traditional medicines."

He believes those in modern medicine ought to be more pragmatic and find ways and means to adapt medicinal herbs to health services by seeking proper and hygienic methods of application.

While it was generally acknowledged that some of the herbs used by the "ngangas" had proven medicinal value, "our aim should be to identify this medicinal element with view of subjecting it to further research."

When the medicinal properties had been properly quantified, and research undertaken to determine possible curative effect, dosages and hygienic methods of appplication could then be worked out, Dr Matthe said.

He takes exception to being described as a herbalist and believes there is great scope for scientific application in herbs "as long as those in the medical field devote sufficient time and resources on research."

In Zimbabwe the medicinal elements of the "Mubvaropa" (Pterocarpus Angolensis) and "Gavakava" (Aloes) trees mixed with other herbal concoctions made up a portent syrup capable of curing venereal diseases.

ELIXIR

Dr Matthe said he had also mixed up an elixir to cure excessive menstruation and other gynaecological problems in women, and general abdominal and mental disorders.

On charges by some modern medical practitioners that the "ngangas" were often unhygienic in their methods, Dr Matthe said; "while that maybe true, the fundamental concept behind intensive research is to discover new and better methods of doing things and hygiene is automatically covered under this."

American-born Dr Matthe has been commissioned by the Ministry of Health to carry out research into medicinal plants and compile a Pharmacopoea of medicinal herbs.

Dr Matthe is also a member of the American Public Health Association (APHA) and the American Society for Microbiology (ASM) and submits manuscripts of his findings for publication in journals published under these organisations.

It was the ASM, he recalls, who first assigned him to Africa to study tropical medicinal herbs and report on his findings. In 1968, he visited South Africa where he found herbal medicines in common use, and a college to train herbalists.

Since coming to Zimbabwe two years ago, Dr Matthe has met and spoken to many people in conventional medical fields including the Minister of Health, Dr Herbert Ushewokunze, and has also held discussions with some of the country's prominent "ngangas".

"I have also started a training school in Pharmacotherapy, the art of healing with pharmacological preparations," he said.

During the year course, students would learn the basics of social biology, mathematics and hygiene, and would undergo tests at the end of their training.

PROBLEM OF HAVING MORE THAN ONE OFFICIAL LANGUAGE DISCUSSED

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 19 Oct 80 p 14

[Editorial: "Three Languages One 'Official'"]

[Text] WHILE greater use will be made of African languages, both written and spoken, in this country it is to be hoped that any temptation to have more than one "official" language — English — will be resisted.

We are all in favour of people being bilingual or multilingual: many of the problems of this country could have been minimised, some averted, if there had been better communication between the races.

The whites were at fault, both as individuals and as representatives of successive governments. Being English-speaking, they expected others to speak their language and, though of course there were exceptions, not take the trouble of learning another tongue themselves.

The African people rose to the challenge and, unless they had virtually no contact with whites, learnt to speak English — either very well or sufficiently well to make themselves understood.

According to a leading black publisher English in schools will probably be tailored to become a language "strictly of communication". While people have a right to be taught in their home language the importance of the official language — an international language — can not be minimised.

The emphasis must be on encouraging people, particularly the younger people, to speak as many of the country's languages as possible. Develop Shona and Ndebele by all means but maintain the importance of English as a means of communication.

FISH FARMING EXPANSION PLANS AIRED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 18 Oct 80 p 7

[Text]

FISH FARMING could provide the cheapest and most readily available food for the future in Zimbabwe.

Interviewed in Kariba, where he has just established his first ponds, aquaculture consultant Dr Mark Caulton (33) said fish farming in other parts of the world provided eight million tonnes for human consumption last year.

This form of farming had been common practice in China for more than 3 000 years. It had proved immensely successful on Israeli kibbutzim over the last 25 years.

Dr Caulton, who has visited Israel several times to study farming methods, said 99 percent of the fish produced came from kibbutzim ponds.

"There is no reason why fish farming should not work well in Zimbabwe, where it could produce the cheapest and most readily available form of protein for the future," he said.

Author of a book, Biology and Farming of Tilapia in Southern Africa, Dr Caulton feels the Government should be encouraged to integrate fish farming into the overall agricultural programme.

"At present the Government is not prepared to recognise aquaculture as a bona fide agricultural occupation, but pond farming is ideally suited to the projected communal type envisaged."

At a recent conference in Japan a Food and Agriculture Organisation expert said that if only 10 percent of the existing 400 million ha of tropical "wet" land available for aquaculture was used, 100 million tonnes of fish could be produced annually.

Fish from the world's oceans had now reached a sustained maximum yield of between 65 million and 80 million tonnes each year, of which 35 million to 45 million tonnes were used for human consumption and the rest for meal and oil.

"Even with restocking this maximum figure has not been exceeded, which indicates that we have reached the limit of what we can pull out of the sea. So future farming assumes even more importance."

Dr Caulton agreed that pond culture was an entirely new concept which in the past had not formed part of traditional African agriculture, but he stressed that farms were now being established in Kenya, Chad and Zaire — and Zambia was planning to follow suit.

In Southern Africa, tilapia (or bream) which are precocious breeders, were the obvious choice for stocking, but Israel had reached a very advanced level by utilising mullet, carp and tilapia in the same pond.

Dr Caulton was the only invited representative from an African country at a conference dealing with tilapia, held in Japan during July.

He recently spent time in Thailand and has now been invited to address an international conference on fish farming which will be held in South Africa during November. He is cultivating fresh-water prawns from a Manila strain at Kariba, and believes this species will become a protein-backed everyday meal in the near future.

"Now they are considered a luxury food, but so were chickens 30 years ago."

Although fish farms were not cheap to start, operating costs did not go as high as in other agricultural enterprises. Capital costs were high, but the return was good.

"To make tilapia farming viable, four or five tonnes must be produced from each ha of water. The ideal would be a government-operated central hatchery from which people could draw their fingerlings to start with."

An added advantage was that the fish were protected from poachers.

"If a man wants fish for his family or to sell then he merely goes to the pond and collects the required quantity. Breeding is an on-going exercise."

The Government must be made aware of the enormous untapped potential this form of farm offered to the rural communities, not only as a means of livelihood but as a valuable food source, Dr Caulton said.

"We have the right climate and where there is water there could be farms. Ideally, whenever a dam is built in future a farm should be established alongside it. This would greatly reduce capital outlay."

STARVATION THREAT IN INYANGA REPORTED ENDED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 13 Oct 80 p 3

[Article by Roger McDonald]

[Text] WHILE the number of people facing starvation in the Inyanga area may have been exaggerated and accurate estimates are difficult to come by, food shortages are a problem.

Mr Simon Katerere, Zimbabwe Red Cross field officer for Inyanga, Rusape and Mtoko, told the Herald last week that people resettling after the war were spread out across the districts.

This, he said, made it difficult to compile completely accurate figures of the people affected by the food shortages. Shortages are a yearly phenomenon and are compounded by the return of thousands of refugees from Mozambique.

Mr Katerere, who works in conjunction with the Department of Social Services, said recent reports that up to 12 000 people were facing imminent starvation were based on projected figures for August. These figures had served as an estimate for the projects in hand, especially the distribution of food supplies such as maize meal, powdered milk, salt, bread and other staples.

He said the food shortages were generally caused by a number of factors, among them a seasonal lack of rainfall, the influx of refugees and the lack of time and equipment to plant crops.

However, the shortages were "under control".

An official of the department said a number of areas were still being examined in the Inyanga district and food distribution points had been operating for some time. The operation was controlled from the head office in Umtali.

The greatest area of concern was refugees, Mr Katerere said. A visit to Nyafaro Farm, recently bought by the Government as part of its resettlement programme, showed that hundreds of people were well on the way to re-establishing huts and making preparations for sowing maize fields.

But Mr Katerere said the isolation and the distance from distribution points was a major factor behind some of the problems in the initial stages.

This was borne out by a visit to the Chavanga area about 20 km from Nyafaro and about 45 km east of Inyanga. Lying only a kilometre or two from the Mozambique border in some of the wildest terrain in the country, Chavanga is accessible only to four-wheel-drive vehicles.

Mr Katerere said the people there had returned only since the end of the war. A branch of the Tangwena tribe, they had strong traditional and ancestral ties with the land, but were having to start from scratch in rebuilding their homes and re-establishing agriculture.

Headman Mr Ambrose Mwanatu said his people were having to live on yams and bananas and that they had very few cattle.

Maize meal had not been seen since distributions had been made in protected villages towards the end of the war, when each family head had received a 5 kg handout.

But while we were there, Mr Katerere arranged to deliver a quantity of maize, donated by local churches, awaiting grinding this week. He said he would liaise with the department for further help.

The local ZANU (PF) branch, represented by district chairman, Mr Sarudzai Chitepo, was also involved in bringing help to the area.

An associated problem, particularly with the influx of refugees, believed to number about 3 750, was education.

A school has been established at Nyafaro Farm, where, at the latest count, nearly 300 children are being taught.

Facilities were primitive. The children, most of them from refugee families, were housed fed and received their education in a num[illegible] of stone buildings shattered during the war. Some of the "classrooms" were without roofs, doors or windows. There were no books, pencils or other aids.

Headmaster Mr Paul Chifamba, who was appointed from Sinoia to rebuild the school, said the children were reasonably well fed. But as more children arrived, as they did daily, the pressures became greater and the quality of education suffered.

The first steps towards self-sufficiency were being taken, with a Devag extension assistant, Mr Alois Chitavati, taking children through the basics of vegetable growing.

USHEWOKUNZE TO SUPPORT NEW NURSES ASSOCIATION

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 15 Oct 80 p 1

[Text] THE existing nurses' association in Zimbabwe was firmly modelled on an outdated and discriminatory system, the Minister of Health, Dr Herbert Ushewokunze, told a meeting of about 500 nurses and medical assistants at Harare Hospital last night.

The nursing community in general did not have representation in the association, he told the nurses' representatives from various parts of Zimbabwe who had come to attend last night's inaugural meeting of the new Zimbabwe Nurses' Association.

The lively meeting was prefaced by revolutionary songs and dancing.

Dr Ushewokunze was loudly cheered as he arrived at the meeting with his deputy, Dr Simon Masorodze.

He said it was his duty to involve himself in the formation of a professional body that would set the attitudes and standards of health care delivery in Zimbabwe for the future.

"In the past it was inconceivable that a Minister of Health should actively become involved in any matter pertaining to the organisation and delivery of the health effort," he said.

"This rubber - stamp mentality protected those responsible for health from the realities of their existence."

From this approach, he said, an unrealistic and unbalanced health service had evolved, governed by the needs of the minority and designed to create opportunities for those who fitted into the system based on the criteria of skin colour or attitudes.

That approach to health would no longer be entertained, he said, and organisations and services would now be designed to meet the needs of the masses of Zimbabwe.

He advised the nurses not to form an elitist body of state registered nurses; but one that included all members of the nursing profession.

"The majority must be reflected and represented in the upper governing bodies of the organisation," said the Minister.

A nursing sister at Andrew Fleming Hospital Mrs Florence Chitaura, said nurses must now identify themselves with the Government and the ruling ZANU (PF) party.

It was inevitable that nurses should become politically involved because the problems they faced were political, she said.

Mrs Angeline Makwavarara, the principal tutor at Harare Hospital, who chaired last night's meeting, said Dr Ushewokunze was known by the nurses of Zimbabwe as the "Minister of the people", and on behalf of the nurses, pledged support for him.

RAPID CITY TRANSPORTATION SYSTEM PLANNED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 15 Oct 80 p 1

[Article by Colin Blair]

[Text] SALISBURY may have a rapid city tramway system as part of major changes planned for the central railway station.

It has already been reported that Salisbury City Council wants to move the existing station several hundred metres to the south-west to allow Queensway North to link with Fourth Street.

It has now been disclosed that in conjunction with the redevelopment of the station and the relocation of the railway tracks, a revolutionary electric tramway system is also on the drawing boards.

Dubbed by planning engineers as a "light rail rapid transit system", the proposal is for trams to operate on tracks in a "city loop" down the centre of Kingsway, across Samora Machel Avenue and up Central Avenue, turning right into Fourth Street and back down to Railway Avenue.

The trams would operate the loop from a new terminus to be built on land now occupied by the railways in the corner bounded by Railway Avenue and Hatfield Road.

"This will be the biggest thing to happen in Salisbury for years if it comes off," said one city councillor involved in the planning.

City planning engineers envisage putting the new station complex underground with steps or elevators taking passengers up to the station platforms.

This would release space above for parking and commercial development, including possibly a bazaar to replace the Salisbury market square cor alex.

Overpass

If the plan is adopted, the railways will lose land to the east of the present station site near where Fourth Street joins Railway Avenue.

Ministry of Roads property will also have to be moved to allow for an overpass and loop road giving access to Enterprise Road South.

Another overpass will be needed to take the multiple railway tracks over Hatfield Road about 50 metres north of the traffic lights controlling movement to the railway goods sheds.

The route for the Queensway extension to Fourth Street is planned to pass between Morgan High School and the police camp, across the canalised Makabusi and over the railway tracks to link with Fourth Street.

The new path for the multiple railway tracks pivots south-east from about Fourth Street to form a large triangular space bounded by the tracks to the south, Railway Avenue to the north and Hatfield Road to the west.

Within that triangle would be concentrated Salisbury's transport hub. Combined with the railway station with its underground concourse will be a major bus terminus and the tramway terminus.

Walk

As one city councillor pointed out, Government workers now have to walk almost 3,2 km from the existing bus stations in the city to the Earl Grey building.

With foundation work already started on another massive Government office block nearby, it was imperative that some form of rapid, high-density transport system be introduced to serve the Fourth Street end of the city, he said.

The project has been given a high priority by the city for another reason.

The National Railways of Zimbabwe plan to electrify Salisbury station as part of a national rail electrification programme. The Railways, therefore, need to know Salisbury's plans for the station before they can start.

City engineers met Railways officials in Bulawayo yesterday to discuss the relocation plan and the subject will be discussed at a joint meeting today of the council's town planning and works and finance and development committees.

City officials agree that the project will cost many millions of dollars but no figure has been set.

"The immediate commitment for relocating the railway tracks will be about $2.5 million," a spokesman said.

Councillors predict that the railway station development will provide a big incentive for commercial development in the area of Railway Avenue.

"Traders and even hoteliers will want to cash in on the business generated by this concentration of commuters," said one councillor.

THE bold line in this map shows the proposed route for a Salisbury tramway system.

MUGABE, MACHEL DISCUSS SECURITY, TRADE QUESTIONS

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 19 Oct 80 p 1

/Text/ Internal security in Zimbabwe and Mozambique, the speedy implementation of bilateral trade agreements and the Namibian question were among the subjects discussed when the Prime Minister, Mr. Mugabe, met President Machel of Mozambique yesterday.

The two leaders and their delegations met for nearly five hours in Quelimane, in Mozambique's remote northern Zambesia Province.

Briefing newsmen after the meeting, Mr Mugabe said the two sides had agreed to co-operate in their efforts to attain the highest standards of security in the sister republics.

He said he and President Machel had agreed to intensify their co-operation in the efforts to "rout out dissidents in our midst."

President Machel said it was precisely the problems of internal security confronting the two countries that had prompted the meeting between the two leaders.

It was also felt that something should be done to speed up the implementation of bilateral trade agreements signed between the two countries when President Machel visited Zimbabwe in August.

Mr Mugabe also disclosed that the discussions held in the Quelimane branch of the Bank of Mozambique, had covered the recent visits of President Machel to Romania, Bulgaria and the German Democratic Republic, and his own visit to Korea and China early last week.

Compare Notes

"It was necessary that we meet and compare notes as well as discuss the implications of our experiences on matters relevant to our region of Southern Africa," Mr Mugabe said.

The Prime Minister said he and President Machel had reached firm agreement on a number of internal and external issues relevant to the two countries.

On the Namibian issue, Mr Mugabe said the two sides had reaffirmed their support for the U.N. Security Council resolution number 435.

Earlier on arrival, the Zimbabwean delegation was met at the Quelimane airport by President Machel who led an estimated crowd of 5 000 enthusiastic Mozambicans to welcome Mr Mugabe and his entourage.

After taking the salute on the official dais, during which the Mozambican army band played "Ishe Komborera Afrika" and the national anthem of Mozambique, Mr Mugabe inspected a guard of honour mounted by a single company of about 300 general soldiers.

President Machel then led his guest in greeting the people, amid cries of "Viva Mugabe, Viva Machel." Traditional dancers and a variety of singing groups were also on hand to provide entertainment of the visitors.

Later, Prime Minister Mugabe and President Machel rode in an open car through the streets of Quelimane. An enthusiastic crowd of several thousands thronged the 3 km route.

The motorcade, escorted by about a dozen motorcycle riders, then drove to the "Secondary School September 25," at which Mr Mugabe once taught and was named after the day when a decision was taken to intensify Mozambique's independence struggle.

MACHEL-MUGABE AGREEMENT TO OUST DISSIDENTS HAILED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Oct 80 p 6

[Editorial: "Mutual Aid"]

[Text]

EARLIER this year the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, said of relations between Zimbabwe and Mozambique that anyone threatening the peace and stability of the one equally threatens the peace and stability of the other.

And later he said the two countries had reached an understanding to co-operate in getting rid of dissidents on either side of their common border.

Now, as a result of the weekend talks in Quelimane between Mr Mugabe and President Machel, the two leaders have agreed to intensify their co-operation to rout out dissidents.

President Machel himself said that it was precisely the problems of internal security confronting the two countries that had prompted the latest meeting.

It is apparent from recent reports that unrest has flared in Mozambique close to our border.

We do not know how serious this is. But in June Mr Mugabe said there was a dissident element—Africa Libre—on our border which had to be removed.

The intensified co-operation may well lead to closer involvement of Zimbabwean security forces. If that is the case then we hope it is appreciated that the people of Zimbabwe must be kept fully informed.

NIGERIAN PRESIDENT PROMISES AID TO SWAPO

Windhoek WINDHOEK OBSERVER in English 9 Oct 80 pp 1, 3

[Text] New York--SWAPO's guerrillas in the north of South West Africa and at bases in the south of Angola received a firm commitment here from the Nigerian Chief of State, President Shehu Shagari.

The president repeatedly stressed this pledge in a private meeting at a luncheon, as well as in an address to the General Assembly.

He turned to Mr. Sam Nujumo, the SWAPO leader and addressed him as "my brother". Similarly he spoke of Mr. Oliver Tembo, the African National Congress leader whose guerrillas are likewise being trained at various bases, some of them even in Angola.

President Shagari said that the situation in South West Africa continued to be a source of c onsiderable embarrassment as far as the United Nations were concerned. It continued to undermine the will and credibility of the world body. Above all, it continued to raise serious questions about the sense of honour of some members of the Security Council -- grave questions about their perception of duties and their responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations.

He criticised the veto right, and said that it was not a privilege to protect a country's interest, but rather a privilege to be employed to protect the interests of countries. The veto was a privilege to sustain and encourage and advance the higher promises of the United Nations Charter.

There was a duty, he said, as well as a responsibility.

He made a tough stand on South Africa, and he said that his country would no longer tolerate what he called South Africa's provocation.

Later, at a private luncheon, he repeated his support for SWAPO. After assuring the movement of his country's support in all spheres -- Nigeria boasts Africa's largest army -- he told the guests at the table that South West Africa was a test in case. SWAPO could count on the complete assistance of Nigeria, he said.

He deplored what he called the collusion between South Africa and her Western partners.

Meanwhile, there are rumours here in New York that Dr. Benjamin Africa, a member of the Turnhalle Ministers Council, and Mr. Fanuel Kozonguizi had arrived here for what has been called "contractual negotiations" with a large American corporation. There must be something in the air about these negotiations, but very little could be established.

A letter appeared on the editorial page of the New York Times of Monday's edition in which Dr. Africa said that the United States' tax-payers' money was used to assist in giving Russian communism a foothold in South West Africa.

ZAMBIAN SECURITY FORCES DRIVE SA TROOPS OUT OF WESTERN PROVINCE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

LUSAKA.

SECURITY forces had driven South African troops out of Zambia's Western Province, Mr Grey Zulu, Secretary of State for Defence and Security, was quoted yesterday as saying, according to Iana-Reuter.

The Times of Zambia quoted the Minister as saying most of the landmines planted by the troops in the south-western corner of the country bordering on Namibia and Angola had been removed by Zambian forces.

In April, President Kaunda said South Africa had withdrawn two battalions of troops sent into Zambia to hunt for SWAPO guerillas. He said the remaining South South African troops had broken up into small units.

Mr Zulu said he was satisfied with the speed at which some 50 armed men, who exchanged fire with security forces on Thursday south of Lusaka, were being rounded up, the Times said.

The Zambia news agency, Zana, quoted the Minister of Home Affairs, Mr Wilted Phiri as saying the group was not linked with any independence movement recognised by Zambia, such as SWAPO, nor was it connected with former guerillas from Zimbabwe.

Zana reported on Sunday that security forces had also rounded up about 450 aliens at a village near Ndola, about 15 km from the Zaire border.

The agency quoted local police chief Mr Julius Zulu as saying the operation was mounted to catch illegal smugglers of Zambian emeralds.

In Pretoria, the Defence Department, responding to a request for comment, said: "We do not know what they are referring to. It seems to be the fashion to blame South Africa for whatever you are unable to explain."

The Herald Africa News Service, quoting informed sources, reports that 50 Lusaka residents have been detained by police after the shoot-out near the capital last week.

Mr Phiri said on Sunday that police were still looking for a Lusaka lawyer, Mr Pierce Annifield, who was wanted for questioning in connection with the shoot-out.

Zambian police are holding Mr Francois Cros, a staff correspondent of the ..gence France Presse news agency, on a 28-day detention order.

CONGOLESE, ANGOLAN LEADERS ATTEND OPENING OF NETO AIRPORT

Brazzaville BULLETIN QUOTIDIEN DE L'ACI in French 19 Sep 80 pp 3, 4

[Article: "Inauguration of Agostinho Neto Airport"]

[Text] The Agostinho Neto airport in Pointe-Noire was opened on Wednesday morning in the presence of comrades Hilaire Mounthault and Ngouonimba Nczari members of the Central Committee of the PCT (Congolese Labor Party), respectively minister of transports and civil aviation and political commissioner in Kouilou, as well as Pedro Maria Tonha Pedale, member of the MPLA politbureau labor party, Angolan minister of defense.

The presence of the following was also noted: comrades Michel Cangouo, commander of military zone No. 1, Norbert Dabira, head of the directorate of the above-mentioned zone, as well as many regional political administrative leaders.

In words suited to the occasion, comrade Ngouonimba Nczari recalled the glorious memory of two heroes namely Agostinho Neto and Marien Ngouabi who, he said, have bequeathed the example of friendship and solidarity concretized in this achievement.

On his part, comrade Pedale, Angolan minister of defense, who, after having underlined that at the present time, in Africa, the friendship and solidarity between our people are confirmed by the bonds which unite us and which are found not only in the continental framework of the OAU, but fundamentally in the identity of a socialist option and our internationalistic application, declared "the renovation of the airfield in the Pointe-Noire airport is a concrete proof of our aerial and maritime transport capability to furnish construction equipment originating from Angola and of the internationalistic solidarity of our Angolan labor which did its best to accomplish the mission entrusted to it by our party and our government".

The cost of this work amounts to $3 million.

Comrade Mounthault followed the above speaker and broadly stressed the advantages which exist in the relations between the Congolese Labor Party and the MPLA-Labor Party. This operation, he underlined, is an irrefutable stamp of the agreement between both people to fight together for the development of scientific socialism.

It should be noted that after the conclusion of the ceremony a cocktail party was held by the political commissioner in the gardens of his residence.

DESTINATION OF RHODESIAN SANCTION-BREAKING EXPORTS REPORTED

Capetown THE CAPE TIMES in English 13 Oct 80 p 10

[Text]

NOW that official statistics have been issued in Zimbabwe about some of the undercover sanction-busting exports effected in the post-UDI years, information can be given of the movement of some of this traffic through Cape Town.

My docks news gathering became heavily circumscribed after 1970, first by the need for avoiding greater embarrassment for Rhodesia, and also because of the increasing problems associated with cargoes between South Africa and so-called inimical oversea countries. This still applies.

Cold storage

The Rhodesian beef came into the docks as Swaziland products, and it was usually shipped out to the Canary Islands. After being discharged there and put into cold storage, other ships came from Eastern-bloc countries and loaded consignments of what the consumers in Czechoslovakia, Poland, and Black Sea countries were told was Teneriffe beef.

The communists were amazed at the quality of the cattle herds on the Canary Islands, and bought a reported R40 m of Las Palmas beef.

Copper loaded

Copper was also loaded into ships in Cape Town, but was described as from the Transvaal. Mailships in the closing years of the weekly service frequently lifted copper at Durban, but few were disposed to ask the source.

Many people had a strong feeling it had come over the border, and what is the difference between Zambian and Rhodesian copper anyway?

ZIMBABWE MINISTER PRAISES ETHIOPIAN YOUTH TEAM

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Oct 80 p 1

[Text] The visiting Ethiopian football team had taught Zimbabweans a wonderful lesson in soccer, the Minister of Sport, Youth and Recreation, Mrs Teurai Ropa Nhongo, said in Salisbury last night.

She told about 250 guests at a reception held at Government House in honour of the Ethiopian team: "We welcome the game between our youth and the Ethiopian youth team. It is a positive way of consolidating our solidarity."

She praised the visitors for their skill and "magnificent footwork."

President Banana told the guests: "I believe our long-standing relationship with Ethiopia was consolidated by the visit to our country by your team.

He said he hoped the next matches would be "better organised" and "will go a long way towards the expansion of the welfare of the two nations."

Mr Kassa Giorgis, the secretary of the Football Association of Ethiopia, said he believed sport was a far more effective way of cementing solidarity between the two nations than politics.

He said his team had been surprised by the quality and the standard of play in Zimbabwe.

"When we came here we did not have full knowledge about the strength of the Zimbabwe youth team. In fact, we soon found out that we had underestimated the standard of their play."

He thought the Zimbabwe youth team had the potential to develop into one of Africa's best teams.

Amid applause from the people at the reception, Mr Giorgis said he hoped the next games to be played in Addis Ababa on October 29 and November 2 would not be a re-enactment of the ugly scenes that developed at Rufaro Stadium on Sunday.

The Ethiopian youth team left early this morning for home.

ZAMBIA-TANZANIA ROAD SERVICES PROFITS REPORTED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 10 Oct 80 p 4

[Text]

THE Zambia Tanzania Road Services has made a profit of more than K1.5 million for the first time in two years, it was announced yesterday.

General manager Mr Kalaluka Katukula disclosed this and attributed the profit to the increase in the fleet of vehicles and the availability of spares during the year ended June 1980.

Mr Katukula, who gave the estimated profit before the company's annual report is released, said the profit compared with losses of K1.8 million and K1.2 million made during two previous years.

He said the year in review had good runs and operations are to be further enhanced when 100 new Fiat trucks arrive next month.

Zaire

The company intends to divert some of its fleet for operations to Zaire to offset difficulties in copper allocations which at one time this year left 100 vehicles idle in Kitwe because of insufficient allocations.

He said ZamTan depended on copper for transport but since more outlets to ports were opened, things have been more favourable to rail than road transport.

"We are now looking to Zaire for more business to offset this," said Mr Katukula.

The company, jointly owned by Zambia and Tanzania, has now a fleet of 400 vehicles to keep it going after a transport crisis that nearly crippled the organisation two years ago.

Last year Mr Katukula reported an improvement in operations following the importation of new trucks and these will be supplemented by more now on the way.

● British Airways is to host a travel agents' education seminar in Britain for Zambian and Zimbabwean officials from October 25 to November 1, according to an airline spokesman in Lusaka yesterday.

The Zambian party will include Mr Clint Ntikani from T.G. Travel (Lusaka); Mrs Rachel Mubambe of Eagle Travel (Mufulira); Mrs Herietta Murdoch, Eagle Travel (Kabwe) and Mrs Pam Smith, Leopold Walford (Luanshya).

The Zambians will meet their Zimbabwean counterparts in Salisbury to fly in a British Airways 747 jet to London.

While in London the agents will tour historic sights, attend lectures, familiarise themselves with British Airways operations, and visit the ancient University of Cambridge.

DETAILS ON BRITISH-AFRICA TRADE GIVEN

London WEST AFRICA in English 13 Oct 80 p 2032

[Text]

A call for more support from British industrialists for the Britain-Africa Trade Organisation came from Mr. George Harlley, of Ghana, during his recent visit to Glasgow; the headquarters of BATO.

Servicing cranes in Ghana and the possibilities of Scottish fishing boats working alongside African boats in African waters were two areas of co-operation Mr. Harlley investigated during his two-day visit, which followed talks with the Director of BATO, Mr. Kofi Asiedu, when they met during Mr. Asiedu's fact-finding tour of Ghana and Nigeria two months ago.

Mr. Harlley, a former Commissioner for Transport and Communications and former Commissioner for Works and Housing in Ghana and later Director at the Management and Development Productivity Institute (UNDP), has become Executive Regional Director co-ordinating BATO's activities in Ghana, Togo and the Ivory Coast.

"My own company," Mr. Harlley explained, "exists to bring investment, personnel and technology to Africa — from any country — and to bring the continent the modern developments of the Western world. We have the raw materials but not always the capacity to develop them. We have the capital equipment but we must make sure it is in working order. We must therefore bring expertise from other countries in the West."

"We do, however, have a special association with Britain dating back many years and I see great advantages in co-operation between Africa and Britain."

● Orders worth £26.3m. were place with British industry in August, arising directly from grants and loans to developing countries under the British Government's aid programme. They included tarpaulins for the Ghana Cocoa Marketing Board (£187,695) from Law and Bonar Textiles Ltd. of Dundee and a computer system for Ashanti Goldfields Corporation, Ghana (£248,055) from ICL Ltd, London.

ZAMBIANS SEEK CONSUMER GOODS IN ZIMBABWE

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 19 Oct 80 p 4

/Text/ Lusaka--Hundreds of Zambians fly each week to Salisbury bringing back with them shoes, clothing, chocolate, soap, liquor and other goods unobtainable or more expensive in Zambia.

Most of these travellers are businessmen and government officials. For the ordinary Zambian the open border with Zimbabwe has done little but to make him aware of his own poverty and the apparent abundance which lies across the Zambezi.

President Kaunda warned his countrymen not to expect luxury goods or instant prosperity when the ban on trade with Zimbabwe was lifted. He cautioned that only hard work and development would bring prosperity.

Now, six months after Zimbabwean independence, Zambians are still queueing for goods along Cairo Road in Lusaka and in the markets all along the railway line from the Zimbabwe border.

Most recently it was for soap powder. But three weeks ago it was margarine and salt and since April there have been shortages of cooking oil, sugar, flour and pepper.

"Before (Zambian) independence we had everything except a black government, today all we have is a black government," a Zambian said in a letter to the Times of Zambia recently.

If anything, the frustration expressed in that letter has intensified. The author claimed then that a pair of woman's shoes he found in Salisbury for $22 sold in Kitwe for the equivalent of $35,28.

While a trade agreement between Zambia and Zimbabwe has been drawn up, it has not yet been signed, and when it comes it is expected to provide for primary products and durable goods with little, if any, attention to consumer goods.

At Zambia's annual trade and agricultural shows there were 23 Zimbabwean exhibitors, but the Government has been reluctant to release foreign exchange in any quantities except for $5 million to buy 250 railway wagons from Zimbabwean manufacturers.

Shortly after trade relations resumed between the two countries a consignment of cheese appeared in the markets from Zimbabwe and one shipment of 25 000 pockets of onions arrived. Since then no licences for vegetable imports have been granted.

Some cattle breeding stock has been brought into Zambia, some tractors and farm equipment and a few pots and pans have been imported, but maize imports continue to come from the United States or South Africa since Zimbabwe, too, has a shortage.

Most Zimbabwean exports to Zambia have been of agricultural, mining and hardware supplies, Until the Zambian Government finds that its own industries that compete with Zimbabwean manufacturers are strong enough to stand on their own, the required financing of trade in consumer goods is not likely to materialise.

TRAINING OF BROADCASTERS PLANNED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 16 Oct 80 p 4

[Article by Simone Donnelly]

[Text]

ANYONE who watches our television regularly will not be out of sympathy with the remarks of Information and Broadcasting Permanent Secretary Mr Edward Lubinda when he visited the broadcasting studios recently.

The means of improving standards would seem all too obvious: stricter discipline, skilled personnel and competitive salaries.

It seems just a short time ago that Dr Mutumba Bull visited the studios and made the same complaints as the present Permanent Secretary, but what has been done in the interim?

One well-known woman broadcaster once said: "I dread looking up at the cameras or lights for fear of seeing yet another new face."

Each newcomer has to learn, mostly by trial and error, but once trained they are soon lost to national broadcasting and progress is never made.

Some of our best broadcasters have left Zambia; they were the best because of their training (mostly BBC) which demanded a high degree of discipline in time-keeping, in performance and in technique.

There may be disagreement among journalists and trainers as to the wisdom of opening a training centre for broadcasters instead of letting one of the present institutes absorb that training.

But the need for professionalism in this medium is as near desperate as it will ever be.

Not least among these needs, is a team of highly skilled technicians for the upkeep of equipment.

They should be handpicked, nothing should be spared in their training and their salaries should accord with their value to the nation.

Among those who proved that training, idealism and competence result in excellence, was Multimedia Zambia's Stanley Nyahwa, now producer, announcer and training officer with Radio Nederlands in Hilversum, Holland.

He has just returned to Holland from a trip to this part of Africa.

His object was to see what is being done and what could be done for the training of broadcasters.

Radio Nederland Training Centre (RNTC) is one of the Dutch institutes for international education and is already well-known for the excellent training it is giving to a select few African broadcasters.

"Overseas training is slow and elitist," said Mr Nyahwa, "whereas on-the-spot training has many advantages. More are trained, and the length of training is determined by the needs. It can be as long or as short as is necessary.

"In Ghana, for instance, we are running seven-month courses for programme makers, while a six-week course on production gave what was most needed in Sudan."

RNTC's tentative probe is to test the feasibility of sending a mobile training team to this part of Africa.

It could be based in Zimbabwe or in Kenya, but any of the surrounding countries, including Zambia, could request a training course for broadcasters in their own country.

The team, with its equipment, would arrive and give the necessary training.

Of course, a lot of planning by the nationals of the country concerned and the course leader would precede the course.

They would detail the specific need, decide on the length of the course and pinpoint the desired results. RNTC insists that the course asked for is relevant to the country concerned.

Training and production, says Stanly Nyahwa, cannot be departmentalised. They must complement each other.

"The training we plan is geared to opening out the media to the general public. To what degree, depends on the latitude given by the host country. Some states control the media completely and allow only professionals to use it, while others encourage amateur participation," said Stanly.

The host country must get involved, it must show its determination to motivate local talent; the traditional story-tellers for instance.

Emphasis is on radio training, and it is for those certain to use the skills passed on to them.

Only by special request would television training training be given and even "The churches," said Stanley "are often challenged by governments to use the media, but more often than not they are told 'do what you can'.

They have the staff and the willingness, but lack the skills. Training of church communicators is the prime concern of RNTC's proposed mobile training team."

For this reason Stanley stopped over at Nairobi to visit church organisations involved in training communicators in the East African countries and Zambia.

He said if the proposed mobile training team is based in say, Zimbabwe, they could rotate as required between Kenya, Tanzania, Malawi, Zambia, Zimbabwe, Uganda and Botswana.

This mobility is a good learning situation for broadcasters in training. Too often they lack the confidence to leave the studio behind and get out among the rural people.

As a professional, Stanley Nyahwa emphasises the need to have strict screening of candidates for such potential courses, and adds:

"Money will be used for training persons, not to buy equipment."

What happens when the demand is met and all are trained to the same level of competence?

"The project is far reaching enough to include the training of trainers. The best of those we train might still go overseas for training so that in time, when the local standard of broadcasters is high enough, African training centres can be self-supporting.

"Our aim is self-sufficiency with competence, with no loss of standards," said Stanley.

This, he maintains, can only be achieved if training at grassroot level is professional and relevant.

Radio Nederlands at Hilversum is known to millions of listeners in Africa.

It took first place in the world last year for the best short-wave programmes on radio.

This year it came third, ceding top place to West Germany's deutsche Welle and second place, as always to BBC.

With that kind of professionalism available to them broadcasters in the young African countries can be sure that what they receive from the Netherlands can reach the pinnacle of professionalism too in this highly competitive field.

But for us in Zambia, first, there is the discipline ...

PARTY ISSUES STATEMENT ON S. AFRICAN RAIDS

LD241240 Luanda Domestic Service in Portuguese 0530 GMT 24 Oct 80 EA

[Statement from the MPLA Labor Party Central Committee Department for Political and Ideological Education, Propaganda and Information issued to the news media on 23 October]

[Excerpts] By embarking on a series of cross border attacks against Angolan territory, the Pretoria racists, who repress with arms the most fundamental rights of the black population of the South African Republic and Namibia, are seriously threatening international peace and security. The series of armed provocations carried out by the Republic of South Africa against Angola more and more closely resemble an undeclared war against our people.

According to the Ministry of Defense communique issued in Luanda yesterday, the South African ground and air forces continue to violate our borders in southern Angola. These cross border attacks, the Angolan Defense Ministry communqiue pointed out, have the objective of keeping our people and their military units stationed there in a continued state of tension, thus blocking the harmonious socioeconomic development of these areas of our country.

The objective of the racists is to directly affect Angola and its revolution by trying all means to destabilize our country. During the first 6 months of this year, South Africa has perpetrated against our people 529 provocations, the culmination of the criminal military attacks by the racists against our country being the great invasion launched in June, using the most sophisticated air equipment and heavy artillery.

It will be noted that the South African Republic could not carry out its unpunished provocations against Angola without the active support of all capitalist Western powers. [Words indistinct] that there are economic contacts with the South African Republic [words indistinct] interests in the exploitation of natural and human resources in the south of the continent. (?Accordingly, Western countries) oppose the application of necessary measures aimed at putting an end to the acts of aggression by the Republic of South Africa.

All this is taking place at a time when the South African racists are receiving an important UN delegation for talks on Namibia's independence. The intention of the racists [words indistinct] for an acceptable solution to the Namibian problem. The struggle continues. Victory is certain.

CIA-PLANNED SABOTAGE REPORTED--Luanda, 22 Sep--The Carter administration is planning acts of sabotage against the People's Republic of Angola, according to an article appearing in today's JORNAL DE ANGOLA. The newspaper cites as proof a secret document attributed to the CIA in which a map of Angola pinpoints various targets for acts of sabotage involving the country's most important economic projects. "There is no doubt," the JORNAL DE ANGOLA stresses, "that the map was made to support the preparation and coordination of large-scale acts of sabotage against the Angolan people's government." Among the installations marked on the map are the Luanda refinery, the Condo and Matala dams, oil fields near the Kwanza River and the most important railroads. The CIA is also said to be interested in the most important areas of agricultural production and in areas where ore is mined, such as Andula, Kazinga, Kuime and Malange. INCREASED DEPENDENCE ON WEST--In a commentary circulated Sunday, the news agency ANGOP points out that African nations find their economy increasingly dependent on the West. In the commentary entitled "Africa's Struggle for New Economic Relations," which deals with the establishment of a new international economic system, ANGOP reveals that Africa-Western trade has increased in a disproportionate manner with the result that many of the richest African countries on the continent are barely sustaining themselves in stark poverty. Between 1950 and 1978, business concerns and companies in the United States made $80 billion on the continent in profits that far exceeded their "investments" in Africa. The agency emphasizes that the expansion of the African nations' cooperation with nations belonging to the socialist community is being repaid by growing interest in the establishment of equitable international economic relations. The socialist nations which maintain relations with African nations on the basis of equality are sharing with the owners of the resources claims for control rights over the continent's natural wealth, by mutual property benefits and cooperation devoid of any kind of discrimination. NEW USSR AMBASSADOR STRESSES COMMON VIEWPOINTS

Praia VOZ DI POVO in Portuguese 15-22 Sep 80 pp 1, 8

[Text] The new Soviet ambassador, Lev Vladislavovich Krylov, presented his credentials to the president of the republic, Comrade Aristides Pereira, on 9 September by which the USSR Presidium of the Supreme Soviet accredits him as ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in the Republic of Cape Verde.

During the ceremony, the Soviet diplomat expressed his "deep respect for the friendly people of Cape Verde who, under the direction of the PAIGC, have obtained great successes in the struggle for the ideas of freedom, independence and social progress, and for the consolidation of sovereignty and economic development of their state."

Taking note of the role played by Cape Verde in the struggle against racism and colonialism, the new ambassador made reference to the friendship and cooperation existing between Cape Verde and his country, recalling also the common struggle for peace, development and security of nations.

On the other hand, he stressed the prevailing importance of security for peaceful solution of disputes and contrasted with the use or threat of force, in favor of interests of stabilization of international situation, and continuation of the policy of detente.

Taking into account that one of the many common aspirations of the two countries--Cape Verde and the USSR--is the struggle for the preservation of world peace in the interests of all people, VOZ DI POVO asked Ambassador Krylov during an interview for a short explanation of Soviet views on the disarmament talks. He replied: "The first law of the Soviet state, adopted in 1917, was the Peace Decree." He added: "In every international forum, the Soviet Union has always introduced proposals of certain principles which have become famous and known as the Leninist Principle of Peaceful Coexistence in tribute to the founder of the Soviet state."

On the other hand, the Soviet ambassador expressed optimism as to the prospects for continuing and strengthening cultural ties between our peoples "existing since the first hour of the national liberation struggle."

The new Soviet ambassador in our country, Lev Vladislavovich Krylov, has already occupied various posts of high diplomatic responsibility, namely, counselor of the USSR Embassy in Cuba and assistant director of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of his country and was decorated with the Order of Merit of USSR. Born in 1920, Krylov is married and the father of two children. He completed his university education in 1945 and since then has had a diplomatic career.

REFUGEES RETURNING TO CAPITAL DESPITE CONTINUING COMBAT

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 23 Sep 80 p 12

[Article: "Refugees Are Returning to Ndjamena"]

[Text] Ndjamena--Despite the continuing combat in Ndjamena life is resuming its normal course in the Chadian capital where many inhabitants have returned after taking refuge in Cameroon, on the other side of the Chari River, at the beginning of the conflict during the month of March.

In this civil war where the partisans of the president of GUNT (Transitional National Union Government) are opposed to Hissein Habre's Armed Forces of the North [FAN] the events have not ceased to astonish observers.

Ndjamena, cut in two, comes back to life while the canons and automatic arms resound; this is one of the paradoxical effects of this war between Chadian "brother enemies," Hissein Habre and Goukouni Oueddei, former comrades when the southerners directed the country. Stabilization of the "Front" 6 months ago enabled many of the Ndjamena's inhabitants to return to their capital.

The population, which has come back to Ndjamena, estimated to number about 100,000 people, lives solely in the FAN zone, where Hissein Habre's troops control all the African quarters, as well as one European quarter along the Chari, from the customs to the Chagoua bridge. The zone controlled by Goukouni Oueddei and his allies extends over the other quarters, European and administrative. It has been abandoned by all its inhabitants since the end of March.

The return of more than half of Ndjamena's population has obliged the FAN authorities to create an administrative committee in this city. This committee, placed under the presidency of Ali Salim, member of CCFAN (Northern Armed Forces Command Council), former secretary general of the Chamber of Commerce, was established on 13 July last.

It has already been able to reestablish an administrative embryo and to especially restore the functions of a registry office. However, in spite of the above it is impossible to make an accurate count of the victims after 6 months of hostilities. A treasury department in charge of collecting taxes on the slaughtering of cattle, and custom dues on merchandise originating in Cameroon in transit at night, has also been created.

Merchandise from Cameroon can only arrive at night in the FAN zone due to the shooting by Goukouni's forces on the banks of the river from the president's residence, which they still hold.

This committee, as explained by Salim, reassures the population who has accepted its establishment with satisfaction. Moreover, the people are going about normally tending to their own business, despite the steady bombardment which sometimes accounts for dozens of victims, as was the case 3 weeks ago near the mosque.

The Ndjamena markets are at their busiest in the morning and it is difficult sometimes to plough one's way through the stands of the small merchants at the millet market or even in the central market. All sorts of manufactured goods, shimmering and vivid colored fabrics, await the veiled Chadian women, and the small cigarette vendors are always offering the best known brands of light American and English cigarettes, which are actually the only ones the combatants smoke.

Each day brings a small improvement in this state of "no peace--no war." Public electricity, after water, has been reestablished and the main thoroughfares are lighted every night until midnight by means of a powerplant. Garbage is picked up once a week by young people, which had not been done for many months and gives Ndjamena such a look of cleanliness that one doesn't recognize it.

REDUCTION OF FUNDS FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS INITIATED

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 23 Sep 80 p 3

[Article by Cherif Elvalide Seye: "Foreign Mission: Funds Cut Almost in Half"]

[Text] Three hundred and ninety-one million francs are scheduled in the state budget for fiscal 1980-81 for foreign missions. Two years ago, in 1978-79, budgetary entries for the missions reached 649 millions. In 1979-80 they amounted to 401 millions. Prematurely, it would seem, reductions in expenditures for foreign missions had been decided. This trend was resumed in the framework of budgetary economies.

The reduction of these expenses was to be effected through a double rationalizing level. On the one hand, in the duration of the missions which must be shortened within the limits of the time actually needed, and on the other, by the number of persons to be sent on a mission. Making use of the embassy personnel on the spot being recommended.

This budgetary portfolio for foreign missions covers not only the cost of tickets but also travelling expenses, as established by decree. Two zones are listed. An ordinary zone and a dollar zone (United States, Switzerland, Canada). The officials are divided into three categories: unclassified, (ministers and comparable ranks), group 1 (index higher than 1634) and group 2 (on this side of 1634). In the dollar zone, for the unclassified group, group one and group two the daily allowance is respectively 23,000, 18,000 and 15,000, and for the regular zone 20,000, 15,000 and 12,000. Unclassified officials travel first class by air, while the others travel by coach.

In a parallel with these provisions, restrictions are being effected in regard to payments for mission expenses. Lower allowance rates are being initiated for an official whose expenses are partially being paid for. It is understood that mission allowances will not be paid when the mission is travelling at the invitation of a country or organization, at which time the latter will be responsible for their travelling expenses.

Moreover, in the framework of rationalizing foreign missions, the procedure to be followed at all times is recalled to the ministerial departments. For example, it is out of the question for a department to contact a company directly for transportation expense. This must remain within the competence of the office in charge of foreign missions. This practice allowed the state to extend sums amounting up to 75 million francs in favor of the airline companies.

Kuwaiti Help for Development Projects

Kuwait AL-QABAS in Arabic 23 Sep 80 p 3

[Text] Yesterday's negotiations between the Amir of the country and President of the Federal and Islamic Republic of the Comoros Ahmed 'Abdallah 'Abd-al-Rahman concentrated on bilateral relations between the two countries and ways to develop them. The minister for Amiri diwan affairs made this announcement, saying that the negotiations were held yesterday morning at the al-Sayf Palace.

It should be mentioned that the Comoro Islands asked Kuwait to contribute to the financing of some of its economic and social development projects.

Yesterday afternoon a cultural cooperation agreement was signed between Kuwait and the Comoro Islands.

In another context, President Ahmed 'Abdallah 'Abd-al-Rahman visited the Kuwait Flour Mills yesterday.

Minister of Religious Trusts and Islamic Affairs Yusif Jasim al-Hajji also received the mufti of the Comoro Islands, His Excellency Shaykh Muhammad 'Abd-al-Rahman.

The meeting was attended by the ministry's Islamic Affairs Director 'Abdallah al-'Aqil, who explained that the discussions dealt with Islamic affairs in the Comoro Islands and the circumstances of Moslems there.

He said that Minister al-Hajji expressed the ministry's readiness to provide Moslems there with copies of the Qur'an and Islamic books, and aid for constructing mosques and Islamic organizations.

Mr al-'Aqil said that the Religious Trusts Ministry had previously provided the Comoro Islands with Islamic books, in addition to study grants provided by the Kuwaiti Education Ministry for Comoro Island students.

The director of Islamic affairs also referred to the development of cooperative relations between Kuwait and the Comoro Islands, as manifested by an exchange of visits by delegations from both countries.

Mr al-'Aqil had previously visited the Comoro Islands, during which he delivered a series of lectures on Islamic culture, as well as conducting negotiations with officials there about a number of Islamic causes and Islamic cooperation between the two countries.

Both sides expressed their satisfaction with the positive results of the visit, and stressed the need to continue the meetings between officials of both countries.

The visiting president and his delegation accompanying him left the country yesterday after a 2-day visit to the country. The country's Amir, Shaykh Jabir al-Ahmad, led the farewell given the guests at the airport; Crown Prince and Prime Minister Shaykh Sa'd al-'Abdallah and senior statesmen also participated in the farewell ceremonies.

DATA ON OFFSHORE DRILLING REPORTED

Brazzaville MWETI in French 18 Sep 80 p 3

[Article by Missama: "Pointe Noire--Bouygues Offshore Installation--Eight Offshore Drilling Platforms Will Be Built In 2 and 1/2 Years"]

[Text] The number of companies of the economic capital will be increased very shortly by the final installation of Bouygues Offshore-Congo at the seaside resort "Mondaine" on the grounds where a former fishing village was situated.

Specialized in the construction of offshore platforms, Bouygues Offshore will build eight platforms for Elf-Congo's account at the rate of one platform every three months. Consequently, at Elf-Congo's request, the Bouygues Offshore program will last about 2 and 1/2 years.

It will employ at least 250 people, principally welders and pipe-linemen. An accelerated training school will open on 15 October next for a period of 2 months.

The installations which will cover a total of 12 hectares, at first will comprise three hectares for yard offices and housing. At the present time a "frantic" atmosphere reigns.

Bulldozers, loaders, cranes and engines of all sorts and sizes are operating tirelessly. The remaining area will extend over nine hectares. It will be used as a yard where the platforms will be constructed and will project into the sea for a distance of 100 meters.

More than a thousand tons of equipment has already been unloaded. The first unloading maneuver took place on 30 August last using a special technique. A barge which had left Le Havre 25 days ago ran aground on the beach and, among others, unloaded cranes, a dredger and a group of mobile homes. The unloading operation ended on 6 September last. The installation work will last 6 months. The first platform must be delivered to Elf-Congo at the end of the month of April 1981.

CANADIAN LOAN AGREEMENT SIGNED

Brazzaville BULLETIN QUOTIDIEN DE L'ACI in French 12 Sep 80 pp 3, 4

[Article: "Agreement Signed in Connection With Increase in the Loan Agreement Dated November 1974]

[Text] Yesterday morning the Congo and Canada signed a loan agreement at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Cooperation. This shows an increase in the loan agreement dated 30 November 1974.

According to the terms of this new agreement, Canada will add $3.5 million to the first loan dated 30 November, the amount of which has reached $11,675 million destined for the realignment project of the CFCO (Congo-Ocean).

On the occasion of the signing of this new loan agreement, Madame Marie-Therese Dagnol, secretary charge d'affaires and acting consul of the Canadian Embassy to the Congo, spoke a few words.

The Canadian representative recalled that her country had already participated in connection with CFCO "with detailed engineering studies and had furnished a factory for the creosoting of railroad ties, a factory which is now completely manned by a Congolese team, which owes its training to Canadian assistance."

The Congolese team was represented by Comrade Hilaire Mounthault, minister for transports and civil aviation.

The Congolese minister did not fail to show his appreciation for this Canadian contribution and expressed satisfaction on the availability which Canada displays for all the conferences relating to CFCO realinement. The minister even underlined that Canada was doing everything possible to induce other financial backers to contribute larger amounts for this project.

Comrade Mounthault declared that the cooperation between the Congo and Canada is very fruitful and recalled in this context Canadian aid given to the Congo for the reorganization of ANAC (National Agency for Civil Aviation) and for partly reestablishing Lina-Congo.

PRESIDENT APPEALS FOR NEGOTIATED PEACE IN HORN OF AFRICA

Djibouti LA NATION DJIBOUTI in French 4 Sep 80 p 1

[Article: "Situation in the Horn of Africa"]

[Text] President Gouled's reputation for wisdom is as good outside of our borders as it is within. His faithful adherence to moderate and peaceful positions now gives real worth to the initiative he has just taken in favor of peaceful negotiation between our two close neighbors who have been clashing for some time.

During his private journey, which did not prevent him from keeping informed, on an hourly basis, of the development of the conflict, at the beginning of the week, the president of the Djibouti Republic launched an official appeal that has merit beyond that of his personal wisdom. Hassan Gouled has added proposals which, if accepted, could rapidly lead to concrete solutions.

The president is proving his sincere attachment to the search for real peace by proposing his own assistance in any possible negotiation.

What more can be done? Pray that his appeal is heard, and that the pathway to peace pointed out by him is followed.

Here is the complete text of President Hassan Gouled Aptidon's speech:

"The Republic of Djibouti is seriously concerned by the continuing conflict in the Horn of Africa and the danger of its spreading.

"Since it maintains close links of solidarity with all of the nations in the region, and is aware of the legitimate right of their peoples to a lasting peace, the Republic of Djibouti urges its Ethiopian and Somali neighbors to arrange a truce to allow for a general and negotiated settlement of the differences between them.

"Faithful to its policy of international neutrality, which it offers in the service of development of the region, the Government of Djibouti announces that it is prepared to promote the success of the agreements necessary for this settlement, which must be fostered by agreements concerning regional development.

"Such agreements could provide for and organize:

"1. Development of nomadic routes and water holes.

"2. Free circulation of traffic and transportation of goods and persons in the Ogaden.

"3. The establishment of common economic infrastructures.

"Desiring to bring together the hope of nations and the support of international opinion, the Republic of Djibouti expresses its thanks to the secretary general of the United Nations, to the president of the Organization for African Unity and to the president of the European Community for their continued efforts toward the reestablishment of peace in this region which is still suffering from thirst and starvation. The republic urgently begs the superpowers to support these efforts and to avoid having the Horn of Africa and the Indian Ocean become the location for their confrontation."

NUMBER OF DROUGHT VICTIMS IN VARIOUS CAMPS NOTED

Djibouti LA NATION DJIBOUTI in French 4 Sep 80 pp 1, 3

[Article: "Drought: Critical Situation--A United Nations Field Mission"]

[Excerpt] A United Nations interagency mission has been in the Republic of Djibouti since Sunday 31 August, to evaluate with the Djibouti authorities assistance for the drought victims. Led by Mr Berkol, assistant secretary general and coordinator for the United Nations office for relief in cases of disaster, this mission is composed of seven members representing the different United Nations institutions.

Received by the prime minister and interim head of government upon their arrival, the members of the mission paid courtesy visits to the minister of foreign affairs and cooperation, and to the minister of the interior, before beginning working meetings with the Djibouti authorities.

On Tuesday and Wednesday, they visited the camps of the victims in the districts of Ali-Sabieh and Dikhil. And today they were to go by helicopter to the northern part of the country, for an on-site account of the condition of the victims in the different camps. A final joint meeting is planned for Saturday.

Like the entire region, the Republic of Djibouti has been confronted for a year with a serious drought which is becoming more and more disastrous. This drought affects almost all of the rural population of the country, or more than 130,000 people.

The herds are deprived of all possibility of nourishment, and the rare water holes are showing increasingly lower outputs.

Approximately 85 percent of the nomads have lost from 50-60 percent of their livestock and the remaining 15 percent have seen all of their herds decimated. The government has grouped all of the victims into camps. At present, nine camps, distributed over the entire national territory, shelter nearly 20,000 people. They include:

--For the Ali-Sabieh district, the camps of Ali-Adde and Holl-Holl which have more than 4,000 victims.

--For the Dikhil district, the camps of Mouloud, As-Eyla and Yoboki, which total roughly 6,000 people.

--For Obock, a camp near the chief town and the Alaili Dada camp contain 1,000 victims and in the district of Tadjourah, 9,200 victims have been registered in the camps of Assaguela and Tadjourah-Ville. Therefore, the remainder of the affected population is estimated at 105,000 persons.

The needs are enormous, but the most crucial problem for these people is thirst. Since the flow from the wells has become so low, the authorities are doing everything possible to supply the population and the livestock by tank-trucks. There are about 60 water distribution points. However, the resources are small, the roads are very difficult and the vehicles have already been put to the test. The supply dates are too far apart, and this situation makes it necessary for the nomads to deprive themselves of water in order to save it for the most vulnerable. In some regions, a daily water ration is given to the infants and children, while the adults drink only once every two days; others make do with the salt water from the coastal plains.

In the very hot season, thirst is above all the greatest danger for the nomads and their animals and may have disastrous consequences for starving and enfeebled animals.

Furthermore, the drought is also widespread in bordering countries, and the traditional recourse to moving elsewhere for pasture lands is out of the question.

It is difficult to ascertain the exact number of livestock. The total number is estimated at 500,000 goats, 350,000 sheep, 50,000 camels, and 40,000 cattle, which insures the existence of the nomad population. In many parts of the country, the mortality rate has already reached 50-60 percent. The remainder of the livestock is in a very weakened condition. The state of their health is critical. The thin and enfeebled animals are vulnerable to all diseases.

GUERRILLAS SAID THREATENING TO TOPPLE MENGISTU

Lahore THE PAKISTAN TIMES in English 1 Oct 80 p 4

/Article by Dan Connell/

/Text/ Eritrea--When the Soviet Union and Cuba swept into Ethiopia three years ago, the entire balance of power in Africa's strategic Horn appeared to be shifting in their favour. Today the situation looks quite different.

The United States has cultivated new relations with a ring of States around Ethiopia, from Sudan through Kenya to Somalia. Perhaps more importantly, a growing number of nationalist movements within Ethiopia itself is providing a mounting threat to the Soviet-backed Addis Ababa regime.

Offensive

Nationalists in the province of Eritrea have managed to frustrate a series of major Ethiopian military offensives in the Red Sea coastal territory, and they now appear to have a slight military advantage over the estimated 50,000 to 60,000 government troops based there.

The rapidly growing guerilla movement in neighbouring Tigre province has also offered the central government a serious military and political challenge, and the emergence of the Oromo movement in southern Ethiopia may prove to be the last straw.

There are strong indications that these disparate nationalist movements are seeking a formal united front. Such an alliance could not only topple the military junta but could be the death blow to Soviet influence in the region.

These generally left-wing movements appear also to oppose any Western influence, and the West has so far done nothing to help them.

In a month-long tour of the Eritrean war zone, I have found the guerillas optimistic that the 19-year war for independence may be finally turning in their favour.

For the past six months, the Eritrean People's Liberation Front (EPLF) has been training and arming recruits for both the Tigre People's Liberation Front (TPLF) and the Oromo Liberation Front (OLF), according to guerilla leaders here.

They have also begun daily radio contact with the Tigrean guerillas to co-ordinate their military operations, and there is talk of setting up a concrete agreement among EPLF, TPLF, OLF and other anti-government forces which could include the Western Somali Liberation Front (WSLF) in Ethiopia's southeastern Ogaden region, as well as opposition groups within the Addis Ababa capital.

"We are optimistic that we will be able to form a united, joint struggle against the junta," said EPLF Political Bureau member Sebhat-Efram during an interview near the battlefront. "We are ready to do anything for the consolidation of this unity."

The main problem for the Eritreans is the continuing disunity within the Eritrean movement itself. Relations between the powerful EPLF and the smaller Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF) have now deteriorated to the point where an Eritrean "civil war" may be imminent.

EPLF leaders charge their rival with breaking a three-year-old merger agreement and attacking their forces from the rear during the last six months.

Claim

Six ELF defectors interviewed here claim they had not been ordered to fight against Ethiopia since 1978. Instead, they say, their leaders have been mobilising for war with the EPLF while initiating talks with Ethiopia and the Soviet Union to reach a compromise to end the war.

However, the rapidly disintegrating ELF appears to offer little military threat to the other movements.

The deserters say ELF forces now number less than 5,000 men. EPLF leaders say that 830 ELF deserters have joined them so far this year, and they predict a continuing outflow.

A series of limited Ethiopian attacks here in August was repulsed by the EPLF, and fighting by Tigrean and Somali nationalists elsewhere in the fragile Ethiopian empire appears to have forestalled a renewal of the offensive.

During the past three weeks, TPLF leaders claim the Government has doubled the size of its force in Tigre to over 40,000 troops in order to launch a campaign there.

Increased counter-insurgency activity is also reported by the OLF in the south, though the Oromo nationalists do not appear to be engaging the Government on anywhere near the scale of the Eritreans and the Tigreans.

In the long run, however, the OLF may hold the key to the demise of the regime, for more than half Ethiopia's population (and half the country's army) are of Oromo origin.

The fact that most of the nationalist opposition comes from the Left poses a special problem for the Russians. The Kremlin's action here could discredit them with their closest allies and friends in the region.

That is why the EPLF has been busy at the diplomatic level, with delegations criss-crossing Africa and the Middle East since the beginning of the year.

One EPLF leader said: "We are going to show the Russians that a revolution can be made without them, or against them if that is their choice."--

DISAPPOINTING ECONOMIC SITUATION, QUESTIONABLE FUTURE DISCUSSED

Paris LE MONDE in French 2 Oct 80 p 5

[Article by Michel Boyer: "After the Oil...."]

[Excerpts] Gabon is the third-ranking manganese producer in the world after the Soviet Union and South Africa, but accounts for between one-fifth and one-fourth of all manganese trade. Worked by strip-mining in the southeastern region, beyond the great Equatorial forest that covers over three-fourths of the territory, manganese is one of the national mining resources.

Nearly 2.5 tons shipped out by dump truck last year: Because of the iron and steel crisis, only 2 million tons will take the same road this year. The operating company, COMILOG [Ogooue Mining Company], 44-percent of whose capital is held by U. S. Steel, had a turnover of 30 billion CFA francs in 1979 (1 CFA franc = .02 French franc) and profits of 3 billion. The receipts of the government, which owns 11 percent of the shares, were nearly 4 billion and the receipts of the Congo amounted to 2 billion CFA francs for tolls and port taxes.

Not far from the manganese fields are the uranium quarries and mines. Some 1,000 tons of uranium metal were produced last year and 800 tons were sold to the French Atomic Energy Commission. In 1979, the company in charge, COMUF [Franceville Uranium Mining Company], headed by the former French ambassador to Libreville, Delauney, had a turnover of 30 billion CFA francs. Some 8 billion were paid to the Gabonese Government, which holds 25 percent of the stock, for dividends and taxes.

For a long time, okoume was the country's only resource (30 billion in exports in 1979) until the era of mining raw materials and especially oil: less than 10 million tons in 1979, including over 8 million for ELF [Gasoline and Lubricants Company of France]-Gabon. With 280 billion CFA francs, sales of crude made up over half of the national product and three-fourths of all exports. They brought in 130 billion for the government -- 40 percent of the budget.

The expatriation of raw materials also means the exhaustion of resources. While the forest is theoretically inexhaustible and while the manganese deposits have a life expectancy of some 100 years, at the rate of 2 million tons annually, the same is not true for the country's other assets: 20 years for uranium, at a rate of 1,500 tons a year (beginning in 1982), and all the ore that was at the surface has been found. The operating cost will also go up for oil, whose production is dropping 10 percent per year. Given the current state of research, this gives it only 10 years.

This African emirate, as it is sometimes called, also furnishes its mirages, not being safe from a certain oil intoxication. Actually, the country has not taken advantage of the good years to ward off the threat of underdevelopment. Furthermore, there are great inequalities between the nouveaux riches and the others, between city and country dwellers, even if some financial benefits handed out have calmed demands.

Agriculture in particular has been neglected, representing only 4 percent of the national product. Despite communications difficulties -- the road system is inadequate (500 kilometers of tarred roads) and the trails impassable during the rainy season, making planes (whose numbers make the Libreville airport look like that of Anchorage) the surest means of transportation -- the rural exodus is substantial.

In the industrial domain -- 5 percent of the national product -- the takeoff has never taken place. There are few enterprises for the processing of national products. This apparently privileged country is actually poor in inhabitants. The results of the most recent census are not yet in but according to estimates, the population varies between 600,000 and 1 million inhabitants. It is a small market covering a territory half the area of France.

Officials of the Gabonese Forestry Company (CFG), the majority of which is in Dutch hands and which has built a large plywood plant, emphasize the small output, without forgetting the cost of labor: The interoccupational minimum growth wage is 40,000 CFA francs (15,000 francs in Cameroon). Only one-fifth of the lumber production (1.5 million cubic meters) is processed locally because "it is more advantageous to export rough timber than finished products," considering the productivity and despite progress in automation. The paper pulp project is still on the drawing board while the main furniture store in the capital carries the sign of a French brand.

There are practically no Gabonese industrialists. Young cadres take their place in government or go into trade and the speculative sectors. Therefore, to get things moving, a diversified investment provision (PID) has since 1974 been deducted from the operating funds of the oil companies, but the results are scarcely conclusive. Near the ocean, the skeleton of an ammonia plant rusts. Likewise, diversification experiments undertaken by the uranium and manganese companies are more or less dormant, except perhaps the startup of a chicken plant.

It is not the time for big operations. The government is seeking to attract small and medium-size industries, particularly French, but German, American or Japanese enterprises as well. Economic conferences will be organized in Paris at the end of November.

In the face of declining foreign capital, especially French (80 percent of all foreign investments), Libreville, which with only 25 percent of the capital of the oil companies is in violation of OPEC, has not yet played the card of economic nationalism. The country may therefore look like no more than a "counter," even if there are those who are tempted to seek emancipation from the former colonial power in order to draw closer to other developed countries or institute African regional cooperation.

It could be said that Gabon has no economy, but rather, finances. Many hopes are based on the Trans-Gabon Railroad, which should constitute the backbone of development, but work is behind. In euphoric times, was it not predicted that the country would be crossed by rail by 1982, making development of the Belinga iron mines (1 billion tons in resources) possible?

To date, the line operates over 200 kilometers, from Ouendo to N'Djole (expenditures totaled 200 billion CFA francs by the end of 1979). Is there not also the risk that the peasants will continue to abandon the plantations in the interior to go live along the railroad, even though Gabon will still not have enough money to import food products -- all its meat, from Zimbabwe and elsewhere? Having the highest per capita income in Africa (after Libya), a deceiving statistic, Gabon is poor in resources.

GOVERNMENT FEAR OF RAWLINGS SEEN BECLOUDING SECURITY ISSUE

London WEST AFRICA in English 13 Oct 80 pp 2009, 2010

[Article by Stuart Sutton-Jones]

[Excerpts]

PRESIDENT Hilla Limann took office in September last year at a time of great insecurity on many levels. There was widespread speculation of a coup against the new PNP government (the ranks of the Armed Forces were volatile and highly politicised after June 4); Jerry Rawlings was declaring his intention of remaining in Ghana to monitor the government for any abuse of power: the President himself, unknown before the elections and as the nominee of Imoru Egala, had to contend with the impression that he was merely a puppet of the CPP "old guard": and the PNP had to live up to its election promises and its posture of being the party of Nkrumah returned.

Now, one year later, the PNP still allows itself to regard Jerry Rawlings as a continuing threat, the Party has failed to maintain its support within the country as living standards fall, the PNP itself is deeply divided, and there has been a campaign of attempted political consolidation by the PNP in various state institutions and bodies: the Press, the Electoral Commission, the Press Commission and lately, the Judiciary with the Apaloo affair. In short, the degree and areas of insecurity felt by the government have not diminished in the past year. This has lead to an increasing dependence by government on the Security Agencies for information on potential or actual threats to its existence. And having few other sources of information, and feeling insecure and thus inclined to believe that substantial threats exist, the words of the Security Agencies attain the level of Holy Writ.

Having just got out of seven years of military rule, the last three months of which were marked by a spectacular mutiny, it is not surprising that the Limann government should regard the Armed Forces as a potential threat. And Jerry Rawlings' refusal to leave the country, despite the bait dangled of scholarships abroad which proved irresistible to many of his former colleagues, only serves to heighten the PNP's worries about his attitude. So from making placatory statements about Rawlings and the "gains of the Revolution" in the early weeks of office, President Limann and his government have now progressed to open criticism of both, on a personal as well as general level and have sacked Rawlings from the Armed Forces.

Isolation plan

The intention of this campaign is to try to isolate Rawlings from what is seen as his powerbase, the Armed Forces, and to alter Ghanaians attitude towards him and the Revolution from adulation to suspicion. So far the popular attitude to Rawlings remains unchanged, he is mobbed wherever he goes which makes it difficult for the Government to deal with him directly, but the attitude towards his friends has changed, most notably towards the cousins, Kojo Tsikata and Tsatsu Tsikata. They have become the object of intense and fantastic rumour-mongering and Kojo Tsikata has been followed day and night for three months. It is said that they are anti-democratic (they are left-wing intellectuals) and that Kojo Tsikata is attempting to undermine the state through industrial action, i.e. he is behind the GIHOC and Black Star strikes.

Security actions are easy to justify in the public mind about a person like Kojo Tsikata who attained notoriety as the first accused in the 1976 Military Tribunal which sent him to prison for "life". Also he fought with the MPLA in Angola for some years in the 1960's. So people are inclined to believe that a) as a Marxist he is undemocratic and b) as the subject of a Military Tribunal under Acheampong, he is in the business of making coups. And now, as a close associate of Rawlings, it is thought that he will bend him to overthrow the State. So, the story goes, it is necessary to follow Kojo Tsikata.

Members of the PNP talk darkly of "evidence" against Kojo which shows the value of tailing him. What evidence? Why not make it public? Why not publicly justify actions which, on the face of it, appear to many as harassment brought on because of his closeness to Rawlings, who still remains too hot to be confronted directly. And if they are not justified, then the actions of Security impinge on all the civil liberties meant to be enjoyed by citizens of Ghana.

Admittedly, the actions taken against Kojo Tsikata are at the moment low-level. Under military rule he would have been — and indeed was — arrested. Thus the advent of constitutional, democratic rule does afford some measure of protection, but it is not entirely watertight.

What is more surprising is that Kojo knows and is known by most of the senior members of the ruling PNP, as he was an activist in the 1950's for the CPP. His political ideology is personally known by members of the Cabinet and the party. Kojo was a founder member of the PNP, and helped negotiate the transition from the AFRC to the PNP, which is a strange record for someone reputedly committed to the overthrow of democracy. So why does the government allow the surveillance/harassment to continue and why is it inclined to believe reports of subversion?

Perhaps the answers lie in the continuing and basic insecurity of the PNP and President Limann. The electorate has seen no sign of any improvement in living standards over the past year, and economic policies (IMF oriented) of living within foreign currency means and placing increasing emphasis on agriculture, are resulting in even greater shortages in the shops, higher prices for those imported goods that are there and no sign of alleviation of the economic mess for at least two or three years. There has been a rash of strikes in the country in recent months, GIHOC and Black Star being merely the most publicised, and there are expressions of dissatisfaction among the ever-increasing numbers of the urban unemployed. This is not an encouraging situation for the PNP which is manifestly failing to carry people with it's policies. And added to its loss of support in the country, there is the problem of the deep divisions within the PNP itself. President Limann has failed to make it clear that he is free from dependence on Imoru Egala and his party network, and has not established himself as a strong leader; the dissolution of the PNP's Central Committee merely papered over the cracks in the party.

All these actions in relation to the state policy demonstrate a basic uncertainty about the capacity of government to govern. The PNP feels itself assailed by critics, the economy is not bringing benefits on the short-term, the Party is divided, President Limann himself is not immune to criticism and Rawlings is still around. Therefore it is easy to see that when the Security Agencies raise the spectre of Tsikata/Rawlings subversion, the government will be receptive to the information, and will place greater faith in the Security Services thereafter. But perhaps the government would do well to rely more on their personal knowledge of the people they are inclined to suspect, rely less on the Security Services, and try to meet the basic needs of those in the industrial sector and the urban unemployed, who, it is suggested, may pose a greater threat to the future stability in Ghana than the Military.

PFP EXPELLS TWO MP'S--The National Executive Committee of the Popular Front Party has expelled two of its members of parliament from the party. They are Mr Kwaku Baah, MP for Nkawkaw and Mr J.H. Owusu-Akyeampong, MP for Berekum. Announcing this after an emergency meeting of the committee in Accra yesterday, the national chairman of the party, Alhaji Yakubu Tali the Tolon Na [traditional chief in the northern region], said when the two MP's appeared before the National Executive to explain their recent utterances concerning changes in the hierarchy of the party's parliamentary group, Mr Kwaku Baah and Mr Owusu-Akyeampong expressed no regrets but rather treated the National Executive of the party with contempt. The National Executive decided accordingly to expel them forthwith. The executive expressed its confidence in the party's leadership as at present constituted. The leader of the party, Mr Victor Owusu, said by the decision the party has gained a new lease on life in displaying its firm stand on indiscipline within it. He reiterated that such acts will not be tolerated, adding that it is better to have 10 loyal members than 1 million disloyal members. The general secretary of the party, Mr Da Rocha, said a full statement on the expulsion of the two MP's will be issued within 24 hours. Earlier, Mr Kwaku Baah had told newsmen that he and his colleague will still maintain their stand on the reshuffle of the parliamentary group. He said while they were in the interest of a peaceful settlement, he and MR Owusu-Akyeampong will not compromise on their principles and the truth. ENCOURAGEMENT OF PRIVATE ENTERPRISE SEEN IN TOURE SPEECH

[Excerpts]

As the authorities in Guinea draw up the next five-year plan, President Sekou Toure has offered some public guidelines. His most important messages were that foreign investment would be welcomed in certain sectors and that the rural sector would receive particular attention, allowing the creation of private forms. "Our needs are greater than our means", the President said. Apart from the need to clarify the allocations to each ministry, the President noted: "We will not count solely on our own resources in some sectors, namely those depending on foreign investments; thanks to international co-operation, additional resources may be made available following negotiations with foreign partners. In this respect there is no restriction. Any new possibility granted us within the framework of co-operation with a state, an organisation or an individual will be used."

President Sekou Toure then said that the essential goal of economic policy in the next five years "is a considerable improvement in the living standard of all the people, and of the rural masses in particular".

Taking the example of Japan, President Sekou Toure said that in education great stress must be laid on assimilating the technological gains of other countries.

A correspondent writes: Beneath the various rhetorical layers of the President's speech lies the one message: that Guinea is prepared to consider foreign investment, private or public in almost any sphere of the economy. Though emphasis was laid on the mining sector, the general policy in Guinea has been to set up joint economy companies with foreign investors.

Of equal importance was the repeated reference to the setting up of private enterprise whether it be in the rural or industrial sector. Again, there is going to have to be a severe review of the entire administrative organisation of economic production, if only because the economy had become so bureaucratised that any attempt to instil private enterprise will lead to serious disorganisation.

The distribution system in Guinea has already been relaxed with bakers, for example being allowed to set up privately.

GUINEAN POLICY CHANGES, REFUSAL TO NEGOTIATE SCORED

Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 19 Aug 80 p 1

[Text] In today's edition we include more information about obstacles presented by the People's Revolutionary Republic of Guinea in the maritime borders dispute.

This time, we give a historical review of the entire process for whose understanding it is necessary to look back to 1886 when Portugal and France, as colonial powers, agreed by a pact on the partition of the continental territory and the division of the islands between the then Portuguese Guinea and French Guinea.

This pact, signed in Paris, and which we scrupulously respect, did not establish any definition of maritime borders.

Therefore, the position of Conakry is untenable, to say the least, when they attempt today to make us accept as the maritime border the line adopted in the pact as the line of reference for the partition of the islands.

In addition, the attitude of the RPR of Guinea has not been uniform on this subject. As a matter of fact, up to just 2 months ago, Conakry defended a position (stated in several decrees by its government and repeated by its delegates), that completely violated the 1886 pact to which it denied any value.

Moreover, the RPR of Guinea always refused a frank and open discussion of the problem.

This is what mainly separates us.

We remain determined on acting toward finding a negotiated solution, which we know is the only way possible to safeguard the rich common patrimony represented by fraternal relations among us, especially during our armed national liberation struggle.

In taking this attitude our leaders are showing great political maturity. The serious attitude with which they have acted makes it possible to believe that a day will come when our brothers from the south will sit down with us around a negotiation table to find together a fair and definitive solution for the problem.

We sincerely hope that this is also the deep desire of the sister nation of the RPR of Guinea.

PORTUGUESE OIL SEARCH REPORT--Jose Viana Baptista, Portuguese minister of transportation, arrived in Bissau yesterday on a 3-day visit to bring to the Guinea-Bissau authorities reports on petroleum research made in the 20 years preceding the end of Portuguese colonial administration in Guinea-Bissau. There is a border dispute between Guinea-Bissau and Guinea concerning the delimitation of their maritime borders, an area rich in potential petroleum resources. According to one study, organized by the Bissau government, the former Portuguese colonial government could begin petroleum production in 1982 producing from 500,000 to 1 million barrels per day. From 1956 to 1974, while the territory was still under colonial rule, the U.S. company, ESSO, made explorations whose results were kept in Lisbon after the independence of Guinea-Bissau. The Bissau authorities entrusted the Atlantic Resources, Ltd, based in Portugal, to continue the research. [Text] [Beira NOTICIAS DA BEIRA 19 Sep 80 p 1] 11634

RESULTS OF DEMOCRATIC PARTY CONGRESS VIEWED

London WEST AFRICA in English 13 Oct 80 pp 2001-2004

[Article by Alex Rondos]

[Text]

IT WAS symbolic that President Houphouët-Boigny sat on his own on the stage of the Palais des Congres of the Hotel Ivorie. Behind him was emblazoned the principal theme of the Seventh Congress of the Parti Démocratique de Côte d'Ivorie: "Change in Stability". President Houphouët-Boigny has synthesised in himself both elements in this dialectical slogan. This is the most significant result of the PDCI congress, which took place on September 29, 30 and October 1.

For over a year, political life in Ivory Coast has been dominated by one issue. Theoretically, it revolves around the dangerously large gap that had grown between those who exercise political control and popular participation in that control. In practice, this means a delicate process within the framework of a single-party state by which the tightly-knit group at the top of the party has had to relax its grip on the political life to accommodate an increasingly discontented generation of younger politicians at the national level, who had been excluded from any effective decision-making. It also entailed the acceptance by the élite of competition in elections for party posts, especially at the level of secretaries-general of the sub-sections of the PDCI.

Naturally, therefore, everyone went to the congress expecting changes both in party structure and in personalities. In this, they have been satisfied by the results of the congress. The post of party secretary-general has been suppressed. Since 1965 the position has been held by M. Philippe Yacé, a man whose considerable influence within the party seems currently to be in proportion to his lack of popularity. The decision was greeted with glee at the congress. The Political Bureau was cut by half to 32 members and of these a significant number are taken from the younger generation of the party. From the Political Bureau has been selected an Executive Committee of nine men which comprises a mixture of some of the more unremarkable of the senior politicians and some of the younger group. Their task is to assist the executive Chairman, President Houphouët-Boigny, in executing the decisions of the party. In addition, a large advisory committee, Comité Directeur, has been formed which will set up committees to keep an eye on aspects of party affairs, including party finances.

Heads have rolled and the importance of the younger generation has been acknowledged. But that is not what this congress was really about, and those who saw its significance by the changes in structure and personalities have mistaken the form for the substance. In the background at least three areas remain to act as severe constraints on any dramatic changes in the effective structure of the party; they would explain the slight disappointment that some observers have felt that congress failed to deal directly with some of the vital issues concerning the future of the political life in Ivory Coast.

Economically, Ivory Coast is going through a critical period. Falling cocoa and coffee prices have dealt a serious blow to development planning. Immediately after the congress the Assembly was informed that the 1981 investment budget, Budget Spécial d'Investissement et d'Equipement, would have to be cut back by at least 100bn. CFA francs to 250bn. CFA francs. Forecasts for income from exports and services suggest that there will be a drop from the original estimate of 338bn. CFA francs to 320bn. CFA francs. The recurrent budget will rise by a mere 2bn. CFA francs to 340bn. With the prospect of attendant economic and social problems it was essential that a reassurance be given and that a show of leadership by the President be made.

A second area of concern was politics: more participation in party and national life by a larger group of people than the restricted élite was necessary. But at the same time any relinquishing of power at the top would contradict the desire to maintain some stability within the party. Stability therefore was the priority.

It was also an essential consideration when dealing with the third issue of importance: the succession to President Houphouët-Boigny. Any sudden changes would simply throw the political balance in the party into disarray.

These concerns dictate a much more nuanced interpretation of the congress.

The President was emphatic that the liberal cost of the country's economy would not change. After recounting the successes of material production in Ivory Coast since independence the president came to the essence of the issue: the sectors which have caused serious problems. He attacked the mismanagement of the state enterprises and in particular singled out the costly errors in the setting up of the sugar refineries in the north. "The second and very serious error was the levity with which the negotiations for the sugar refineries were conducted. The period for repayment of loans is too short, there was over-invoicing, faulty conception and lack of spare parts. The management of the refineries was entrusted to the promoters themselves, some of whom behaved in a scandalous manner. All these have resulted in the fact that we are now producing non-competitive sugar, the price of which is higher than the world price." To correct all these errors, the President said, a number of state enterprises have been abolished — only seven out of 35 have been retained — and 400bn. CFA francs worth of investments have been cancelled.

Education has become a problem of fundamental importance. The President admitted, in a manner that few leaders could afford to do, that he stood to take much of the blame for mistakes in this sector. The basic problem in his view was that "we in fact copied the French educational system without first taking our own priority needs into account." The result has been a drastic bottleneck between the primary and secondary sectors. Classrooms have been unsufficient and above all a greater effort will have to be made for higher education that is more in tune with development needs. In Ivory Coast, law is the favourite university subject. As the President said — again indicating one of Ivory Coast's basic social and economic problems — the wish to send every Ivorian to school "does not mean that we want to create a nation of civil servants."

Still on the economy, stress was also laid on the need to improve rural life. Too many people were being attracted away from agriculture. Modernisation would be needed.

The saviour will in many senses be oil. The President was reticent about this except in emphasising that oil revenue will be directed straight into agriculture.

It is difficult to imagine anyone else other than President Houphouët-Boigny being able to take decisions and acknowledge errors of such a magnitude.

If the President's criticism of some aspects of economic life were judged to be severe, then his comments on political life were stinging. Political decisions formed the centre piece of the congress. The changes have already been mentioned. The atmosphere at the congress was one of subdued but nonetheless excited anticipation. Those who smelt victory also smelt blood. To a certain extent they were justified. The build-up to the congress had included speeches by the President in which he said that his people has now become of age and should be trusted. In the pre-congress elections for the secretaries-general of the subsections of the PDCI there was a 65 per cent change in people elected. At the local level campaigning had been fierce, on one or two occasions erupting into violence: this happened in Adjame when the incumbent refused to acknowledge his defeat. The President ordered a re-run, which was seen as a sign of his commitment to the democratisation, and the incumbent's defeat was confirmed.

Yet one has to ask why, if such combative spirit had been shown in the grass roots, the performance of the delegates at the congress was so tepid. Here one comes to the heart of what power in the PDCI is about. For while the lower reaches of the party have indeed been opened up to new blood, the President has centralised power on himself at the top. Thus he has confirmed constitutionally what has been true in practice; he is the real power in the party who defers very often to the influence of a circle of friends and advisers -- the barons — among the most faithful of whom has been the much-maligned M. Yacé. The victory for the youth is, in a sense, illusory. The post of Secretary-General has been abandoned, the Political Bureau was trimmed to include both the old guard (among them M. Yacé), and some youth, the new Executive Committee reflected a similar admixture; but the real power balance of these groups is ambiguous. The practice of political control in Ivory Coast all too often takes place beyond the constitutional structure.

By enhancing his own role in the party direction, President Houphouët-Boigny has resolved the potential crisis between the generations and the interest groups. There is no doubting that political patronage had run amok in Ivory Coast. Nor is there any doubt that the resentment against politicians thought to have become too well ensconced in their positions of power and totally detached from the masses had to be responded to. This has been achieved. As such, the congress and the developments which will continue in the course of this year remain an impressive example of single-party system in a country adapting itself to the political and social exigencies. The most worrying of these are the maintenance of the ethnic balance and that the existing authority in the party should not be eroded dramatically by the influx of new people.

What the results of the congress suggest is that the leadership and the centres of power — which have the wealth to influence electoral results — have scarcely changed in reality, even if M. Yacé has taken a knock. More interesting, though, is the issue of the performance of the delegates. Their submission at the national level is not so much a failure but rather a reflection of a political system in which local rather than national politics still remain the focal point of political competition. The resolutions and compromises which take place in the party "sous-sections" defuse the potential tensions at the national arena. This has been a hallmark of single-party rule in Ivory Coast.

Yet most people will say that it is to the elections for the enlarged National Assembly (147 instead of 120 seats) on November 9 & 23 that one must look for the real changes. It is expected, and the President himself has suggested, that there will be a considerable turnover. Patrons are investing lavishly in their protégés in the circonscriptions — the constituencies — and in some places there are more than ten candidates for a single seat. The links with the top of the party remain intact. Certainly, the nature of Ivorian politics suggests that the lust for change will have been sated by the ability to compete in the elections; thereafter political dues will have to be paid and this always calls for great moderation.

This is not to suggest that no substantial change is taking place. What has been achieved is a revitalisation of the Ivorian single party system, by permitting competition for party posts the Congress has at least demonstrated that it is possible to rise. It is an acknowledgement of the fact that Ivorian politics are complex and that the simple application of words like "change", "democratisation" and "stability" have a particular significance in the Ivorian context. In Ivory Coast one has to ask: Change for whom? Stability for whom? The two are not irreconcilable by any means, though stability has won the day temporarily. Similarly, the need to maintain an image of stability precludes any drama over the succession to President Houphouët-Boigny.

Before the congress, it had been suggested that either the post of party Secretary-General or the Presidency of the National Assembly would be abolished. This meant two things: either the constitution would have to be changed to make way for a Vice-President, or something along those lines, or that the President of the Assembly, in accordance with Article 11 of the Constitution, would continue to be the constitutionally-designated successor. Either way, the spotlight was on M. Yacé, as it has been ever since the President backed himself into a corner over the succession some five years ago and referred to Article 11 as the constitutional answer to the problem.

Now, M. Yacé's position as President of the Assembly is in doubt. Opinions vary wildly on this point. There are those who believe that the new Assembly will be so changed that it will vote out M. Yacé, though it would not necessarily mean that M. Konan Bedie, who is on everyone's lips when the succession is discussed, would have the post. Another reading of the matter, which seems to be on surer ground, is that the President would be most reluctant to generate a new wave of speculation as to the succession by placing someone else in that position. Furthermore there is no evidence yet to suggest that a changed content in the Assembly would imply drastic changes at the head of the party. President Houphouët-Boigny is too concerned to maintain the image of stability to allow a damaging surge of doubt about the future.

As the leading claimant to the succession, M. Yacé has been the object of unusual pressure which has culminated in articles in Le Canard Enchaîné pointing to his many financial interests — some of the details were not correct — and also implying that under his direction there was mismanagement of party funds. Both issues have a direct bearing on what happened at the congress. All the party leadership has substantial financial interests. In fact, M. Yacé lags well behind some others. They all know this and it is most unlikely that such matters will ever be allowed to raise their head in Ivorian politics. As to party funds, there is very little chance that they will ever be publicised because they are used for state purposes that are best kept secret. And this is notwithstanding the decision to raise the matter during the presidential speech to the congress and also the decision to create a committee to regulate party finances.

With the succession so obscure, attention should be directed to the President rather than any pretenders. He has now said that it will be a "team" of people who will see to the succession. In addition he has said that during his own lifetime he is not going to concern himself with the matter. There are many who would have preferred that the President withdraw quietly into the role of elder statesman overseeing other politicians who will assume the executive. The reverse has happened, with the President centralising power on himself. The advantage in the short term is obvious: it delays the open debate and leaves most people secure on the belief that the President is in full control. The danger is that in making himself the lynch pin of a system which only he controls or even understands, no successor, whether in the form of the team or the individual, will be able to emerge. It will be the system that will have to change. Experience from history suggests that the longer changes are delayed the more painful the transition. Whether he likes it or not, the ball remains firmly in the Presidential court.

Abidjan Notebook

WHO PAID homage to the PDCI and how? This ceremony is an integral part of any party congress and in the case of the PDCI's lasted over a day. From around the world, an odd assortment of party representatives came to deliver their respective accolades to Ivory Coast's only party and in particular its leader, Felix Houphouët-Boigny. For most observers this usually means a day off. However, I could not help but become transfixed by the nuances of some of the messages delivered, the language in which they were delivered and the Ivorian response.

Take, for example, the representative of the Parti Congolais du Travail. His speech reached in what in his own country would be a resounding climax: he invited the PDCI to continue in the joint struggle against colonialism, neo-colonialism, imperialism and exploitation. President Houphouët-Boigny, perched on his podium at the Palais de Congress, accorded the gentleman some polite and benevolent applause. From the floor however, the reaction was quite different. By the time the poor man had reached the word exploitation the delegates were laughing. From behind me I heard an Ivorian colleague observing: "Mais, ca c'est du folklore, ca!"

The Rumanian delegate's speech proved to the delegates at the congress to be as soporific as it was scientifically socialist.

The Moroccan ambassador in Abidjan had to speak immediately after the Congolese, who had proclaimed his support for the liberation and self-determination of the people of the Western Sahara.

The representative of the Christian Democratic Party of Italy, who happened to be a member of the European Parliament, was thanked for his kind words and reminded by the chairman of the day that Ivorians would be looking to him on his return to the Parliament for his support in the ACP dealings with the EEC.

FROM UPPER VOLTA came the most important delegation. It included President Lamizana's wife and was lead by M. Gérard Kango Ouedraogo, the leading light of the Union Démocratique Voltaique-Rassemblement Démocratique African, UDV-RDA. It was a vigorous speech in which great tribute was paid to President Houphouët-Boigny — International Chairman of the RDA — in which the name of Ouezzin Coulibaly was evoked with great emotion (just as Barthelemy Boganda's was by the Central African delegate). That such an important delegation should come from Upper Volta is a fair indication of the debt that is due to the PDCI-RDA. Nor is it entirely divorced from a domestic issue to which President Houphouët-Boigny gave some, perhaps unwise, prominence in his speech to the Congress: namely, the problem of control of PDCI funds. President Houphouët-Boigny has always been something of a Godfather to Voltaic politics.

RELATIONS with neighbours can often be ambiguous. The PNP delegation from Ghana laid great stress that it was lead by Alhaji Imoru Egala, the "father of the party". There are some prickly issues which have to be resolved. Cocoa smuggling from Ghana has, it appears, declined considerable in the last 18 months. But now there is oil. There have been at least three meetings recently between the two countries' Foreign Ministers in which the exploitation of oil close to their frontier, the joint electrification agreement and the development of the Bui Dam in which Ivory Coast and Upper Volta have interests, have been discussed.

For the moment the most important issue is oil. There is a joint pool which stretches across their offshore frontier. While Ivory Coast maintains a silence on the details of its oil prospects, they remain encouraging and it has been noted that Philips Petroleum have moved at least one of their rigs across the frontier from Ghana. Given the pressure on the Ivorian economy to produce oil soon, there is the danger of oil being drawn from the common pool at the expense of Ghana.

THE MOST rousing speech came from the representative of the newly created Democratic Union of Central Africa. His was a vitriolic attack on the bloody regime that preceded David Dacko's and he was resoundingly applauded. No names were mentioned, of course. Because, if Bokassa was temporarily enjoying a brief holiday outside Abidjan, his presence in Ivory Coast has once again become a subject of much publicity following the resurrection of the diamond affair in the pages of the French satirical weekly, Le Canard Enchaîné. There are many Ivorians who are not happy at Bokassa's residence in their country. It is remarkable though the extent to which President Houphouët-Boigny, who took the initiative of inviting the erstwhile emperor to stay in Ivory Coast, has escaped criticism. The finger is pointed at France.

OF CONSIDERABLE amusement and interest was the speech made on the opening day of the Congress by the representative of the RPR, the Rassemblement pour le République, the French bearers of the Gaullist torch. It was a speech redolent with memories of the close tie that existed between President Houphouët-Boigny and General de Gaulle. It all went down very well with the congress, all the more so because the representative of the Union Démocratique Francaise, President Giscard d'Estaing's party, had failed to turn up for the first day. Instead a brief message sent 10 days before was read out. It was only on the final day that the UDF speaker addressed the congress, having reached Abidjan the day before. It all looked very much as if the Gaullists had pulled a fast one on the government partners, the UDF.

To return to the Bokassa affair, there is an interesting sidelight. In April this year there were reports of unrest in military circles which resulted in some demotions and in the arrest and imprisonment of one Lt. Oullai who had, it was claimed, threatened the life of the President. In the event he was given a short prison sentence for embezzlement. The effect was to give the impression that the Ivorian domestic intelligence services had not dealt with information about discontent promptly enough. The Bokassa telephone call to Paris has all the hallmarks of the rivalry between members of the French Intelligence Service, SDECE, who have real control over Bokassa. That this should receive so much publicity does not do Ivory Coast's image any good. There have since been suggestions that steps are being taken to improve the domestic intelligence services, at the expense of SDECE.

IN FACT, Franco-Ivorian realtions were the subject of a good deal of speculation. Much of it centred on the assumption that the Ivorians had permitted Bokassa to make the telephone call in order to embarrass President Giscard d'Estaing. There is little doubt that the French leader has not done himself any good by his dilatory handling of Bokassa after his overthrow. But that the Ivorian leader should be implicated in some sordid little attempt to hook up the former emperor onto a line to Paris is far off the mark. As President Houphouët-Boigny asked at a press conference after the Congress, give him a little credit. There are other ways of registering his disapproval of France.

OIL WORKERS MEET, ELECT NEW OFFICIALS

Abidjan FRATERNITE-MATIN in French 15 Sep 80 p 3

[Text] The National Union of Ivory Coast Oil Workers (SYNTEPCI) held their general meeting on Saturday, 13 September, at the labor exchange in Treichville. In a-dition to many employees of the country's oil companies, there was also a delegation from the executive office of the General Union of Ivory Coast Workers.

During the opening ceremonies, a spokesman for the UGTCI delegation expressed the sentiment that democratic rules be the golden rule of the day so that union solidarity could be effective.

Then SYNTEPCI's secretary general, Ade Mensah, succeeded him to stress the importance of the present meeting which marks the 20th anniversary of the union. He then reviewed the various agenda items:

1) Union activity
2) Financial report
3) Contract modifications
4) Election of officers

Various negotiations with management were concluded and a number of advantageous agreements were made by the latter in favor of employees. These include salary increases for different worker categories. In categories one to eight, salaries were increased by 11 percent, skilled workers were increased by 9 percent, and technicians by 8 percent. An amendment to article 34 of the contract provides for an end of the year bonus of 1 month's salary for all personnel.

In addition, housing allowances were granted to technicians. The other categories of workers will be included progressively in this benefit schedule.

As for reorganization in the union in the coming years, accent was put on union activities for members. Thus plans were made for creation of a mutual benefit group for each oil company and endowment of cantines. Plans were also made to include a cultural or recreational event for each local at least once a year.

However, a shadow on the picture: application of article 19 of the constitution which stipulates that the newly elected governing committee should organize locals in the interior has not always been carried out in the past 20 years. It is hoped that the new group will attend to this state of things and extend the union to those Ivory Coast oil workers.

In closing, SYNTEPCI affirmed its support of the peace policy of the head of state, His Excellency Felix Houphouet Boigny who works unceasingly for the future of the Ivoirians.

FNMAJ ORGANIZATIONAL PROBLEMS REPORTED

Abidjan FRATERNITE MATIN in French 18 Sep 80 p 10

[Article by Bernard Ahua, "FNMAJ's Work Camps: Functions Must Be Defined"]

[Text] The work camps organized by Ivory Coast's Federation of Youth Movements and Associations were placed in three regions this year: Aboisso, where the town itself housed more than 50 young people in August; Man, where there was a camp for the town and also one for the village of Dompleu (located between Man and Danane), and finally, Agboville, where the village of Aboude welcomed almost 30 young people. Among all these towns and villages, only Aboude had received these young people in 1979, for the others it was quite a new experience.

Thus the program conducted by FNMAJCI was quite different this year than last year, for three reasons: First, the number of young people involved was considerably more this year, more than 200 as compared with 150 last year (the number of 300 volunteers anticipated by the Federation had not been reached). Secondly, federation leadership, having learned from the past year, were better prepared both professionally and for organizing work for many volunteers. Finally, last year Aboude was the only camp, this year there were at least four, five if the camp at Korhogo is counted, though organized quite differently from the others.

In brief, FNMAJCI showed a certain bravado which must be saluted though deploring the fact that they were not encouraged in the same way in all the regions. When looking at the work so benevolently performed by these young people, the lack of information about their program is striking. At Aboisso, for example, the townspeople took them for juvenile detainees, resulting in a total lack of coordination between local youth and the federation. At Korhogo, where 50 rural youths were expected, only 10 showed up. At Aboude, then, because of a simple misunderstanding, work was slowed down and the stay was made difficult.

Are the authorities to blame?

Why such lack of information? According to the leaders of the federation, there is first the astonishment of people when presented with this kind of enterprise. "Young Ivorians are going to work for free for any community? Absurd!" Amoa Urbain, president of the Federation told us. Thus people, suspicious and mistrustful, hesitated to participate fully. But this is not the only problem. Still according to federation authorities, "some prefects were extremely cooperative, as at Man for example, while others refused to help us, for a variety of reasons. At Korhogo, the under prefect would not release information under the pretext that there were elections."

To these two reasons we add a third, which seems to us to be more pertinent: the kind of work given the young people. At Aboisso, for reasons given by Grah Mel Frederick, the local young people could not participate. In a more general way, it should be noted that the federation continues to set up camp in the middle of town. Therefore, it is necessary to plan for activities which are in no way dubious, and which leave tangible and durable results. This has not only the advantage of putting volunteers into the most advantageous position for morale, but also makes good propaganda for the work of the federation.

So it is regrettable that the volunteers had not been able to construct youth clubs or schools (as had been planned for Aboisso) and were reduced to clean up work which will have no lasting effect since it will only have to be redone once people come around to throw garbage in the places cleaned up.

It must be noted that the ministry does not do a good public relations job for these work camps (for example, press conferences, the minister welcoming the workers, etc). In such a context, the good will of local youth sports leaders and some prefects and under prefects does not suffice to give the hoped for impulsion for this kind of enterprise. In a word, the authorities must define in a concise and precise manner the functions and role of the Federation as they relate to its youth policy. Only then will FNMAJCI be able to act rationally and efficiently.

COUNTRY'S TRADE PATTERNS EXAMINED

London WEST AFRICA in English 13 Oct 80 p 2032

[Text]

The European Economic Community continues to be the Ivory Coast's leading trade partner, taking 63 per cent of all the country's exports (compared with 58.3 per cent in 1978) and representing 55.3 per cent of all Ivory Coast imports (59.5 in 1978) in 1979. The Ivory Coast had a trade surplus worth 40,800m CFA francs with EEC states in 1979. These figures are part of a recent EEC study analysing the state of trade and economic relations between the two sides.

France is the Ivory Coast's main trading partner in the Community, taking about a fourth of the country's exports and supplying a third of all its imports. Ivory Coast's sales of timber, and coffee increased slightly in Italy, in 1979 but sales of cocoa fell in the Netherlands.

Ivory Coast's purchases of cars and capital goods from the Nine fell by 8 per cent in 1979. The country currently runs a deficit with France and the Belgian-Luxembourg Economic Union, but has a surplus in trade with other EEC countries.

The study, which also deals with EEC investments in the Ivory Coast, notes that EEC capital invested in the country in 1978 totalled 97,408m. CFA francs, or 31.22 per cent of total capital invested in the country.

French investments in the country seem to be on the way down. They totalled 83,225m. CFA francs in 1978. Until the 1970s, French investments represented about half of total investments in the Ivory Coast, but in 1978, the figure had dropped to only one-fourth of all investments. In the industrial sector, French investments represent 24.7 per cent of total investments, compared with 42.2 per cent in 1975. France is, however, still the leading share-holder in the timber-processing, beverage manufacture, chemical and cotton yarn sectors.

British investments in the Ivory Coast increased with the contribution of the Commonwealth Development Corporation to the expansion of timber plantations in 1979 and total 7,346 CFA francs.

Benelux investments in 1978 totalled 2,960m. CFA francs. In 1979 such investments focused on the food, public works and chemical sectors, as well as the textiles industry, coffee and the marketing of timber. German investment totals 2,427m. CFA francs, while Italian investments are put at 1,451m. CFA francs.

BUSINESS MUST NOT SHOW 'CALLOUS INDIFFERENCE' TO PEOPLE'S NEEDS

Responsibilities Pointed Out

Monrovia THE REDEEMER in English 16 Oct 80 p 2

/Editorial/

/Text/ In revolutionary Liberia where everyone is pledged to the rebuilding of a new society directed towards the improvement and upliftment of the social conditions of all the peoples of the land, we would hate to be placed under the impression that there are some elements in our midst who show callous indifference to the needs and welfare of our people.

The world-wide economic situation calls for great sacrifices, restraints, understanding and the need to cooperate with authorities. However, there are some "partners in progress" who demand their pound of flesh at all cost, and where it is not given, they threaten to close down or in other instances, create shortages on the market.

We know that the sole aim of business is to earn profit, and we know that many factors go to determine the profit margin. But no matter what the nature of business, service to the community is of the highest priority. And where it is overcome by indifference and the drive to make a profit, then it becomes necessary for government to impose regulations in order to protect its citizens.

This week two things happened which lead us to focus attention on the need to have the phrase "partners in progress" reflected in our daily activities.

Firstly, the warning by the Vice Head of State to concessions and companies to stop threatening government with closures. Government, he said, will not yield to their threats.

Secondly, it was the Speaker of the PRC who later in the week issued an ultimatum to bakeries to have bread on the market or be fined. There was a scarcity of bread, particularly 10 cents bread because of a disagreement in the price, and it seems to have been discovered that the scarcity was intentional.

Our "partners in progress" are corporate citizens of this country. When times are good, they enjoy and reap enormous benefits and profits. As the nation goes through a process of change, should they not equally share the burden, make economic adjustments and sacrifices in order to build a new society that would breed an atmosphere for greater productivity?

If there are grievances, form a committee and along with the proper authorities, work out an adjustable solution to the problem.

Government is not insensitive to the problems of its corporate citizens, but neither will government permit the needs of its citizens to be held as ransom to satisfy another group.

Those who have obtained the franchise to make bread, must realize that they have an obligation to the public to supply the demands of the market. Where that obligation is subordinate to some other ends, then the government has no alternative but to step in and protect the needs of its peoples.

It is government's responsibility to make regulations, set price scale and standards. There is no doubt that on these lines careful study is being made of the market situation and whatever adjustment is to be made will be done, taking into consideration the great interest of the masses. Until then, in the cause of the people, the struggle continues.

Podier Warns Bakers

Monrovia THE REDEEMER in English 16 Oct 80 p 6

/Text/ Any baker who refuses to produce bread for the local market will be fined $500, PRC Speaker J. Nicholas Podier warned here last Tuesday.

The warning grew out of serious bread shortages which have been hitting Monrovia following a ruling by PRC Co-chairman, Major General Thomas Weh Syen that bread be sold at 10 cents instead of 15 cents a loaf.

Speaker Podier noted that the PRC considers the bakeries' action very grave, and a defiance to government as well as an attempt to exploit the Liberian People.

He emphasized that Government would not allow any member of the business community in Liberia to exploit the people, and warned against anti-revolutionary activities which he said, will not be tolerated in the New Liberia.

"We must now try to live in peace and unity in order to build a better society for all of us to enjoy," he declared.

He re-emphasized the price for the round loaf of bread should remain at 10 cents until government reaches a decision on the matter.

Speaker Podier disclosed that the absence of some PRC members and Commerce Minister Joseph Douglas from the country, had delayed the work of the Committee set up to study the issue. He however has assured the public that efforts would be made to have the matter quickly solved. Besides rice, bread is one of the staple foods in the country and is also a fast selling commodity.

Podier Fines Monrovia Bakery

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 17 Oct 80 p 8

/Excerpt/ The General Manager of Monrovia Bakery Incorporated, Mr. Calabro was Thursday fined $500 by PRC Speaker, Brigadier General J. Nicholas Podier, for selling bread above the official price of 10 cents.

Speaker Podier said if the fine was not paid that day, Government would order the closure of the bakery.

Speaking in his office at the Capitol here, General Podier said anyone found selling bread above the official price would be fined the same amount, while those found selling soft drinks above 25 cents, would be fined $250.

He frowned on retailers and wholesalers who arbitrarily increased prices of essential commodities, which act he said, was not in the interest of the Liberian people.

Speaker Podier has meanwhile called on all Liberians to report anyone found selling local commodities above the official prices.

POLICY ON BREAD, SOFT DRINK PRICES CAUSES PROBLEMS

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 6 Oct 80 pp 1, 7

/Article by Sam Johnson/

/Text/ There is a scarcity, if not total disappearance, of the 10 cents round bread on the market in Monrovia.

With the exception of supermarkets, bread sold at other prices could only be found on rare occasions.

Retailers interviewed said the round bread was not being sold because bakeries were still demanding 12 cents a loaf.

"If we buy it at that price, we will have to sell the bread above 12 cents," a shopkeeper said, reflecting the position of others.

This, retailers said they cannot do because they fear prosecution, and have therefore decided not to purchase the bread.

An announcement from the Chairman of the PRC committee on Commerce, Industry and Transportation, buttressed by a subsequent notice from the Vice Head of State, said that the prices of round bread and soft drinks should remain at 10 cents and 25 cents respectively, until reasons for the increases were substantiated.

Soft drinks are however still being sold for 30 cents at retail shops. But retailers insisted that this was not their fault.

Parched Throats

Displaying a September 18 dated mimeographed notification of a new price structure because of "ever increasing cost of raw material and other expenses" from the local producer of Coca Cola beverages, a retailer said they now purchase soft drinks at $6.20 a crate instead of the previous $4.50.

They would be selling at a loss of 20 cents per crate if the beverages were sold at 25 cents, the retailer said.

Retailers believed the Commerce Ministry is the root of the problems because it had approved the price increases for soft drinks and bread.

Bread-seekers are meanwhile now asking whether the bakers have stopped baking or are stock-piling the bread.

Soft drinks lovers are also wondering whether they should pay 30 cents to quench their thirst or remain with parched throats.

PRC SPEAKER URGES WORKERS TO RESTRAIN DEMANDS

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 17 Oct 80 pp 1, 6

/Text/ PRC Speaker J. Nicholas Podier has advised Liberian workers to be united and respectful to ensure rapid development of the country.

He said the country could be developed through the participation and dedication of all its citizens.

He said this at the Liberia Produce Marketing Corporation (LPMC) where he paid a surprise visit yesterday to acquaint himself with its operations.

Brigadier-General Podier admonished the workers to exercise restraint in their many demands.

He told them that the Government was doing everything possible to provide a board for the corporation to seek their welfare.

The workers appealed to the Government to revise their present salary structure, provide loan facilities and other emoluments in the corporation.

They contend that they had been denied their basic amenities in the past and so they hoped the Government would do its best to remedy the situation.--LINA

FRG OFFICIAL EVALUATING LINA ACTIVITIES

Monrovia THE REDEEMER in English 14 Oct 80 p 3

/Excerpt/ Dr Peter Holase, head of Media and Communication projects at the German Agency for Technical Cooperation, currently visiting Liberia to evaluate the activities of the Liberia News Agency (LINA), met with Information Minister Gabriel Nimley and PRC Chairman on Information, Captain Joseph Sampson over the weekend.

During their meeting, Minister Nimley welcomed Dr. Holasek to Liberia on behalf of government, and commended the German Agency for the Technical Cooperation extended the country in the area of news agency.

He informed the German expert that government was committed to improving LINA as well as meeting the financial aspect of the project.

Dr. Holasek thanked Minister Nimley for the Ministry's cooperation with the German Agency in establishing LINA. He reiterated that the basic philosophy behind the formation of LINA was to have flow of information on both local and international media, and added that he was happy that this philosophy was already underway.

While assessing the progress made by LINA, Dr. Holasek noted that it was now time to think of extending cooperation in other areas.

Following his visit to the Ministry of Information, Dr. Holasek paid a courtesy call on the PRC Chairman on Information, Captain Joseph Sampson at the Capitol Building.

In his welcome remarks, Captain Sampson complimented LINA for adequately explaining the aims and objectives of the Liberian government both at home and abroad, and added that since the Revolution, the Liberia News Agency has operated effectively and efficiently by informing the Liberian people about the activities in the country.

However, he observed that there was a need for essential materials to help upgrade the communication network in the country and thanked the German government for its assistance to Liberia.

For his part, Dr. Holasek noted that it was the first time that in a limited period a news agency was developing rapidly in a developing country and attributed this achievement to the support and guidance received from both the German and Liberian Governments.

He thanked Captain Sampson and the Committee members on Information for the support they were offering to LINA and other news organs in the country.

MANAGER SAYS AIR LIBERIA FACES VERY CRITICAL PROBLEMS

Monrovia THE REDEEMER in English 7 Oct 80 pp 1, 7

/Article by Klon Hinneh/

/Text/

AIR LIBERIA has been reportedly thrown into approximately $6 million deficit due to British Caledonian's "gross mis-management" of the nation's national airline.

British Caledonian's contract with the Liberian Government to manage Air Liberia expired last May, and left behind the $6 million deficit, which covered national and international obligations of the national airline.

In an interview with the new General Manager of Air Liberia, Mr. Thomas Wede Dueh Harris, he explained the financial and technical problems facing Air Liberia which he describe as very critical.

In order to make the airline economically viable, he said the new management has begun streamlining the organization in order to reduce the economic burden on the airline caused by the expatriates management team.

Through this re-organization exercise, Mr. Harris noted that the new management intends to place qualified Liberians in responsible position at all levels of the corporation, instead of hiring expatriates.

He disclosed that feasibility studies are being concluded in conjunction with the Ministries of Planning and Economic Affairs, and Commerce, Industry and Transportation designed to ascertain as to whether it would be profitable for Air-Liberia to operate the Boeing 737 aircraft commercially.

The Boeing 737 recently completed a five-day maintenance check-up in the United Kingdom.

LIO REPORT NOTES LAMCO'S PROBLEMS, PROSPECTS

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 10 Oct 80 p 8

/Text/ After a two-year slump, the price of iron ore has begun to develop a more positive and favourable outlook.

According to a recent LIO report, LAMCO's sales for the first six months of 1980 increased by 8.5 percent to $52.0 million from $47.9 million during the same period in 1979. This is due principally to a 15.8 per cent price increase on most 1980 shipments.

However, there was a decline in sales volume which partially offset the price increase. Sales volume declined from 3.7 million tons in 1979 to 3.6 million tons in 1980, producing a net loss of $3.9 million for the first six months of 1980 as compared to $6.5 million for the same period in 1979.

While this price increase showed a substantial decrease in LIO's net loss of $925,000 or 23 cents per share, it was still far below last year's net loss of $2,702,000 or 68 cents per share covering the same six months period.

Despite the favourable trend on the market, the report claims that LAMCO continues to face the "problems of escalating production costs and reduced demand for finished products in its major market areas."

The report warns, however, that LAMCO's continuation as a "going concern" will be dependent on Management's ability to success, in arranging "to secure additional financing" in order to meet its obligations and make necessary capital expenditures during the 1980 through cost reduction measures, capital equipment financing, factoring of accounts receivable and other financing arrangements.

LIO (Liberian Iron Ore Limited) owns 50% of the common stock of LAMCO and certain other securities of LAMCO. The Government of Liberia owns the other 50% of the LAMCO stock. The Swedish LAMCO Syndicate owns 74.8% of the Capital Stock of LIO.

RELEASE OF STUDENTS DETAINED FOR ASSAULT ON VARNEY SOUGHT

Monrovia THE REDEEMER in English 7 Oct 80 p 3

/Article by Sam H. Johnson/

/Text/ The University of Liberia student body has appealed for the release of colleagues allegedly detained at B.T.C. for their alleged role in an assault on P.R.C. Secretary-General, Lt. Col. Fallah Varney at a night club in Sinkor.

The number of persons in question has not been ascertained, but conflicting accounts put them between two and four.

Making the appeal last Friday when they met with Col. Varney at his Capitol Building Office, the delegation led by Student Union President George Kieh begged the P.R.C. Secretary-General to show magnanamity toward their colleagues by releasing them from further detention.

The University students recited biblical quotations, while a female student even attempted to hold Col. Varney's foot in imploring forgiveness for their colleagues.

But their eloquence at words and servility proved fruitless as Col. Varney stood firm in his decision to punish his alleged attackers.

He told the students that the attack against him had been savage and systematic to the extent that he was of the opinion that it was a "plot."

He said those detained for their part in the attack would be held until "I know they are punished."

Col. Varney explained that on the evening of Friday, September 26, he went to the Farms' Garden night club near the Catholic hospital on a "mission."

In civilian attire, and accompanied by Major Jerry Jorwley, a senior P.R.C. member, Col. Varney said they purchased tickets to enter the club, but were told that their hands had to be stamped before admission.

This, he said, they refused, and an argument then ensued.

"Without warning, I was attacked from behind and shoved against the wall," Col. Varney said.

Col. Varney spoke of an intense struggle during which he and Major Jorwley were manhandled by four individuals, but were saved from further brutality by the arrival of some soldiers.

Asked to comment on many persons who are contesting this version and even accusing him and others of gun-whipping several individuals, Col. Varney said that it was a lie and a machination designed to tarnish his character.

Reliable sources at B.T.C. however, spoke of one of those taken for detention as having been beaten so severely that he was taken for medical treatment. But the sources could not establish his identity.

The Army Commanding-General, Thomas Quiwonpka, when contacted, said as far as he knew, only an individual at present was being detained in connection with the incident. The identity of the individual was not given.

The father of one of those said to have been detained was also arrested, but was released four days later.

Meanwhile, the University students are expected to continue their dialogue with Lt. Col. Fallah Varney at a later date.

APPOINTMENTS OF RURAL PRESS EDITORS ANNOUNCED

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 10 Oct 80 p

/Excerpt/

Mr. Henrie Thompson, former Assistant Editor-in-Chief of the NEW LIBERIAN Newspaper, and Mr. Singbe G. F. Johnson, former Bong County Assistant Superintendent for Development, have been appointed Editor-in-Chief and Assistant Editor-in-Chief respectively of the Rural Press to be launched soon in Gbarnga.

The Gbarnga Pilot Newspaper Project is the first in a series of newspapers to be established in all county capitals by the Ministry of Information, Cultural Affairs and Tourism to cater to the rural masses. It is expected to become functional by early next year.

In an interview yesterday, Mr. Thompson noted that the concept of a rural press was very timely as it would serve as a medium of communication between the rural people and the central government and vice versa.

Mr. Thompson said with the bulk of the nation's population living in the mostly underdeveloped rural areas, "it was unfortunate that the press over the years has failed to direct its energies towards the rural areas."

He noted that the "political bickering and economic rat-racing" in the urban centers have been given more prominence by the mass media, while other interesting and perhaps more pressing issues in the rural sectors have gone unnoticed.

LEBANESE BUSINESSMEN INVESTING IN ECONOMY

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 13 Oct 80 p 5

/Text/ With confidence in the PRC Government greatly increased both at home and abroad, hundreds of foreign investors who took to their heels after the April 12 coup, are pouring back to take advantage of the numerous investment opportunities which have been laid open by the PRC to awaken the nation's tattered economy.

Middle East Airline (MEA) planes flying the Beirut-Monrovia route, arrive at the Roberts International Airport jam-packed, especially with Lebanese investors, most of whom had taken off in the wake of the coup.

Looking back on the early days of the military takeover, many of the returning businessmen admit that they were badly shaken by the event itself.

Explained one large department store owner: "Coups have quite often been the signal for an unending chain of political and economic instability. That's why businessmen have developed the tendency of wrapping up their goods to leave as soon as a coup breaks out."

He noted, however, that the Liberian case had been somehow unique because not only was the situation quickly brought under control, but the military immediately set about reviving the economy.

"The fact that a substantial number of us are coming back is itself a vote of confidence in the new government," one leading Lebanese businessman pointed out.

The Lebanese appear to have quickly caught the spirit of the Liberian Revolution. Already several large capital and labour-intensive investment projects are in the pipeline, including a $2 million steel factory which will produce steel rods and many other essential building materials.

Further evidence of their interest in the welfare of the host country is the setting up of a $50,000.00 business development fund put together by the Lebanese Community to aid Liberians.

As one Lebanese explained, Liberia is for them "a second home," and its welfare would continue to be of concern to the Lebanese community as long as the government continues to provide security and a healthy economic climate for their businesses.

This was disclosed by Assistant Public Works Minister for Construction, Mr. Alfred B. Kollie, who returned home recently from Japan where he led a four-man delegation from his Ministry and the GSA to follow up the agreement reached between both countries last year in connection with the loan.

According to a release from the Public Works Ministry, apart from purchasing materials, equipment and spare parts for the projects the loan will also provide instructors and experts to carry out the training of operators, mechanics, drivers and highway technicians in order to effectively implement proper management of the equipment.

Minister Kollie revealed that a number of issues discussed with Japanese government officials centered around the type of equipment to be purchased, the cost price, and the timetable for the implementation of the projects.

GDR SCIENTIFIC EQUIPMENT DELIVERED

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 4 Oct 80 pp 1,2

[Article: "GDR/MDR: 80 Million Francs' Worth of Scientific Equipment"]

[Text] Antananarivo--The department of Scientific Research has just received a lot of optical instruments worth 80 million Malagasy francs; this scientific equipment had been ordered from the GDR [German Democratic Republic] by the Ministry of Higher Education and Scientific Research.

This new equipment was displayed yesterday on the premises of the department of Scientific Research, in the presence of the GDR ambassador to Madagascar, His Excellency Mr Manfried Richter and of the general secretary of the Ministry of Higher Education and Scientific Research, Mr Velompanahy Aristide, and his staff, including the director of Scientific Research, Mrs Rakotosamimanana.

The general secretary of the Ministry, Mr Velompanahy Aristide, took this opportunity to put forward bilateral cooperation, and especially its realization through this first purchase of scientific equipment, which was made under favorable conditions.

Benefits

His Excellency Mr Manfried Richter, for his part, was pleased with the state of our relations, especially since the signature of the trade agreements in 1979; he expressed his wishes to see the development of the GDR/MDR [Malagasy Democratic Republic] cooperation.

According to Mrs Rakotosamimanana, director of Scientific Research, our purchasing from the GDR offers non-negligible benefits: the GDR grants us easy payment terms and, above all, it supplies us with precision equipment, i.e. equipment of very high quality. These purchases are part of the efforts of the Revolutionary Power to provide an adequate infrastructure for our Regional University Centers and our National Research Centers, where our teachers and scientists are trained.

Laboratory Practice

The contract between the GDR and the MDR concerning these optical instruments (microscopes, stereoscopes, stereomicroscopes, etc.) was signed on 14 March 1980; the amount, to be paid in foreign currency, was some 80 million Malagasy francs; easy payment terms were accepted, thanks to the assistance of the GDR embassy in Madagascar.

Payment will be completed in 1982; it includes 9 percent interest in 1981 and 16 percent in 1982; Madagascar has already paid over 12 million Malagasy francs, before and after the equipment was received. The equipment was shipped by air, from the GDR to Madagascar via France; it took only about 10 days.

This equipment will be used primarily for laboratory practice in the Regional University Centers, especially at the School for Higher Science Education and at the National Tertiary-Level School, at the Antanarivo and Tulear Regional University Centers, as well as for research work at certain centers such as the FOFIFA [expansion unknown], the CNRO [expansion unknown] and the CNRT [expansion unknown].

The GDR is our leading supplier of scientific equipment, according to Mrs Rakotosamimanana; however, because of our "all-directional" policy, Madagascar also purchases equipment from the USSR, France, the FRG, Switzerland, etc.

Let us mention that these optical instruments will be used right away by university students, especially those in their first year of science, for laboratory practice.

URBAN SPREAD OF TANANARIVE EXAMINED

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 9 Oct 80 pp 1,3

[Article: "2000: Urban Spread Toward the Hills"]

[Text] Last 1 October, the first heavy drops of the season were like a warning reminding Tananarive inhabitants of the cross they must bear during the rainy season... A cross with many facets, the most common of which are streets transformed into rivers after it has rained only 10 minutes, dikes which threaten to rupture whenever some cyclone or tropical depression causes the rain to persist for a few days, not to mention the degradation of road pavements as a result of mere bad weather...

At the department of technical services of the Tana-I Fivondronana, the head of which, Mr Rakotorahalahy, we met yesterday, this is, so to speak, an old story...

Yes, an old story dating back to the time when Antananarivo was a city called Analamanga, circled by 12 hills. In the course of centuries, the city grew and problems of all kinds started cropping up: topography, sanitation, traffic, and came down to us...

Mixed Urbanization

One still remembers the boom in the development of Antananarivo which took place during the 1950's. Later on, this development required the realization of an extension program during the 1960's and provided for the creation of residential centers and industrial zones encroaching on the neighboring plains. These, among others, are the developments at Ampefiloha and at the 67 hectares, and the industrial zone reclaimed on marshlands and protected from the water by the embanked road...

Was this right or wrong? Later on, it was noticed that these plains, where urbanization had made its most recent conquests, were faced with a permanent threat of flooding, on the one hand, and with difficulties in rain water and waste water drainage, on the other hand, due to the low gradient of the profile which, in addition, does not facilitate self-cleaning of the existing pipes used for drainage.

This is why an ultra-modern separate system, different from the single system of the older districts located higher up, had to be installed in these new districts. As for the risk of flooding, it is real because of the permanent threat of a rupture of the Ikopa dikes which must be reinforced now that the river bed has been raised as a result of the low gradient of the slope, on the one hand, and of an erosion phenomenon occurring upstream on the other hand...

It was only in 1972 that a sanitation program for the capital was launched. The studies were financed by the United Nations Development Program and the World Health Organization, and carried out by the Hydraulic Technical Combine (OTH). Their cost amounted to the trifling sum of 240 millions of our francs.

In its conclusions, the OTH declared itself not much in favor of the continuation of the extension program in the peripheral plains, because of the problems mentioned above, and also so as not to divert these plains from rice cultivation, which is their proper destination. Thus it was decided that the Tana extension would, from now on, include mixed urbanization of hills and plains at those sites where the problems which are now a nightmare for the inhabitants of the new districts do not occur. The Ankatso area is the first center of this new urbanization program. More recently, Fenoarivo, where the Regional University Center is now under construction, has become a part of this new program. A survey team is now working on the draft of an urban master-plan for the year 2000.

Sanitation

Sanitation, of course, is high on the list in this urban master-plan. And sanitation means, first and foremost, drainge of rain water, waste water and solid wastes.

In this respect, storm-water tanks will be built to collect excess rain water, especially in the Eastern valley where the Besarety, Ampahibe and Antanimora districts are located. Seven such tanks will be provided and topographical surveys are now under way. At the same time, collecting tanks will be built in the Western area, along the Manjakaray, Ankorondrano and Soavimasoandro axis. They will serve to collect rain water before it is progressively pumped into the Mamba River over a period of 24 hours. In fact, studies have shown that discharging all rainwater from this valley without any control would increase the river flow to such an extent that it might present a real threat for the agricultural and residential areas along its course. Topographical work is also under way for these retaining works. Finally, still in connection with rain water, the right bank of the Mamba River will be reinforced.

As for waste waters, emergency works have just been completed. These are works located at the Anosy and Behoririka lakes, which convey waste water directly into the Ikopa River or into the Andriantany canal. A collector will be built from the Tsaralalana district to the 67 hectares zone; it will be connected to the Ikopa pumping station. The recalibration of the Andriantany canal is also contemplated, so that it would essentially be used for drainage. For the time being, it serves two purposes: sanitation of the capital, and irrigation of the Betsimitatatra plain. This recalibration, moreover, brings to light the necessity for a new irrigation canal from Soanierana to Anosipatrana and Ambohimanarina, which would enable the Andriantany canal to play fully its part in drainage and sanitation.

Solid Wastes

With respect to solid wastes, the capital will be soon provided with 720 waste bins. Bids will be invited as soon as the State treasury will have reassigned funds to the Fivondronana. This operation will extend over three years. So will the purchasing of transportation and earth-moving equipment. Also, three dumping grounds similar to those at Andralanitra and Anosipatrana will be created. The method used will be controlled dumping into trenches which will then be covered. After two years, the humus thus obtained will then be composted before being used as an agricultural fertilizer. At present, production is about 10,000 tons of compost per year, i.e. it can be used directly as an agricultural fertilizer.

The composting station will be reinforced and improved to increase production which is expected to double within the next five years...

This extensive plan for our capital is expected to be completed by the year 2000. Some work has already started, some is still at the survey stage. At the same time, current maintenance operations continue, as do the marking of the ground, "tip-top" operations (patching up more or less damaged roads), the construction of public buildings, especially one secondary general education school in each Firaisana, and one "lapa" (a sort of city hall) in each Firaisana...

In the year 2000, our capital will have 1.2 million inhabitants. The city which was first Analamanga, then the "city of the thousand", and is now about to become the first Malagasy city to exceed one million inhabitants, is planning its future. An old story which is now projecting into the future.

U.S. 'IMPERIALIST' AIMS IN PERSIAN GULF ATTACKED

Beira NOTICIAS DA BEIRA in Portuguese 16 Sep 80 p 8

[Excerpt] Before analyzing some facts which bear witness to the United States' age-old and persistent design to infiltrate the Persian-Gulf area and reinforce its positions in that region, let us begin by pointing out the motives which prompted this policy. As a matter of fact, the American president himself, J. Carter, openly mentioned one of them, perhaps the main one, in one of his public addresses when he stated that the concept regarding the vital interests of the United States in the Persian Gulf is founded on the objective to maintain the major positions of the American monopolies in this area in which are concentrated, again quoting Carter, more than two-thirds of the world's oil reserves. Later, U.S. Minister of Defense Harold Brown expounded the President's statement: "Our interests can be best explained in very simple terms: to safeguard access to oil resources," stated Brown, with the precision typical of the military man.

However, the Persian Gulf's economic importance does not per se explain the United States' keen interest in it. The American presence in that area, as in the Near East in general, is directly connected with the United States' worldwide strategic plans, the objectives of which are to safeguard and strengthen imperialist positions in this area, to ensure the "safety" of NATO's southern flank, and to support Israel. Significant relevance has been attributed to plans for utilizing this area which is of major strategic importance in strengthening the United States' general strategic military positions, particularly in view of the region's proximity to the Soviet Union's southern border. In his book, "Armaments and Strategy," the American scientist, L. Martin, stated that strategically the Near East assumes paramount importance, for it constitutes a possible operational base for military activities against the Soviet Union.

Besides strategic considerations of a worldwide nature, the struggle against the Arab people's national liberation movement constitutes one of the most significant objectives of the United States' military presence in the Persian Gulf. In the opinion of Z. Brzezinski, the President's national security advisor, the United States, in this area intends to participate "in an active and positive way in the development of a world in rapid evolution in order to impress on it a distinctive mark which corresponds to our best interests." If we bear in mind the above-mentioned positions of the American president and his minister of defense concerning United States' interests in the Persian-Gulf area and regarding the means of safeguarding them, this concept signifies that the United States is arrogating to itself the right to stand its ground by force or to impose on Arab countries whatever rules and regulations it chooses. The entire history of the Persian Gulf countries, especially in the post-war period, is a glaring proof of the concrete application of American imperialism's aggressive doctrines.

EXPLANATION PROVIDED ON CREATION OF MILITARY RANKS

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 23 Sep 80 p 3

[Editorial: "Only Communists May Be Officers in the Mozambican Armed Forces"]

[Excerpts] The creation of military ranks is a new phase in the growth of our armed forces. We have come a long way to arrive at this phase. The text which follows speaks of the path taken in this regard and the profound significance of the creation of military ranks in the current phase:

National Army

In April 1964 in Kongwa we saw the emergence of the first nucleus of the FPLM [Popular Forces for the Liberation of Mozambique] structured militarily and with uniformity of training and concept.

The basic question was the overthrow of Portuguese colonialism by revolutionary violence. Iron discipline was necessary to overcome the tremendous inadequacies and gradually transform the correlation of forces in our favor, thus bringing the enemy to defeat.

In this respect, partriotism and national unity were inseparable, fundamental elements. When it was necessary for some of us to die so that the country might rise up again; when, with blood, we were going to create a free land where no such land had existed, no one went to die for one particular area, for a particular ethnic group, for one color or race. The combat was for all of our people, from Rovuma to Maputo; it was for a single country, from Rovuma to Maputo.

People's Army

The development of the armed conflict in Cabo Delgado and Niassa led to the appearance of free and semifree areas. Physically, the enemy controlled neither the people nor the land. Already colonialism did not exist as an occupying force but rather as a bloodthirsty invader, a murderous aggressor.

Among ourselves we were Mozambicans.

The enemy's power was destined eventually to disappear; it was important to determine who would exercise the new power, what its objectives would be, how this power would be made manifest and develop.

The FPLM had to expand the struggle, defend and organize the people.

The struggle against the enemy's vigorous forces and the destruction of its sensitive economic and strategic points required the development of initial concepts of that struggle. In this phase, against the people's interests and deliberately acting in opposition to those interests, we saw the manifestation of the selfish interests and unbridled appetites of the new exploiters, former feudal proponents and aspirants to middle-class society.

In this process of class struggle, the FPLM presented itself as a basic instrument of the people, the steadfast force which transformed the free areas into a secure rear guard for our people's struggle.

The FPLM had truly become a people's army.

It grew in the class struggle; it won the people's total confidence; it united all the people around the cause of the fatherland; it became the main stimulus for national unity.

The war revealed a certain number of traitors, a certain number of those who were vacilating.

But in contrast to that handful of human dregs, of human riffraff, the war revealed multitudes of heroes, of stable people, with a spirit of sacrifice.

The Victory of Popular Democracy

After the proclamation of national independence, the Fourth Defense Department Conference was held. The result of that conference was the ratification of the document, "Overcome Class Conflict," which created the objective and subjective conditions for the success of the Third FRELIMO Congress, the establishment of the FRELIMO party as the Marxist-Lenist party, the construction of socialism in our liberated country, and the fulfillment of our internationalist duty, particularly with regard to the Zimbabwe people.

In the Fourth Defense Department Conference it was unanimously decided to reject the creation of military ranks and uniforms at that time. They were not compatible with the development of the army which was still a guerrilla army and had not been transformed into a regular army. They would do nothing to strengthen discipline. They would have induced fear of military stripes, adulterating one's consciousness of doing one's duty in blind obedience to rank, stifling dialog which would otherwise facilitate administrative solutions, encouraging personal vanity and ambition and institutionalizing lack of self-confidence.

In the Fourth Defense Department Conference of the Front for the Liberation of Mozambique in July 1975, there was concern that the army's ranks would be purged, that the class struggle would be encouraged within the army. To introduce military ranks and uniforms at that time would have been handing our combat weapon over to the enemy or putting it in the hands of those who were vacilating. In our armed forces and security organizations there is no room for the enemy's allies, for opponents, for those who are corrupt.

.heir members, especially the officers, come from the ranks of the working class, the peasantry, the revolutionary intelligentsia.

W th the reactionary armed provocation of December 1975, it was plain to see that ignorance, obscurantism, unbridled ambition and corruption had given rise to swine in our midst. These swine used reactionary violence to be able to live like pigs, abuse and ride on the backs of the people, use the weapon of liberation to impose their arbitrary will and indulge in their individual whims.

The swine used the colonial army as their model, an army in which lack of courtesy, vulgarity, drugs, bribery and venereal disease were the rule.

To introduce military stripes at that time would have meant handing the power over to our enemies, to the corrupt captain, the drugged major, the colonel who owned brothels and the general who embezzled funds.

That is why we said: "Overcome Class Conflict" and first of all in the armed forces and security organizations.

In order for the combatants to raise on high the flag of internationalism and brotherhood-in-arms with other socialist armies and the progressive armies of Africa and the world, it is essential for their officers to be communists.

The officers must have scientific knowledge. The military rank must strictly denote one's capabilities, political awareness and level of scientific and technical knowledge.

Military Ranks and Uniforms

After 16 years of existence, we have seasoned cadres, experienced in two wars, loyal to the party, ready to consolidate and defend the socialist fatherland.

However, with 5 military branches and an additional 50 different specialties, with a national dimension, an extreme mobility of cadres, the continuing necessity of maintaining a high degree of combat readiness requiring the constant identification of cadres and utmost confidence in those individuals, it is necessary to introduce military ranks.

The assignment of military ranks will not be a static arrangement. That is to say that no rank is permanent, that the cadres will be promoted according to their political awareness and technical competence.

The ranks indicate the political level and the level of knowledge; they constitute an incentive to raise this level.

Since Marxism-Leninism is in a position of control in our leadership organizations and since science is the permanent instrument of labor, the cadres will be subject to continuous evaluation in order to promote one who is good, not promote one who is incompetent and dismiss one who is bad.

The assignment of military ranks is not payment for participation in the armed conflict.

The assignment of military ranks indicates only the current levels of responsibility and knowledge.

Participation in the armed conflict is a privilege sufficient unto itself.

BRITISH OFFICIAL HOLDS MEETINGS ON COOPERATION

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 24 Sep 80 p 1

[Text] British Undersecretary of State for Foreign Affairs Richard Luce, who has been holding meetings with Mozambican leaders for 2 months, left Maputo yesterday for Swaziland. He made a detour through certain South African countries to exchange opinions on the area's political situation, particularly the Namibian problem.

The British diplomat also held conversations with our country's leaders on economic cooperation with Mozambique, particularly in the transportation and communications sectors. Yesterday morning Richard Luce met with Mozambican Foreign Affairs Minister Joaquim Alberto Chissano.

Information Minister Jose Luis Cabaco was also present at this meeting. The day before, at the start of the visit, the British leader had conversations with Alcantara Santos, Minister of Ports and Land Transport. With regard to economic cooperation to be established between our two countries, the British diplomat announced yesterday in a press conference that a British trade mission will visit Mozambique in October to define possible areas of cooperation with our government in a more precise and concrete manner.

In the press conference held yesterday and attended by both domestic and foreign journalists, Richard Luce spoke of the objectives of his visit to the South African countries, especially Lesotho, South Africa, Mozambique, Swaziland, Zimbabwe and Botswana. The meeting with the journalists dealt particularly with the Namibian question, one of the problems which caused the diplomat to make a detour to this African area. In one of our previous articles we gave more details about this conference.

With regard to Mozambique, Richard Luce asserted in the meeting with the journalists that his country is interested in maintaining ties of bilateral cooperation. Luce stated that Mozambique has an important role in solving the Zimbabwe problem and that Great Britain is also considering this aspect in designating Mozambique as a country with which it wants to maintain cooperative relations.

PAPER STRESSES IMPORTANCE OF NAMIBIAN ELECTION

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Oct 80 p 12

[Text]

WINDHOEK. — The White election due in this country next month is being described in some circles as a sideshow, but it will be anything but that.

On the contrary, the election promises to be the most important since the National Party came to power in 1950, exceeded in importance perhaps only by the 1978 one-man-one-vote internally-supervised election.

Republican Party leader Dirk Mudge has reportedly said that the constitutional process will proceed as it has done over the past two years, whether his party wins the election or not. That however should not be construed as an underestimation of the issues at stake.

Mudge knows only too well that the moderate Blacks are looking to the RP to see:

- Whether the majority of Whites in South West Africa are genuinely prepared to move along the path of co-operation with other population groups, or whether they are still hamstrung by apartheid;
- Whether the majority of Whites really favour a broad Namibian nationalism or whether they want to remain an appendage of the SA White establishment;
- Whether Dirk Mudge is a White leader in his own right, or whether he is merely being propped up in the National Assembly by Black support.

The leader of the NP Mr A H du Plessis and his supporters feel equally strong about the importance of the election. It was indeed Du Plessis who requested former Administrator-General, Judge M T Steyn 18 months ago to call a White election as soon as possible to clear up who really leads the Whites in SWA.

The issues that seem most important in the NP campaign are these:

- To show that the Mudge breakaway from the NP in late 1977 had no real electoral substance;
- To show that the Whites of SWA have not accepted the existing dispensation, involving three-tier government, a redistribution of constitutional functions and enforced integration.
- To make it clear that constitutional development which does not enjoy the support of a majority of Whites could precipitate racial confrontation and even a White exodus from SWA, with disastrous socio-economic consequences;
- To convince the Whites that the demise of the NP will be synonomous with the demise of the Whites in SWA.

The RP in turn naturally refutes all these points. On the one hand, it desperately wishes to fulfil the expectations of the Blacks and Browns — on the other it cannot be oblivious to the interests of the Whites.

On the contrary it also champions the cause of the Whites: but believes that White survival is an impossibility unless there is compromise and co-operation among all the country's peoples.

This is not to say that the NP doesn't go along with that formula, it's just that the NP takes a far more exclusivist view of the situation, and has made demands of the other population groups that are found to be largely racist and unacceptable.

Significantly, the leaders of the RP are all former NP members, and their general outlook was reasonably in step with that of the NP until three years ago, having been rooted in the Turnhalle Conference between 1975 and 1977 and in separate development before that. If there were differences in the past, these were probably more approach-orientated than principle-orientated.

The differences in approach, however, have more recently developed into differences of principle, particularly since the 1978 one-man-one-vote election and the emergence of first-tier government.

The NP which traditionally focused on exclusively White interests, particularly Afrikaner interests, liberalised its approach during the Turnhalle Conference, but since the break in its ranks in 1977 has returned partially to the laager approach.

It could of course be argued that the NP as presently constituted never did in fact liberalise during the Turnhalle Conference period, but that those who showed more liberal tendencies then were those who were ultimately to break away in 1977.

Be that as it may, the RP strongly maintains today that no party nor policy is worth anything unless the party can win the confidence of the majority of voters in a national one-man-one-vote election, set up a workable constitution and implement its policies.

Unavoidable

This approach naturally stems from the broad acceptance in the country of UN Security Council resolution 435, involving a UN-supervised election with Swapo as a participant. In the long term this cannot be avoided.

Mudge has said several times that DTA policies are not necessarily the most suitable to any one population group, but at least they have the greatest acceptance among all the population groups.

The RP rejects the NP's idea of returning to the original Turnhalle principles, arguing that while these had merit in the mid-seventies, they have been overtaken by time and events.

In particular, the original Turnhalle principles placed too much stress on ethnic interests, placed too much power at the second level of government, were merely one step away from apartheid, were too inflexible and no longer enjoy the full support of the Black and Brown people.

Grudge election

Perhaps the most important feature of the election, and certainly the most difficult for outsiders to perceive, is that it is primarily a grudge election. The NP would like to see it as symbolic of the political death of Dirk Mudge for his alleged "betrayal" of the NP and what it believes is the White cause.

Mudge is particularly resented because he grabbed the initiative in inter-group relations from Messrs A H du Plessis, Eben van Zijl, Kosie Pretorius and Jannie de Wet and, as if to add insult to injury, gained the SA Government's blessing for his actions.

Mudge is also vehemently resented for having become the wedge preventing improved relations between the NP's alliance front, Aktur, and the country's moderate Blacks and Browns. Indeed, the NP fully realises that conciliation with the Blacks and Browns and its ideal of returning to the original Turnhalle principles is absolutely impossible while the far more moderate Mudge is in the way.

The White election is thus really a choice of the true White leader of the future in SWA — Dirk Mudge, or Eben van Zijl, the extremely ambitious "crown prince" of the NP.

ARMY PAPER EXPLAINS SUCCESS OF ANTI-GUERRILLA RAID

Windhoek WINDHOEK OBSERVER in English 9 Oct 80 p 19

[Text]

WINDHOEK: According to an article in the Army newspaper 'Uniform', SWAPO fighters had expected the raid on their base in the south of Angola. The base was SWAPO's operational headquarters in the south of ANgola.

'Uniform' writes that SWAPO was possibly expecting the attack along a north-south road near the base, and therefore the shoulders and sides of the road were mined. However, the paper writes, the South Africans, in their infantry combat vehicles "bundu-bashed" for quite some time before launching a three-pronged attack from east to west.

Surprise, speed and spotted intelligence were the three factors behind the successful attack. When the attack was launched in the operation code-named "Smokeshell", it became clear that the enemy was caught off guard but, writes 'Uniform', they put up a fierce resistance. 'Uniform' goes on to say that SWAPO's base had a well co-ordinated fire plan, complete with concealed gun positions, mines, rifle pits and machinegun nests, but it was the surprise and speed of the attackers which caught SWAPO off guard, an inference borne out by the fact that the guerrillas were about to eat lunch when the first shells were fired.

'Uniform' notes that the defenders put up a fierce resistance, and many died sprawled across their weapons – an observation totally contrary to what officers told military correspondents in Angola at the time. At these briefings, reporters were given the impression that the guerrillas simply lacked the guts to resist. The Army newspaper says that over 370 tons of equipment were captured, and these included recoilless guns, armoured vehicles, 23 anti-aircraft guns, landmines, missiles and scores of rifles.

The picture by courtesy of 'Uniform' shows a lecture room of SWAPO, well concealed in the bush, going up in flames. An armoured car is vaguely discernible in the background.

SWA COMMANDER TO HEAD UP S. AFRICAN FORCES

Capetown THE CAPE TIMES in English 9 Oct 80 p 2

[Text]

BEFORE the end of the year, all the South African troops serving on the border will be under command of a "foreigner" — the commander of SWA/Namibia's growing domestic defence force.

South West African Territorial Force (SWATF) troops comprise 20 percent of those serving in the operational area, Windhoek-based military-affairs writer Helmoed Heitman writes in Armed Forces.

The SWATF falls under the territory's central authority for most administrative purposes, while operational control and security are still the responsibility of the SADF.

But later this year, the General Officer Commanding SWATF will also assume command of SADF troops. The force's budget will be funded by the SWA/Namibian Treasury.

Unless there was an end to or a major de-escalation of hostilities, said Mr Heitman, the SWATF would "almost certainly" remain dependent on the SADF for more specialized functions and most forms of air support. But it was hoped the SWATF would reach sufficient strength in two to three years to replace most of the non-specialized units of the South African Army deployed in the operational area.

However, any substantial reduction in South African deployment would almost certainly depend on there being no major escalation of hostilities. Any major build-up of military presence in Angola could also militate against any such reduction.

At the moment, according to Mr Heitman, the SWATF consists of:

- Six full-time ethnic battalions of light infantry trained primarily for counter-insurgency operations;
- A conventional-warfare brigade consisting of a full-time inter-ethnic motorized infantry battalion and two part-time motorized infantry battalions, a part-time armoured car regiment and a part-time composite regiment of field artillery;
- A total of 26 part-time "area force units", responsible for internal security in specific areas on the same lines as SADF commando units;
- Various support elements, training units and headquarters formations;
- A full-time horse, motorcycle and tracker unit called 1 SWA Specialist Unit; and
- One part-time squadron flying light aircraft.

SWAPO LEADER BLASTS PRETORIA-INSPIRED POLICY IN OVAMBO AREA

Windhoek WINDHOEK OBSERVER in English 9 Oct 80 p 9

[Text]

WINDHOEK:

New legislation in the country's Ovambo-speaking region yesterday triggered strong reaction. The new legislation is a violation of the civil concept that a man, not guilty of an offence, shall not be penalised for it.

Whether he is guilty or not, a civil servant or teacher appearing in Court in the Ovambo-speaking region on political charges, can be dismissed from his job. The legislation has already been promulgated.

At a news conference yesterday the leader of SWAPO-D, Mr. Andreas Shipanga, said that Mr. Cornelius Ndjoba, the DTA president, had evidently acted on orders from Pretoria, his political masters.

All that was now necessary, Mr. Shipanga told newsmen, was for the Security Branch of the Police to detain anyone who differed politically from Mr. Ndjoba. The legislation promulgated also provides for no appearance in Court, and the detainee automatically loses his job.

ARRANGED DETENTIONS

At the news conference Mr Shipanga pointed out a matter which in the past has often been an issue of the gravest concern -- that detentions can be arranged. Those who must be dismissed are simply placed on a list which, in turn, is handed to the Police, and that is the end of the "troublesome" teachers and nurses. These, said Mr. Shipanga, were usually those people whose political views and beliefs were not liked by the South African government and its servants in this country.

Mr. Shipanga said that Mr Ndjoba's proclamation was not based on law. It was merely issued by the DTA and those behind that Alliance to suppress their political opponents.

Promulgation of that legislation was followed by abuse of the Ovambo-speaking citizens. Mr. Ndjoba declared that English was the language of SWAPO. Afrikaans had to remain. Mr. Ndjoba argued that retention of Afrikaans as the medium, aided those Ovambo-speaking workers who obtained jobs on farms.

Mr. Shipanga said those did not merely represent Mr. Ndjoba's views. Those views represented the view of the DTA leadership towards the people of northern South West Africa).

COTERIE OF BIG GUNS

He referred to the abortive attempt by Mr. Peter Kalangula, the member of the Executive Committee in the Ovambo Bantustan government charged with education, to make of English the first language. It brought on Mr. Kalangula the wrath of Pretoria and that of the DTA hierarchy.

Dr. Ben Africa -- he should call himself Afrika, said Mr. Shipanga -- headed a coterie of big DTA guns to Ovamboland to deal with the treason against the language of the master. Mr. Ndjoba, Mr. Shipanga went on, saw the light, hence his insulting remarks about the Ovambo-speaking people and the English language.

Mr. Shipanga described second tier governments in South West Africa as a euphemism for Bantustan. He bitingly remarked that Mr. Ndjoba and his mentors seemed to have an account to settle with the English. That language had long since ceased to be exclusively the language of the Englishman. It was an international medium, criss-crossing the international world. He said all patriotic and liberation movements used English as their medium.

"Let Mr. Ndjoba and those behind him understand that, whatever efforts they make to suppress English, the majority of the Black population in this country will never accept Afrikaans as the official language", Mr. Shipanga said.

IDENTIFIED WITH CRUEL SYSTEM

He went on to say that if English were the language of SWAPO, as Mr. Ndjoba claimed, whose language was Afrikaans? While his movement would refuse to stoop as low as Mr. Ndjoba, he could nevertheless say that Afrikaans, both here and in South Africa, was identified with a system so cruel that it could cause small children to face death and to be killed by gunfire at the hands of those enforcing their unwanted language upon them.

Mr. Shipanga sarcastically noted that Mr. Ndjoba's utterances could only have been made by a man who could barely speak or write his own language, let alone Afrikaans.

He described Mr. Ndjoba as an old racist, from whose mouth flowed disparaging remarks, spelling out the policies of the South African government and the DTA.

The policy of the DTA stood for the colonial slogan that the African must remain a hewer of wood and a drawer of water, said Mr. Shipanga.

DUTCH ADVISER TO SWAPO--A retired Dutch General has drawn up a strategic military plan for SWAPO, involving the overthrow of the South African Government s "apartheid regime." He is General M.W. von Meyenfeldt, until recently Governor of the Royal Military Academy at Breda in the Netherlands. Apparently he is SWAPO's new technical adviser and ' has compiled a blueprint for SWAPO at the request of the Dutch Anti-Apartheid Organisation (Kairos). It is understood that the General's strategy was discussed at the recent Namibia conference held in Paris and according to a SWAPO collaborator, the General's suggestion for war against SA was a pleasant surprise. "It was encouraging that an ex-general from a NATO country has stated that force of arms could lead to a solution in SWA." The General's blueprint recommends that South African military communications should be interfered with and that the military infrastructure should be destroyed. INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION INDEX REPORTED DOWN

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 7 Oct 80 p 1

/Article by Onyema Ugochukwu/

/Text/ The Index of Industrial Production dropped to 155.8 (1972-100) during the first quarter of 1980, the Central Bank has reported.

The index, prepared by the Central Bank from data supplied by the Federal Office of Statistics covers 20 manufacturing industries, electricity generating and mining and indicates the level of industrial activity in the economy.

The index for the first quarter of 1980, represented a decline of 9.4 percent from the average for the four quarters of 1979. Compared with the first quarter of 1979 alone, the decline was 4.5 percent.

The decline, however, was entirely due to lower levels of activity in the petroleum dominated mining industry and in the electricity generation sector.

The index for mining fell by 17.3 percent from the average for 1979 to 117.3 while that for Electricity fell by 2.5 percent to 223.4--its lowest level since the fourth quarter of 1977.

And because the two industries have a combined share of 68.1 percent of all the weights used in the index, they dragged the overall index down.

The manufacturing sector actually recorded an increase. The index for the 20 industries in the sector was 229.9, representing an increase of 1.9 percent over the quarterly average for 1979.

Compared with the first quarter of 1979 alone, the increase was 4.4 percent.

Of the 20 industries covered however, only the indices of 11 increased, in many cases marginally. The other nine declined.

The index for the Vegetable Oil industry rose to 17.7 from a quarterly average of 16.6 in 1979. At that level however, it is quite clear that the industry is not about to recover from the problems that have plagued it since the 1972/73 drought.

In fact, compared with the fourth quarter of 1979, there was no increase in the first quarter of 1980.

The index for sugar also increased marginally, rising from a quarterly average of 115.3 in 1979 to 11.5 in first quarter 1980. That for sugar confectionery however, rose by 7.2 percent to 225.2.

Soft drinks and beer also rose, respectively, by 19.5 percent and 1.8 percent to 387.4 and 293.0.

The indices for Soaps and Detergents, Refined Petroleum Products, Other Petroleum Products, Cement, Tin, Metal and Roofing sheets were the others that showed any increases.

Soaps and Detergents rose from 316.7 to 342.0 at which level it was, however, lower than the average for 1978.

Refined Petroleum Products and other Petroleum Products rose from 120.3 and 71.4 respectively, to 123.3 and 78.0 while Cement, Tin, Metal and Roofing sheets rose respectively from 172.0, 39.3, and 192.8, to 174.0, 41.2 and 195.6.

Of those that declined, the biggest drop was in Radios, Changers and TV Assembly, which fell 17.4 percent from the quarterly average for 1979, to 81.8.

This was followed by Pharmaceuticals, which fell 5.1 percent to 321.0, Cigarettes which fell 4.6 percent to 121.6 and Rubber which fell 4.2 percent to 118.9.

The Indices for Footwear, Cotton Textiles and Vehicle Assembly fell by 3.1 percent, 2.9 percent and 2.4 percent, respectively, to 121.1, 196.4 and 1,051.6, while other Textiles and Paints and Allied products fell 1.1 percent and 0.5 percent, respectively, to 1,144.0 and 278,0.

PRICE INDEXES POINT TO LOW INFLATION RATE

Lagos BUSINESS TIMES in English 7 Oct 80 pp 1, 32

/Text/ Consumer Price Indices published by the Federal Office of Statistics point to a low inflation rate for the country this year. On the basis of the composite Index of the FOS, inflation ran at an annual rate of 8.6 percent during the first three months of the year, as against 11.8 percent in 1979.

Last week at his World Press Conference, President Shehu Shagari said that available data showed that the price index increased by only 2 percent during the first half of the year. The rate of inflation has, however, increased during the second half, he said.

The declining trend in prices would appear to be supported by the Retail Price Indices of Selected Consumer Items in the Lagos Area, prepared by the Central Bank.

In the four months from January to May 1980, the all-items index rose from 297.7 (1974-100) to 314.1--a rise of 5.5 percent.

In April, the index actually dropped by 1.5 percent from the previous months' level.

The low inflation rates indicated by both the FOS and Central Bank indices, however, have not been supported by evidence from the markets.

Reports on prices of food items in various markets indicated that they maintained a distinctly upward trend during the first half of the year.

Even among the non-food items government measures have contributed to price increases. Items whose prices have increased substantially during the year include electricity, transportation, urban housing and miscellaneous services.

In the second half of the year, evidence from the suggest that prices, particularly of food items, have increased substantially. /sentence as published/

While there is evidence that local food production has increased, the indication is that this food is getting to consumers at higher prices, partly because of higher transportation cost, but mainly because of long chains of distribution that make final prices totally unrelated to farm-gate prices.

COUNTRY URGED NOT TO ACQUIRE NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 30 Oct 80 p 3

[Editorial in the column "DAILY TIMES Opinion": "The Nuclear Option"]

[Text]

WHEN Nigeria adopted a foreign policy which had Africa as the centrepiece, it must have been realised by the officials that more than words would sooner or later be demanded of the country.

Nigeria soon showed the seriousness of her intentions by moral and material contributions to the cause of liberation throughout the continent. This was perhaps prompted by the realisation that the bonds linking all Africans were strong enough to warrant the risks involved in the commitment.

This country will soon be called upon to make some critical decisions arising from her foreign policy stance. The most important of these decisions will be on whether or not to acquire nuclear armament.

The President has announced at a World Press conference marking the country's 20th independence anniversary and his first year in office, that Nigeria will take steps to acquire nuclear armaments, if, racist South Africa does, and thereby threatens the rest of Africa with it.

Acquisition of nuclear power by South Africa has moved out of the field of conjecture with confirmation that she recently collaborated in testing a nuclear device. Secondly, as long as she remains an obstacle to freedom and self-determination, armament of whatever kind in South Africa's hands must be seen as a direct threat to the rest of Africa.

Nigeria's choice seems, by the existence of these facts, limited to when to begin working towards achieving this end, and not whether she should or not. A sense of national pride urges that we should immediately begin the exercise. But we plead caution, because an arms race between this country and South Africa may not be in Nigeria's best interests. And there is no doubt, that such a race will begin as soon as Nigeria goes nuclear. Nuclear proliferation also endangers the countries that possess the bomb. It is doubtful, therefore, if the proposed course is the proper response to the South African threat.

It is necessary therefore for Nigeria to explore other means of bringing South Africa to her senses. Mere possession of nuclear weapons will not constitute a deterrent until we have the skill to manage and protect the weapons. It is at present doubtful if Nigeria has these skills, considering the dearth of indigenous nuclear scientists and experts.

It might be argued in favour of the proposition that it is better to negotiate from a position of strength rather than of weakness. It is only hoped that possession of nuclear weapons will give Nigeria greater strength rather than expose her to greater danger As long as any doubt about this remains, our advice is: Don't.

FIRST DIVISION COMMANDER, SHAGARI ON ARMED FORCES

Forces To Be Reinforced

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 3 Oct 80 p 11

[Text]

THIS country is determined to maintain an adequately equipped and disciplined defence force to defend her territorial integrity and national interest, President Shagari declared in Lagos on Wednesday.

President Shagari said "our dynamic foreign policy posture can only be creditable if we have a well equipped and disciplined force.

To this end, he said, his administration "shall build a modern, self-reliant, combat-ready and well-motivated armed forces.

President Shagari was enumerating Nigeria's foreign policy achievements since the inception of the new civilian administration in an independence-day celebration broadcast to the nation.

He expressed satisfaction that reasonable progress had been made towards the evolution of the African Economic Community on a continental scale since the first African Economic Summit in Lagos this year.

President Shagari also pointed at the country's contributions to the elimination of conflict in the trouble regions of Africa.

He specifically mentioned the country's peace efforts and initiatives in finding solutions to the Chadian crisis, the Ogaden imbroglio and the conflict in the Western Sahara.

Better Only 50,000 Men

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 16 Oct 80 p 5

[Text]

NIGERIA can do well with an army strength of 50,000 well-trained men.

Disclosing this was the general officer commanding the First Division of Nigeria Army in Kaduna, Major-General David Jemibewon.

He declared: "An efficient mobile army of small strength, professionally skilled and equipped in fire power is more preferred to a large body of men lacking even the commonest military hardware."

Major-General Jemibewon also observed that "modern armies do not thrive on mere numerical strength."

He made these observations in Ile-Ife while presenting a paper titled "The administration of the military, 1960-1980" at the National Conference on "Twenty years of Nigerian public administration holding at the University of Ife.

The former military governor of Oyo State also made it clear that he was merely projecting into the future and that "I am also aware that the army authorities intend to organise and maintain an army strength of between 100,000 and 150,000 men."

Major-General Jemibewon said that his premise on the suggested strength was not in sympathy with high defence spending "since by substituting firepower to manpower, the cost is definitely to rise."

He warned that the need for restructuring our military forces to meet the tactical and strategic demand of the 80's could not be overlooked, adding that "to raise an eye-brow on military expenditure with the argument that Nigeria does not envisage imminent threat is to miss a vital point of a valid argument."

The commander emphasised that events at the country's borders were indicators of the need for constant alertness.

UNONGO: I RESIGNED TO HELP SHAGARI, PROTECT FRIENDS

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 3 Oct 80 p 5

[Text]

THE former Minister of Mines and Power, Mr. Paul Unongo, said in Makurdi, at the weekend that he resigned from office to help Alhaji Shehu Shagari, whom he described as "fine gentleman and a decent human being."

Mr. Unongo was speaking at a rally to mark his 43rd birthday.

The former Minister also said his resignation was to protect his friends and well wishers, adding that "time will vindicate me."

Mr. Unongo denied the allegation that pressure had been put on him by the President to quit office and declared: "Nobody in Nigeria can force me to do what I don't want to do, and nobody in his right senses can afford to push me around simply, because I am a politician."

He therefore, called on those who hated, opposed or admired him to bear in mind that he resigned from public office on his own.

Recounting his political experience, Mr. Unongo said he was one of the architects of the Second Republic, adding that at 43, he still had a bright future.

OIL PRODUCTION SAID DOWN 'TEMPORARILY'

Lagos BUSINESS TIMES in English 14 Oct 80 p 1

/Article by Henry Atenega/

/Text/ Nigeria's oil production has dropped below the 2 million barrel per day level, but industry sources described the drop as "temporary." Government officials believed that production will soon return to 2 million b/d, at which level they intend to maintain output for next year.

The 2 million barrels per day level represents a significant decline from the average production rate of 2.15 million barrels/day maintained during the first half of the year.

"The drop," an expert explained last week, "isn't deliberate but in line with the state of the market."

Before the outbreak of the current Iranian-Iraqi war, the market was over-supplied to the tune of 2m barrels per day. But this glut may not continue, continued my sources, if the war persists.

Iran used to produce about 1.5m barrels per day out of which she consumes about 700,000 barrels per day. Iraq, on the other hand, produces about 3.3m barrels per day and consumes approximately 600,000 barrels locally. Meaning that should the war disrupt both countries' production heavily, the market will run into a surplus of about one million barrels a day.

At present, this trend is not noticeable in the market because of world storage capacity which one expert put at "very high." He also conceded: "The war has somehow held off pressure on the prices of crude. That's at least one effect that is readily noticeable now."

With a world daily production for export of between 27m and 28m barrels, crude petroleum on the average sells at 37 dollars per barrel today. As usual, this export figure does not include the roughly 12 and nine million barrels per day produced by the Soviet Union and the United States of America.

The Nigerian light crude, experts predict, is among crude likely to be directly affected should the expected Iranian/Iraqi war expected ripple really take effect. This is because both countries produce heavy and light crude.

But strong resentment against Nigeria had apparently built up among the other members of the group, who voted together to defeat both the Nigerian proposal and her nominee.

KADUNA REFINERY, ALREADY WORKING, TO BE COMMISSIONED

Lagos BUSINESS TIMES in English 14 Oct 80 pp 1, 32

/Text/ President Shehu Shagari will commission the ₦500m Kaduna Refinery on the 25th of this month.

According to NNPC sources, this is more ceremonial than anything else because since last July a unit of the dual-unit refinery has been on trial run.

This unit, the Fuel Process Unit, processes local gulf Excravor crude which is transported through the 606km Warri-Kaduna pipeline from the Niger Delta creek.

According to my sources, when fully operational, the unit would produce per day seven tonnes of Sulphur, 320 tonnes of Refinery fuel gas, 630 tonnes of Cooking gas from an input of about 6,690 tonnes per day.

Other products from the same input include Premium motor gasoline (2,750 tonnes), 5-Star (920 tonnes), Gas Oil (2,690 tonnes) and 1,860 tonnes of Kerosene.

The other unit, the Lube Wax/asphalt process unit, which incidentally is the real difference between this refinery and others in Warri and Port Harcourt, will not be fully operational until some time next year.

This handles paraffin-based petroleum from Venezuela or Kuwait and produce per day 2,090 tonnes of asphalt (two grades), 1,260 tonnes of fuel oil (also two grades) and others like wax and lube oil. All these will be from an approximate input of 6,890 tonnes per day.

According to reliable sources, the arrangement for the importation of this input has been concluded and when delivery starts it shall be at Excravos from where it will follow the same Kaduna pipeline route which its local sister follows.

It will be recalled that, according to planning statistics, the Kaduna refinery when fully on stream should produce per annum approximately 614,000 tonnes of dual purpose of Kerosene, 415,000 tonnes of lubricating oil, Gasoline (1.211m tonnes), 24,400 tonnes of Wax and 10,000 tonnes of liquified petroleum gas.

This is based on input projection of about 50,000 barrels per stream (working) day each of both the local and imported crude.

The refinery has been completed since April on schedule by Japan's Chiyoda Chemical and Engineering Construction Company: a performance which one analyst called a "technological feat."

IBADAN LAND TO BE DEVELOPED FOR INDUSTRY

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 22 Sep 80 p 32

[Article by Alaba Ajetunmobi]

[Text]

ABOUT 2,530 acres of land at different locations in Ibadan are being developed as industrial layouts by the Ibadan Metropolitan Planning Authority.

The areas already mapped out for these projects are Oluyole Estate Lagos Road scheme, extension to Oluyole Estate and the Iwo Road scheme.

Conducting the newly appointed members of the metropolitan authority governing board round these sites the general manager of the authority, Chief Oladosu Babatunde also revealed that the authority plans to acquire more land for that purpose.

The new chairman of the board, Mr Bolanle Akinpelu, and members of the city central motor-pack along the old Lagos-Ibadan road disclosed that the park would be opened before December.

The chairman then appealed to the state government to provide funds to the authority for its many plans, and lamented that the state government was relegating the authority to "just a local set-up"

Speaking on the recent flood in the city, while sympathising with those affected by the tragedy, Mr. Akinpelu said that it was regrettable that many landowners were not submitting their building plans for the authority's approval before embarking on building projects

Part of the problems could also be traced to the land use decree which, Mr. Akinpelu said, had stopped land developers from disclosing their lay-outs to the authority before starting to build.

He then appealed to the people to adhere strictly to the building rules and regulations of the planning authority in order to guard against a re-occurrence of the last flood disaster.

FLOOD FROM DAM COLLAPSE REPORTED CAUSING FOOD SHORTAGE

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 30 Sep 80 p 16

[Article by Sam Dimawolu]

[Text] Following catastrophic disaster in which the floods of a collapsed Ojirami Dam swept away houses, property and farm crops, feeding in the affected areas has become very difficult.

As a predominantly farming people, favourite staple foodstuffs like yams, cassava and plantain have become so scarce that prices have increased by almost 200 percent.

At Enwan, a bunch of plantain or banana which used to cost N2.50 now costs between four and six naira. Popular gari from Ojirami, whose basin had often been N11 has skyrocketed to N20. This is because the gari manufacturing village has been cut off from easy communication. A circumnavigatory journey from Ojirami now goes through Ekpe, Ekpedo, Lampese, Ibillo, Igara to Enwan, a distance which according to the traders has hiked the prices of gari.

Beans has become a hoarded commodity, the resultant effects of speculation. A measure of it which was 15K before is now 45K, while five cups of fresh maize usually 20K now cost 50K.

Unfortunately, unscrupulous people have cashed in on the situation, making brisk business. They go to Ibillo and Okpe to buy these commodities at rock-bottom price only to be sold at prohibitively high costs to the disaster-stricken inhabitants.

The dam which was 'bombed' open by its uncontrolled excessive volume of water in the early hours of August 30 caused a mass sweeping off of fowls, sheep, goats and pigs in the flood holocaust.

FURTHER INVESTMENT IN SOLAR ENERGY URGED

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 3 Oct 80 p 3

[Commentary by Emman Uduka]

[Excerpts] Considering the much mooted exhaustion of our liquid gold reserves at the turn of the century, let us be forewarned that this country will be much worse for it if we do not shake off our traditional indifference and 11th-hour awakening to situations that demand prompt attention and action.

As common sense would dictate, the time to wake up is now, to avert an imminent crippling blow on the nation after crude oil, our chief foreign exchange earner, might have dried up 20 years from now as predicted by experts.

Though the technology processes involved in obtaining oil from coal and alcohol are reportedly so complicated and expensive that we might not conveniently afford it at this stage of our technological development, this country, luckily, has the relatively cheaper and technologically easier-to-obtain alternative of solar energy to fall upon.

In many parts of the Sahel region of the continent, photovoltaic cells, which convert sunlight directly into electricity, are being used to drive what are called "Solar Pumps" which provide extra water for drought-striken villages.

A 130-watt pump produces 40 cubic metres of water a day, enough for over 1,000 people and the cultivation of a market garden.

- The boon to solar energy exploitation is the fact that photovoltaic cells have been steadily falling by about five per cent yearly over the last few years and is now below 10 dollars per "peak watt". And, if claims by experts are anything to go by, and the price of the intricate silicon-based cells continues to go down, they could bring succour to rural life in drought-striken areas.

Maintenance

Among the many blesings of solar pumps is the proven fact that they provide much cleaner water than other methods of pumping. IN addition, they require no manual labour to operate. Expect for occasional cleaning with cloth, the photo-voltaic cells themselves require no maintenance.

Nigeria stands to reap the huge benefits of solar pumps if she could borrow a leaf from nearby Mali by urgently undertaking the exploitation of solar energy for possible solution of her water scarcity problems, especially in the Northern states, where water shortage is more acute, while sunlight — the major raw material for producing solar energy — is more assured.

It is in these areas that solar pumps should be installed to bring about a marriage of the sun and water. The very sun that dried up surface water in these areas would be harnessed to pump out underground water, and this would be the "marriage of the century."

Recently, Governor Shehu Kangiwa of Sokoto State was lamenting that water scarcity was his state's public enemy number one, which had consumed a large chunk of revenue and yet is far from being solved. And Governor Abubakar Tatari Ali of Bauchi State, is still grappling with the uphill task of giving his people a "new baby" in the form of badly needed water.

Priority

Similar situation exists in more than half the states of the Federation. The problem could be conveniently solved with the setting up of solar pumps to tap underground water resources for the affected areas. And this would considerably save the billions of naira being spent on dam here and there.

The Federal Government should therefore as a matter of priority embark on establishment of a Solar Energy Board to undertake the exploitation of the areas hit by acute water scarcity.

It is indeed welcome news that the Project Development Institute (PRODA) at Enugu, which is undertaking research into industrial projects through the use of local raw materials and indigenous manpower, has already harnessed solar energy for drying fish, gari, maize and other perishable foodstuffs for preservation purposes.

This splendid innovation has the blessing of minimising waste of perishable food items resulting from inadequate preservation methods as well as conserving fuel used in generating electricity for this and other purposes.

COUNTRY NOW SAID PRODUCING OWN FERTILIZER

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 3 Oct 80 p 24

[Text]

NIGERIA is now producing 40,000 tons of fertilizer yearly in a bid to trasform the green revolution programme into practical reality.

This was anounced in Jos by the Chairman of the Federal Government Fertilizer Company in Kaduna, Alhaji Buba Ahmed, during a television programme, "Face the Press".

Alhaji Ahmed said the aim of the fertilizer industry was not only to reinstate agriculture to its economic pre-eminent status before the advent of oil but also to save the heavy drain of foreign exchange in the importation of fertilizer.

Every year, he said, the country used to buy well over 500,000 tons of fertilizer from foreign countries.

"This figure is so gigantic that the 40,000 tons we produce in Kaduna only accounts for 12 or 14 percent of the country's need," he said.

He said, the factory was producing only one type of fertilizer the Single Super or (SSP).

Alhaji Ahmed said that in order to reduce the importation of this particular type of fertilizer, the factory would step up its production capacity during the next planting season to between 72,000 to 75,000 tons per year.

He said it was also the plan of the factory to produce five other types of fertilizer so as to stop completely the importation of all types of fertilizers, and the drain on the country's foreign exchange.

Speaking on the education of farmers on the application of fertilizers, Alhaji Ahmed said that yearly seminars were always held at the Ahmadu Bello University to teach farmers and agricultural officers on how to use the chemical.

On the complaint that the chemical often [harms] crops, he said this could only happen if it was applied in excess.

NIGERLINE (UK) SHIPPING LINE TO BE CLOSED DOWN

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 9 Oct 80 p 32

[Text]

LIVERPOOL-BASED subsidiary company of the Nigerian National Shipping Line (NNSL)—Nigerline (UK) Limited, is to be closed down with effect from next December 31.

In its place, the NNSL will appoint agents who will canvas for cargoes for the company.

This was announced in Lagos yesterday by the Minister of State in the Ministry of Transport, Malam Garba Wushishi on his return from a two-week duty tour of the United Kingdom, Germany and France.

The minister went on the tour to assess the major problems and constraints mitigating against the efforts of the National Freight Company (NFC) and NNSL from achieving higher level of efficiency, effectiveness, productivity and profitability in spite of the Federal Government's heavy investments in the two companies.

Malam Wushishi declared: "The Nigerline (UK) Limited, was established in April, 1972 in accordance with the British laws and regulations and was to provide highly technical services for the NNSL.

"Such services," he went on, "include arranging for dry-docking of the NNSL's ships, procuring spare parts, liaising with Lloyds, as well as preparing specifications for types of repairs to be carried out on ships."

This subsidiary company, the minister further disclosed, earned some foreign exchange which was hardly ploughed back to Nigeria. The earning was virtually retained abroad under the pretext that it was being disbursed on high operational expenses from time to time, he stated.

He said the company made only a marginal profit of about ₦300,000 in the first half of 1979, compared with its competitor, Elder Dempster which in same sea trade route made a profit of about ₦25,000,000 within the same period.

ONDO STATE REPORTS ON FOOD DISTRIBUTION, COOPERATIVES

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 14 Oct 80 pp 16, 17

They are at Idanre — Alade junction, Okeluse, Ido-Ekiti, Idoani, Igbokola, Efon, Aiyede, Ijero, Agbado, Otun-Ekiti, Ilawe-Ekiti, Ikare and Iwaro-Oka.

Apart from this, the state government has transferred the activities of the bulk purchase unit with 10 out posts located all over the state to the state Investment Corporation.

The state governor, Chief Adekunle Ajasin, made this known in his broadcast to the people of the state on the eve of this year's independence anniversary celebrations.

In pursuance of the state government's policy of spreading development and achieving wider market coverage throughout the state, Chief Ajasin informed his people that about 110 sub-distributors have been appointed during the year.

Besides, he continued, the state's Investment Corporation has successfully secured distributorship of four major consumer goods namely soft drinks from Union Beverages Limited, Ibadan; beer from International Breweries, Ilesha and Standard Breweries, Ibadan; asbestors cement products and PVC pipes from Asbestors Cement Company Ltd, Ikeja and Burhaam Cement from West African Portland Company Ltd, Lagos.

On co-operative activities in the state during the past one year, the governor revealed that 96 new cooperative societies were formed and registered.

To continue to encourage this trend, Chief Ajasin said, the state government guaranteed a loan of ₦6 million from the Nigerian Agricultural and Co-operative Bank for the state's Central Financing Society Limited for on — lending to cocoa and palm kernel produce marketing societies in the state, while the Co-operative Bank also made a total loan of ₦290,000 to the various co-operative secondary organisations.

KADUNA NOW REPORTED HARD HIT BY PRICES

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 14 Oct 80 pp 16, 17

[Article by Danjuma Adams]

[Text]

THE crippling highly-feared economic inflation currently plagueing some parts of the country has finally caught up with the common man in Kaduna.

Prices of basic food commodities, ranging from rice, beans, gari yam tubers, vegetables and palm oil products rose between 25 and 40 per cent.

And if some economic strategies are not implemented quickly enough there would soon be many more empty stomaches roaming the streets from dawn to dusk in search of food.

An investigation conducted by the Daily Times showed that rice, the basic food item for the community, has recorded a tremendous increase in price.

An average sized bowl, 'mudu' or 'adana', of rice and beans which sold at ₦1.50k and 60k respectively went up to ₦2 and ₦1.50k at the Central, Kakuri and Kawo markets last week.

And a bag of rice, beans and gari sold at ₦80, ₦30 and ₦40 respectively a forthnight ago had gone up to N90, N60 and N40 in all the major markets.

The inquiry further revealed that the price of an imported Uncle Ben's rice has also risen from N50 to N95 per bag.

Other commodities not left out of the new price trend include yam, as an average yam tuber now costs N3 or N3.50k depending on the buyer's ability to bargain.

And as at the weekend, prices for groundnut oil and palm oil which was sold at ₦4 flat rate rose steeply to ₦6.50k per gallon.

A frustrated-looking mother of three who simply called herself Amina disclosed that she has been forced to break the chain of the normal three square meals a day to two for members of her family. She consoled herself, however by saying that: "I'm not the only one, mind you. Hundreds of others also.

GOVERNOR: BOUNDARY CHANGE INTENDED TO IMPOVERISH IMO

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 15 Oct 80 p 24

[Text]

GOVERNOR Sam Mbakwe of Imo State has accused the Nasir Boundary Adjustment Commission of calculated attempts to impoverish a section of the country.

He said although Mr. Justice Mohammed Nasir had decided to use the Imo River as boundary which according to the Governor could have been "scientific and rational", he did not stick to that decision.

Speaking to newsmen in Enugu at the weekend as a special guest at the 20th anniversary of the Anambra Broadcasting Corporation (ABC) previously the Eastern Nigeria Broadcasting Service (ENBS), Governor Mbakwe lamented that Mr. Justice Nasir "simply passed over oil-producing villages in Imo State to the Rivers State".

He said that during the boundary adjustment exercise, he, as the lawyer of the people who wished to remain in Imo State, knew that only a few individuals of Ukwa division wished to go over to the Rivers State. But the Nasir Commission, "listening to voices behind the scene", pushed over all the unwilling 17 villages out of Imo State.

Governor Mbakwe lamented that the Nasir Commission without the people's demand moved Obigbo (meaning the heart of Igboland) which has 17 oil wells to the Rivers State.

Frustration

The Governor further explained that if Mr. Justice Nasir's Commission had strictly used the Imo River as the state boundary, Eberi Omuma which is oil-rich should have remained in Imo State.

Chief Mbakwe alleged that the Nasir Commission placed Eberi Omuma and the opposite parts of the river to Rivers State in order to frustrate Imo State.

He said he was informed that the boundary adjustment was a punitive action for the active role Imo State people played during the civil war.

MONEY PAID FOR STATES TO MAINTAIN FEDERAL ROADS

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 16 Oct 80 p 2

[Text]

THE Federal Government has paid a total sum of N44.46 million this year to 18 state governments for the maintenance of federal roads in their areas.

This was revealed yesterday in Lagos by the Minister of Works, Mr. Victor Igwe Masi, at a press conference.

The Minister said no money was allocated to Lagos State because the Minister of Works has facilities for a direct maintenance of the relevant roads in the state.

He, however, regretted that the idea of state ministries of works maintaining federal roads on behalf of Federal Government had "not worked satisfactorily."

Mr. Masi added that as a result, the Federal Ministry of Works had now embarked on a method of maintaining these roads by contractors because it had been found satisfactory in many other countries.

The Minister added that his ministry had also selected some federal roads to be maintained by contract this year.

He declared: "The arrangement will then be extended from year to year until it covers all the Federal road networks. Until this is done, however, the state ministries of works will continue to maintain those roads which have not been given out to contractors."

A breakdown of the N44.46 million, which was given to newsmen yesterday, showed that Anambra State got N2.444m; Bendel State, N2.068m; Benue State, N2.398m and Borno State got N3.485m.

Cross River got N2.167m; Gongola N3.902m; Imo, N1.900m; Kaduna N2.451m; Kano, N2.396m; Kwara, N2.685m; Niger, N2.976m; Ogun, N2.115m and Ondo, N1.922m.

Oyo State was allocated N2.384m; Plateau N2.650m; Rivers, N1.830m, and Sokoto N2.728m.

OIL PALM BOOST--The Nigerian Institute for Oil Palm Research has acquired 4,000 hectres of land to boost oil palm production. The director of the Institute, Dr. B.E. Onochie, said that 20 hectres have already been devoted to oil palm cultivation. He was speaking at the commissioning of the newly established ₦2.5 million oil mill at NIFOR. He said that the decision to establish the mill was taken as a result of the frequent breakdown of the former mill which had caused a great reduction in the institure's output. Dr. Onochie said the new semi-automatic mill which would depend on electricity for power could be expanded to double its capacity of processing 12 tons of fresh fruit bunches (ffb) a day. He said that when fully operational, the mill could process about 120 tons of FFB and produce between 16 and 20 metric tons of palm oil daily and an output of 3 tons of palm kernels. Dr. Onochie said that the mill would produce top quality ready-for-the-market oil with low free fatty acids and low moisture contents containing very little impurities. /Text/ /Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 9 Oct 80 p 24/

The chairman of the board of directors of Associated Ores Mining Company Limited, Dr. Alex Fom made this declaration at Itakpe hill site in Okehi Local Government Area of Kwara State at the weekend. Speaking to the Daily Times in an interview on mine operations at Itakpe near Okene, Dr. Fom said the iron products of his company were the most basic raw materials needed for steel production in the country. According to him, the most urgent requirements of the company are electrification and adequate water supply to the Itakpe Iron Ore Project. Another problem which the Federal Government has been called upon to tackle immediately is the provision of accomodation for workers of the mine. Dr. Fom is of the opinion that the Federal Housing Authority should as a matter of urgency develop a mining township close to Eika village in the outskirts of Itakpe hill. President Shehu Shagari had paid his maiden visit to the Nigerian Steel Development Project at Ajaokuta and promised that the steel company would produce its first products by 1983. GOOD HARVEST EXPECTED--The rainfall analysis up to August this year showed that there will be a good agricultural yield this year. According to the latest release from the Meteorological Department, rainfall in August recorded below normal over most parts of the country especially in the South-west and Central part of the country. During the first and second decades, that is, 1st-10th and 11th-21st August, rainfall was substantially below average in Kaduna, Jos, Bauchi, Lagos, Warri, Owerri and Ogojo. In the third decade, that is, 21st-31st, rainfall was still below normal. But rain improved substantially in many areas and was above normal mainly in the extreme north. The relative humidity and sunshine were normal. This thus gave chance for a good harvest. The yields of cereals is expected to be above average in the north. In the South, the good spatial distribution of rain and sunshine will result in higher yields of tree and food crops. Generally, the low rainfall notwithstanding, the hours of bright sunshine alternates favourably with wet-spells. And since relative humidity was below average, cloud-cover diminished substantially. Thus the weather condition is favourable for yams, cassava and tree crops production. /Excerpt/ /Lagos BUSINESS TIMES in English 14 Oct 80 p 32/

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT GOING INTO SECOND PHASE

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 6 Oct 80 pp 1, 3

[Article by Cherif Elvalide Seye: "Decisive Leap of Senegalese Industry"]

[Text] Senegalese industry is about to enter a new phase of its existence, providing it with a decisive boost on which our future will depend.

The new SEIB [expansion unknown] oil works in Diourbel will go into operation in January. It cost 8 billion CFA francs and will have a grinding capacity of 200,000 tons of peanuts a year. The month of January 1981 will also see the start of construction work on Senegal's Chemical Industries (ICS), an undertaking that will last 34 months. Nor is this a mere coincidence. The two projects are actually the first in a new orientation of Senegal's industrial policy, that of industrial processing plants.

The new policy takes the place of that of making substitutes for imports. The ICS, which will require investments of 54 billion CFA francs, will make it possible to process in Taiba itself 650,000 of the 1.5 million tons of phosphates extracted every year. Phosphoric and sulfuric acid will be produced in Taiba.

In addition to the SEIB and the Senegalese Chemical Industries, this policy of developing and processing our agricultural or mining resources also includes development of the East Senegal iron mines, expansion of SOCOCIM [West African Cement Company] and industrial mining of marble in East Senegal. In the long run, Senegal will depend less and less on its agriculture which, because of the drought, has obviously become too susceptible to climatic contingencies.

After Dakar-Marine, now operational, it is the second phase of the second generation of Senegalese industry that will get underway in January, when construction of the Senegalese Chemical Industries begins. This project, costing a total of 54 billion CFA francs, should enable Senegal to process phosphate into phosphoric and sulfuric acid and in a second phase, to transform acids into fertilizer.

Two plants are going to be set up right in Taiba. They will process 650,000 tons of the 1.5 million tons of phosphate extracted in Senegal every year. The project also provides for expansion of the Industrial Fertilizer Company of Senegal (SIES), which will then be able to make phosphate fertilizers from acid produced in Taiba.

At the present time, the project is settled; everything is ready. The necessary commitments have been made by both partners and sources of financing. Senegal's partners in the ICS project are India (20 percent), the Ivory Coast (10 percent), and the Islamic Development Bank. Senegal holds 25 percent of the shares. There are no marketing problems for the project because India and the Ivory Coast have both pledged to import the acid and fertilizer not used by Senegal and not sold and will do so at prices already guaranteed.

The ICS will make it possible to give jobs to 350 persons and recover phosphate contained in the schlamms (rock after phosphate has been extracted).

The first project within the framework of the policy of industrial processing plants, the Chemical Industries of Senegal illustrate the concerns giving rise to the policy. A moderately industrialized country (30 percent of the GNP provided by industry) -- the figure for the Ivory Coast is 13 percent, for example -- Senegal is nevertheless strongly dependent on agriculture because peanuts provide the major portion of all export receipts and because industry itself is partly based on it with the oil works. In addition, other industries -- textiles, for example -- rely heavily on domestic demand, which is declining sharply with the drop in income of an agricultural rural world. It therefore becomes necessary to rely as little as possible on agriculture, which has become very precarious because of the drought, which is apparently here to stay. Given the country's potentialities, it quite naturally turns to industry. There remains only the question of which type of industry.

MIFERSO

The first generation of Senegalese industry was devoted to making substitutes for imports. Should that path have been continued? It was decided to be less negative and as a result, the second generation of Senegalese industry will involve industrial processing plants. Clearly, it is a matter of developing our resources, whether they be mining or agriculture.

In the agricultural realm, one has the new SEIB plant in Diourbel, costing 8 billion CFA francs. It has the capacity to grind 200,000 tons of peanuts annually. Start-up is planned for January 1981.

The major project that could revolutionize an entire region and the economy of a country is MIFERSO [East Senegal Iron Mining Company], hwoever. It is a vast undertaking involving substantial means. The total cost of the project is an estimated 208.5 billion CFA francs. Getting the money together is not easy, but the quality of the metal and the country's situation seem to have won the support of potential European and Japanese importers. Studies show that 12 million tons of iron will be avilable over 20 years. One must add another 10 years when dams on the Senegal River permit the working of magnetic ore.

Oil

In addition to its short distance to the European market, the Senegalese project has the advantage of placing 12 million tons on the market starting in 1987, when a world production deficit of iron on the order of 50 to 70 million tons is predicted. There is such great interest that European iron and steel industries and the World Bank have stated that they are willing to aid the project. Strip mining techniques will be used but transport problems will have to be solved. Two possibilities exist: building a new railroad line from the mines to the sea or building a section from the mines to the existing line and strengthen the latter. Whatever the case, some 118 billion will be needed for the railroad. A port terminal costing on the order of 32 billion will also be needed. All these undertakings will provide 3,650 new jobs.

Oil is naturally taken into consideration in this policy of processing plants. Five companies now have research permits in Senegal. Interesting signs have been discovered in Casamance but further north also. Moreover, every cloud has a silver lining and the higher price of oil has made the heavy oil deposit discovered long ago off the coast of Casamance profitable. Technical problems linked to its development are apparently being solved.

Also in connection with oil, the African Refining Company is being expanded and its capacity will go from 900,000 to 1.2 million tons. This expansion will enable the company to process other types of oil than the Iraqi, Algerian and Nigerian light crudes.

American companies are also reportedly interested in setting up refineries in Senegal. The only point to be solved is the reliability of supplies of crude.

Cement is naturally included in the plans. Does Senegal not have the indispensable clays and limestone? Rather than build a new cement works, it was preferred to expand the SOCOCIM plant. SOCOCIM's annual production is nearly equivalent to needs: 375,000 to 400,000 tons. When there is a construction boom and because of the middlemen, there is tension on the market from time to time and more must therefore be produced. But a new plant would not be functional until 1985-1987. It would cost 18 billion CFA francs and would result in a 25-percnet increase in the base price of cement, while leaving the problem of rehabilitation of SOCOCIM untouched. It was therefore preferred to rebuild and expand SOCOCIM at a cost of 13.8 billion CFA francs. By 1982, it will be able to produce 840,000 tons of clinker (a product halfway between clay, limestone and cement) annually. Without increasing the cost price, the expansion of SOCOCIM will therefore make it possible to meet needs and open up prospects for the establishment of cement works in the regions using clinker made by SOCOCIM.

In the same branch of activities, one should not the establishment of the marble quarrying company in East Senegal. In 2 to 3 years, industrial-scale operations should be possible. After playing the poor cousin role for so long, East Senegal is now becoming the backbone of Senegalese industrial development. In some 6 months, the agreement concerning studies to determine profitability will be signed.

PAI CELEBRATES 23D ANNIVERSARY

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 6 Oct 80 p 3

[Text] (APS)--The African Independence Party (PAI) commemorated the 23d anniversary of its founding yesterday.

The celebration took place at the Vox de Rufisque Cinema, decorated in red and black, the colors of the PAI, and displaying portraits of Marx, Lenin, Engels and Stalin and slogans preaching African unity and the unity of Senegalese "patriots."

The choice of Rufisque was not any accident. The PAI actually wished to render homage to its old militants from the city, including Amadou Makhtar Mbaye, who recently disappeared and in honor of whose memory a minute of silence was observed.

The celebration, which was a time for remembering, was marked by the address delivered by Mahjmout Diop, president of the PAI, on the political situation and on the problem of unity of Senegalese Marxists.

What should above all be remembered about the address was the appeal launched on behalf of the Bok Sa Rew Front, even if the word was not pronounced.

According to Diop, Africa is going through a difficult time in a difficult and divided world which puts the rich on one side and deprived people on the other.

For the president of the PAI, one cannot remain on both sides and it is time to choose.

Diop then called attention to what he called the profound crisis affecting Senegal, a crisis which, if one is not careful, could lead to ruin, as one can observe all around us. He questioned the orientations of 20 years of government by the Socialist Party.

Returning to his original idea, Diop recalled the different mergers of political parties which Senegal has had. For Diop, there is only one alternative for bringing Senegal out of the impasse: scientific socialism.

The president of the PAI also denounced what he called the recovery of certain historic figures of Senegal by political parties, particularly of Al Boury Ndiaye by the underground PAI, of Lat Dior by the Socialist Party and of Lamine Senghor. According to its president, only the PAI has denounced the monopolization of government information media by the Socialist Party.

EFFECT OF IRAQI-IRANIAN WAR ON PETROLEUM STOCKS NOTED

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 2 Oct 80 p 3

[Article by Ibrahima Fall: "Petroleum: Stocks Assures Until December"]

> [Text] The Iraqi-Iranian war tends toward deflagration. The oil wells are ablaze in Abadan and in the other cities bordering on the theater of operations. A concerned West worries about the assurance of its supplies of crude. Actually, the anxiety generated by the explosion of violence in the Gulf does not concern only the West. When we realize that we depend on Iraq for 60 percent of our oil supplies, we can only ask ourselves about the negative effects the crisis can have on our supplies of crude.

For Mr Ousmane Fall, general director of the African Refining Company (SAR), the case is not a pressing one. Senegal has stockpiled enough crude to last 30 days and enough finished products derived from petroleum to last an average of 40 days. According to Mr Fall, though we still cannot determine the outcome of the crisis, "we will not have any problems with supplies until the end of the year." The director of SAR says that "we should receive four shipments of crude of 50,000 tons each."

However, of these four shipments, the one coming from Iraq will surely be missing because of the conflict. Moreover, Iraq has requested its cancellation due to the halting of its shipment of crude. The SAR general director specifies nevertheless that "we are searching for a replacement shipload" to compensate for the Iraqi crude. With the crisis, an option for African and North Sea oil has been exercised. Thus, two shipments will arrive from the North Sea. That oil is equivalent to "Algerian" oil from the point of view of transportation. It sells for $36.50 per barrel. If, despite the efforts deployed, the conflict gains ground, embraces the Gulf and seriously mortgages the supply of oil, Mr Fall points out that "we will really turn toward Nigeria, Algeria (Saharan crude) and the North Sea."

Even if Iraq's oil is less expensive, he estimates that the cost price will be offset by the difference in freight. In fact, a shipment of crude coming from Iraq takes 1 month to reach our coasts while only 6 days are needed to bring the same load from Algeria to Senegal.

This year our country will consume 170,000 tons of finished products and 800,000 tons of crude oil. Of this amount, 40,000 tons of finished products are sold to Mauritania and an equal amount to Mali, a continental country which supplies itself mainly from Senegal and the Ivory Coast. Mauritania has a refinery, but it is not yet in operation. Our petroleum bill becomes all the more exorbitant (50 billions) when we buy light crude oil, more expensive than sulphurous petroleum. Mr Ousmane Fall states that "the SAR still does not have the necessary installations to be able to treat sulphurous crude," which is less costly.

Moreover, there is a project for expanding the refinery which would increase its capacity from 900,000 tons (nominal capacity) to 1.2 million tons. The project has not been carried out yet because of financial difficulties. Its cost runs up to 14 billion CFA francs.

Despite the desperate calls for protecting the Strait of Hormuz through which the giant oil tankers pass, it is obvious that western countries are less threatened than those of the Third World. While the latter are banking approximately on a 30-day stockpile, the countries of Europe and the United States had at the beginning of September some 120-days-worth of oil in storage, that is, some 430 to 500 million tons of oil. This amount equals roughly Saudi Arabia's annual output.

Thus it can be said that the West has the time to see it coming and to adjust according to the needs. Before the Iraqi-Iranian war, the total surplus output of crude was 2 million barrels, that is 100 million tons. If the conflict lasts, there is a risk that oil supplies will be seriously disrupted, all the more so because the war is looking both like a border war and an economic war aimed above all at attacking the foundation upon which rests the prosperity of these countries of sulphurous sand: black gold.

The action which is expected to begin from Lagos State will spread to the other parts of the Federation. The secretariat of the Footwear, Leather and Rubber Products Workers Union has already informed the employers concerned and the Ministry of Labour of the impending action. In a letter to the employers and the ministry, the union stated that the seven-day ultimatum it gave to the employers within which to meet the workers' demand had expired without any positive action from the employers association. The letter warned that the workers should not be blamed for the consequences of the employers recalcitrant attitude to their demands.

The union is also demanding that all the workers in Michelin who were locked out in July be paid their salaries in full with effect from August. Meanwhile, reports reaching the Daily Times Labour Desk say that the 160 workers of the headquarters of Michelin in Port Harcourt who were detained by the police after an industrial action had been allowed to go back to work. NATIONAL CENSUS URGED--The Federal Government has been urged to carry out a national census in the country. The call was made in Enugu by a federal legislator, Alhaji Z. Momodu, UPN member for Etsako constituency in Bendel State. The legislator warned that the consequences of planning for the 5th National Development Plan period without a reliable statistics of the people would be disastrous for the economy of the country. Alhaji Momodu pointed out that most of the concluded development plans in the country were based on the 1963 controversial census which, he noted, was "itself unreliable and undependable." The UPN legislator blamed the present socio-economic ills of the country on what he described as "planning for tomorrow on wrong statistics of today." "It is rather shameful and disgraceful that the Giant of Africa and the largest and most populous black nation in the world is not sure how many millions of people are in the country," Alhaji Momodu declared. /Emeka Nwabufoe/ /Excerpt/ /Enugu DAILY STAR in English 23 Sep 80 p 1/

POLISH FIRM CRITICIZED--The Polish firm "KOPEX," now on contract service for the mechanisation of the Nigerian Coal production has been enjoined to register visible sign of competence in their production so as to boost the economy and enjoy the continuous patronage of the federal government. In an exclusive interview with the DAILY STAR, the Administrator of Nigerian Coal Corporation, Mr. A.O. Udemah said that this exhortation was imperative in view of the fact that no noticeable improvement in the mechanisation and production capacity had been observed since the arrival of the expatriate mining engineers. Mr Udemah noted with dismay that prior to the arrival of the Polish experts the corporation had possessed an annual production record of 200,800 tons even when it employed the traditional method of mining. The Coal boss stressed that the purpose of mechanisation was to enable the corporation reach a production capacity of about 650,000 tons annually but regretted that today and since the Kopex took over, production has drastically reduced--thus defeating the purpose for which they were contracted. However, Mr Udemah hoped that with the arrival recently of 10 more experts from Poland to assist the other 17 men in operations and reconstruction of damaged machines in the mines, the desired objective of full mechanisation and increased productivity may be achieved. /Cyprian Madu/ /Text/ /Enugu DAILY STAR in English 23 Sep 80 p 3/

KAUNDA PRAISED AS MAN OF PRINCIPLE

Lusaka ZAMBIA DAILY MAIL in English 16 Oct 80 p 4

[Editorial]

[Text]

GOD MADE all the people in his own image and gave them everything that they needed to make them true human beings. He gave them life, love and intelligence which transcends all the other creatures created by him.

In addition, he sent his only Son to die for us and save us from all our sins. For all these, all creatures need to be truly grateful.

But God dislikes selfishness or refusal to share knowledge with others. Hence, the few people who have dedicated their life to the service of God are finding the Gospel of his love.

This analogy could apply to many other things which pertain to our life and activities. If we look around, we are bound to find one thing that teaches us what God wants us to do in life.

The emergency of politics is a result of man's desire to lead a free life, and every person, old and young, civilian or military officer, understands what freedom means to man.

It is for this reason that man is sometimes aptly described as a political animal, and he must be. But some people try to pretend that this is not true. The colonial authorities felt so, or it was sheer pretence.

President Kaunda has never forgotten this deliberate blindness to the truth by human beings when they want to deny others human rights.

Each time the President talks about the need for the police and the army to be brought into the political machinery, he often quotes the fears one colonial officer expressed about allowing these officers to take part in politics.

The man said President Kaunda was creating serious problems for himself by trying to politicise every Zambian, particularly the police and the army.

But the President had a fitting answer for him which cut him to his right size. He told him that it was much better for him to lead an enlightened society than a group of ignorant people.

And true to his word, the President has never deviated from this policy. He has induced politics into the police and the army and the nation has no problem getting them to appreciate and understand why they should defend the nation or a certain policy.

He reiterated his views when he swore in the new army commander of the Zambia Army, Lieutenant General Malimba Masheke and other officers.

It is a principle which has contributed to our stability and solidness as a nation. Politically, the President knows that he is not talking above the heads of anybody.

All Zambians understand the meaning of every word he uses when he talks about the engulfing chaos that would result from an unstable political situation.

Zambia should continue to be a symbol of stability and this is only possible if everybody remains loyal to the nation.

REPORTAGE ON SWEARING-IN OF NEW MILITARY LEADERS

'Politicize Army' President Urges

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 15 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

PRESIDENT Kaunda yesterday lashed out at Western countries and South Africa in particular for formenting stories about coups in Zambia.

He praised the armed forces for their patriotism and gallantry in the face of "grave and serious difficulties" especially during the Zimbabwean liberation war.

"Some of our friends in Western capitalist countries like to say much about Zambia and tell others not to listen to us. They have always seen a coup in Zambia since independence," he said.

The President was speaking at State House when he swore in newly appointed Commander of the Zambia Army, Lieutenant General Malimba Masheke, his deputy and Chief of Staff, Brigadier-General Christopher Tembo, and Zambia National Service Commandant, Brigadier-General Thomas Fara.

The three men were among senior army officers who were promoted by President Kaunda on October 9 in a major shake-up of the defence forces in which former commander lieutenant-General Benjamin Mibenge was posted to the diplomatic service.

Arrested

Major-General Christopher Kabwe who was appointed commander of the Zambia Air Force was not at the swearing-in ceremony as he was arrested two days after his promotion in connection with suspected misconduct. He is being held at Lusaka Central prison together with two other senior army officers.

During the ceremony, attended by Prime Minister Mr Daniel Lisulo, and Secretary of State for Defence and Security, Mr Grey Zulu, Dr Kaunda also swore in former minister of local government and housing, Mr Josephat Siyomunji as an ambassador to a country yet to be named and an under secretary at Freedom House, Mr Nelson Nswana.

Dr Kaunda wondered from where Western countries and South Africa got their stories about coups in Zambia.

"At one time they said Kaunda was chased around the rooftop of State House. We let them say these things because we accept all human beings as God's people.

"How many times has South African radio said there is a coup in Zambia?" President Kaunda asked.

He told the three defence chiefs to mount a vigorous political education campaign to politicise the army, because without this, the defence forces could become a mercenary force.

Dr Kaunda told General Masheke he had been placed in God's hands for guidance.

The President told General Tembo to serve Zambia and his fellow men to the best of his ability, adding that he had appointed him "with real joy."

He directed the new ZNS commandant, General Fara, to step up food production not only among ZNS cadres but the nation as a whole.

Meanwhile, President Kaunda last night expressed satisfaction at the efforts Iraq was making to end the current war between itself and Iran.

Dr Kaunda said the war between the two Middle East neighbours was unfortunate and expressed the hope that the two nations would find a peaceful solution to their conflict.

The President said this when Iraq Minister of State Mr Hashem Anrawi paid a call on him at State House.

Dr Kaunda said Iraq should continue to pursue its peaceful intiative towards Iran although these efforts had not yielded results.

"That war must end but both parties must be prepared to talk to end the war," the President said.

And President Kaunda has said aid from rich to poor countries such as Zambia can help all mankind.

He was speaking at a luncheon he hosted in honour of a six-man Canadian delegation led by International Trade Minister of State, Mr Horst Schmid, at State House in Lusaka yesterday.

● President Kaunda has sent a message of congratulations to Zaire President Mobutu Sese Seko, on his 50th birthday.

In his message, Dr Kaunda wished his counterpart good health and strength to continue leading the people of Zaire.

He hoped that relations between the two countries would continue to flourish.

Army Lacks Political Education

Lusaka ZAMBIA DAILY MAIL in English 15 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

AN ARMY which lacks political education is a mercenary army and can easily respond to the highest bidder and plunge the country into chaos, President Kaunda warned yesterday.

He therefore, charged new commander of Zambia Army, Lieutenant General Malimba Masheke and his deputy and chief of staff, Major-General Christian Tembo with the duty of instilling proper political education among the soldiers.

He added: "I know that there will be a lot of comments from Western countries, I advise you not to listen to them, they are the same people who carried reports that I was chased by the army on the rooftops of State House in an attempted coup. They have been seeing a coup in Zambia since 1964 when we became independent and how many times has Radio South Africa reported that there has been a coup in Zambia?"

Dr Kaunda was speaking at State House, when he swore-in former Minister of Local Government and Housing, Mr Josephat Siyomunji as ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary at Foreign Affairs Ministry. Mr Siyomunji lost his Sesheke seat in the last general elections.

Others sworn-in were Gen. Masheke, Maj.-Gen. Tembo, Mr Nason Nswana as under-secretary at Cabinet and Brigadier-General Thom Fara as Commandant of the Zambia National Service.

President Kaunda, who referred to the three army officers as Mal, Chris and Thom, respectively, also charged them with the duty of making the army loyal to the system and people of Zambia.

"Once we do this, we can never go wrong," Dr Kaunda said.

"An army that is working for the interests of the people and country can never fail. It will always fight for the people and country," he said.

Dr Kaunda paid tribute to the former ZNDF commander, Lt. General Benjamin Mibenge who he has re-assigned to the foreign service, for having worked extremely hard in the army in spite of the difficulties in supplies and weaponry.

"Mibenge and you comrades did your best even when we were attacked by enemies with their superior weapons," the President recalled.

He emphasised that in the same way that no man can succeed if he worked in isolation, no nation can succeed without co-operation from other countries.

He, therefore, asked Mr Siyomunji to explain Zambia's policy abroad, adding: "Tell them that we in Zambia are hankering for truth and genuine peace when you go out of Zambia to serve."

He told Mr Siyomunji: "We have been together for a long time now, and it is with a sense of pride that I am recalling you back to the ministry."

VISIT OF IRAQI OFFICIAL REPORTED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 16 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

IRAQI government has dispatched envoys to friendly countries to brief them on the war and to drum up support for its claims over land and sea rights acquired by the late Shah of Iran.

This was announced in Lusaka yesterday by Iraq's roving envoy to Africa, Mr Hashim Anrawi, who is the minister of State in the Office of the President. He said his government had felt it necessary to brief friends about the Gulf war.

He told a Press conference held at the Iraqi embassy in Mulungushi village that his country would go for the last Iranian, if necessary to regain its full sovereignty over the Shatt al Arab waterway dividing the two countries which the envoy said was taken away from Iraq by the Shah's regime.

"There is no question of withdrawing our troops from occupied Iranian land, this can only happen if Iran guaranteed that it will respect our rights to the land and sea it grabbed during the previous regime," Mr Anrawi declared.

The envoy denied that his country started the war and charged that it was Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's regime that had pushed his country too far and had to react to provocations and hostilities which the Shah regime started.

"After the Shah was overthrown, we thought we could work together with the new rulers and even went to the extent of supporting the revolution.

"We hoped that Khomeini would enter into negotiations with us over Shatt al Arab waterway and other land taken from us by the late Shah with a view of handing them back to us, but instead the new regime continued to support acts of sabotage in our country," he said.

The crunch came when Iran started bombing Iraqi border areas and therefore, he said his government had no choice but to declare war and it was determined to go for the last Iranian.

The Iraqi envoy added that his government had a clear reason and long experience with Iranians. They are not people to trust — and there is no way Iraqi troops can withdraw from Iranian territory until there is a change in the Ayatollah's regime.

"We are not interested in any centimetres of the Iranian land, all we want is our waterway and territory. If the Iranians can guarantee this, then we will withdraw our troops from their territory," he said.

He said his country had enough weapons and had a 'friendship and cooperation treaty' with the Soviet Union under which it could ask for more arms if the need arose.

Mr Anrawi delivered a personal message from President Saddaam Hussein to President Kaunda on Tuesday.

The Iraqi envoy has so far been to Mali and Senegal. From here he will go to Mozambique, Kenya, Malagasy, Tanzania and Nigeria.

Reports from Baghdad said Iraqi and Iranian forces were reported locked in combat for key oil centres yesterday said Zana as diplomatic efforts began to try to end the 24-day-old war.

Iranian fighter-bombers hit Baghdad for the second day running and raided targets in central, southern and northern Iraq.

Reports from the southern front said fighting continued for the key Iranian oil centres of Abadan, Ahwaz and Dezful. Zana/Reuter.

ZCTU CHAIRMAN CRITICIZES NDOLA GOVERNOR

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 14 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

THE Party and Government programme for the youth is to educate and train them with a view to giving them employment and not to engage them in acts of arson and plunder.

Chairman of the Zambia Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) Mr Frederick Chiluba said this in Ndola yesterday when he reacted to a statement by Ndola governor Mr Alexander Kamalondo that he had put the youth in the district on the alert to deal with any unionist trying to discredit the Party and its Government.

Mr Chiluba said it was not the intention of the ZCTU to discredit the Party and its Government.

"Threats to beat up people added substance to fears and concern that unless people themselves elect their own leaders even at local government level, the politicians of [redacted] vindictiveness which we are reading about now would set the clock back in the country's political development," Mr Chiluba said.

He said passion and appetite would supercede reason and when reason failed, like it had in this case, these threats would continue to rule. "As far as I am concerned, there is no need to engage our youth in crime because we already have enough on our hands," he added.

He said the ZCTU had the right to make observations about what was going on in the country, and if you were in a big family, there must be a system of checking mistakes.

"There must be someone within the family to point out that this and that is not going the way it should."

He said Mr Kamalondo did not reach congress level of leadership and doubted his success in the Mine Workers Union of Zambia.

"This might be the reason for his ignorance about what the ZCTU could do."

He said rule two article(n) of the ZCTU constitution which is ratified by the Government, says "the aim of the organisation is to maintain and safeguard the democratic character of the labour movement and to protect it from hostile forces and from infiltration or penetration by subversive elements within or outside the Republic of Zambia who are opposed to free and democratic unionism".

MAYORS' ELECTION DATE SET

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 15 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

THE provincial and local government office has set November 14 as the election date for mayors and council chairmen.

The date for mayoral election has been set in view of Parliament's indifference to the Local Administration Bill.

Announcing this in Lusaka yesterday, permanent secretary, Mr Jabes Sakala, appealed to all councils to make arrangements to ensure elections were held on that date.

Mr Sakala explained that under normal circumstances present mayors and council chairmen would have held their positions until the Local Administration Bill was introduced, but this would be against the law.

The new structure was expected to have been introduced this year, but this had not been possible since the debate on the Bill was deferred by Parliament in August.

The Bill was deferred to a later date to allow the Government to accommodate views expressed by backbenchers.

Several MPs who contributed to the debate attacked the Bill, charging that it would defranchise the electorate when compared with the Local Government Act it sought to repeal.

The MPs said they were against the appointment of governors as chairmen because their post was not elective.

The Bill, the third major one to be deferred on second reading (others were the Constitution of Zambia Amendment Bill and the Corrupt Practices Bill) — is expected to come up during the next sitting of Parliament before the end of the year.

The Party has been holding country-wide elections from section to ward level since July in preparation for the new system. The elections end this month.

MINISTRY ACCUSED OF FIRING TOBACCO BOARD WORKERS

THE Ministry of Agriculture and Water Development has been accused of using as an excuse foreign recommendations to declare redundant 2,500 Tobacco Board of Zambia workers.

TBZ political committee chairman, Mr Boniface Phiri accused the ministry of ignoring local advice in preference of foreign recommendations.

Mr Phiri said in Lusaka yesterday that the ministry had accepted recommendations made by a team of British experts on the tobacco industry instead of those made by TBZ in July last year.

Permanent secretary in the ministry, Mr Andrew Hamaamba declined to comment until he had received Mr Phiri's complaints.

Mr Phiri claimed the report by the experts had brought misery to workers because it served British interests.

He charged that the ministry had paid experts more than K100,000 for the work they had done "but which would not bring any progressive revolution in the local industry. It was thus a waste of valuable national foreign exchange".

The TBZ report which was made at the request of the ministry recommended that the Popota and Mukonchi training colleges be closed and guarantees to tenant farmers discontinued, Mr Phiri said.

"We therefore see no reason why the ministry should have gone to look for British experts' advice on how best the industry can be revolutionised in preference of our board's recommendations," he said.

He said the TBZ recommendations were based on local conditions and interest. He wondered whether those were disqualified because they were made by Zambians.

Mr Phiri said his committee was disappointed with Mr Hamaamba, for having described the move to sack the 2,500 workers as "a minor change in TBZ".

He charged that Mr Hamaamba had failed to carry out President Kaunda's directive during the opening of this year's Zambia Agricultural and Commercial show in Lusaka in August that all non-viable TBZ schemes be reorganised and diversified to other crops.

"The ministry has concentrated on dismissing workers instead of improving operations," he said.

He urged the Party and its Government to intervene and rescind the decision to sack the 2,500 workers.

HEALTH MINISTERS CALL FOR COOPERATION WITH TRADITIONAL HEALERS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 16 Oct 80 p 5

[Text]

DOCTORS and traditional healers should cooperate if medical science is to survive, Health Minister Mr Rajah Kunda has said.

"Unless the barrier between doctors and traditional healers is overcome by the devices of educational persuasion, all medical science is in vain and useless." he said.

Mr Kunda said this when he opened a three-day Zambia Medical Association seminar at the University Teaching Hospital in Lusaka yesterday.

Traditional medicine was a widely debated subject in medical circles and a few doctors acknowledged its importance, he said.

"Scientific treatment is just what some patients do not seem to want. Like Lot's wife (in the Bible) they are all too prone to look back, longing to return to rituals and its magic.

"When disease strikes with toxic and frightful influences, the man in the village creeps out of his house whimpering and crying for his traditional healer, his totems and charms," the minister said.

Serenity demanded that "we know why the traditional healers are acceptable to the communities they serve. Why they are so powerful as to hold the lives of their patients in their hands. This calls for cooperation and communication with the healers," Mr Kunda said.

Doctors must study the healers' methods, their skill, their selection of medicines and how they treat diseases. This could be done by educating each other, he said.

The minister urged doctors to lower themselves before other men and avoid "self-glorification, arrogance and bullying."

A doctor must, therefore, strive to help, heal, reconstruct, comfort and in so doing "act with compassion and modesty."

All this bore testimony to the consciousness of a doctor and the strains imposed on the profession, the principles and their ethics should guide them in their conduct.

To achieve this, he said, "a doctor must not only be responsible for his or her continued professional competence, but also be aware of his limitations."

Mr Kunda told more than 150 doctors drawn from all over the country that a doctor should admit mistakes rather than "leave it to litigation and enquiry" as these were not genuine ethics.

"Genuine ethics must be ingrained into the character and do not have to depend on external or remote control," Mr Kunda added.

Meanwhile, the Medical Association of Zambia has launched a programme to compile a master register for all practising doctors in the country.

Association chairman, Dr John Masange, told Mr Kunda yesterday that since 1973 the University of Zambia's School of Medicine had produced 177 doctors, 96 of whom were Zambians.

"The school has the names of all these doctors, but does the country know how many of these Zambian graduates are still serving Zambia?" he asked.

He said the association had so far managed to collect names from the mines and mission hospitals, and regretted that this was not the case with the Ministry of Health which he urged to cooperate with the association.

Dr Masange said if completed, such a register would be updated annually and would be of great value to the Medical Council of Zambia and the ministry.

PRISON DEPARTMENT FUNDS DEPLETED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 16 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

THE prisons department has exhausted its funds resulting in hundreds of inmates being underfed and going about naked, commissioner of prisons, Mr Jonathan Mwanza, revealed in Kabwe yesterday.

Mr Mwanza said the problem of funds, staff and transport was so acute that many escapes had taken place after prisoners walked long distances in the bush to collect firewood.

Mr Mwanza was reporting to the Minister of State for Home Affairs, Senior Chieftainess Elizabeth Nkomeshya, who opened a 15th senior prison officers' conference at Mukobeko on Tuesday.

In a speech read for him by acting senior assistant commissioner of prisons, Mr William Kafunya, Mr Mwanza said that discipline was a cornerstone of the prison service without which his department would be derailed and its good record tarnished.

He pledged to maintain discipline at its highest level in the department even if "I meet resentment from my superiors" and warned that one needed to see the levels of indiscipline in the service now to appreciate the problem.

"The financial problem in the department is acute in that the human beings we look after must be fed according to the scale approved by the Party and its Government with the ratification by our national Parliament.

"Prisoners are naked. I am sorry to report that funds are exhausted and requests for supplementary provisions have fallen on deaf ears," the commissioner said.

He said the staff problem, although met half-way, was acute and he asked the minister to continue recruiting at the present rate to meet the added responsibility of farming and prison industries.

Mr Mwanza reiterated that the daily lock-up figures were fluctuating around 10,000 prisoners which required more staff to arrest the situation.

No transport

He recalled that most of the prison establishments were situated outside towns and were far from hospitals, schools and shopping centres which made it difficult for his staff to work properly.

"The children of staff walk ten kilometres to school daily and to hospitals because there is no transport. Firewood for cooking is collected from long distances and this poses a security risk as prisoners walk to collect firewood — and many escapes have taken place in this way," he said.

Mr Mwanza told Chieftainess Nkomeshya that inspections had not been carried out because of transport problems.

Accommodation was another problem forcing staff and their families to share houses which in most cases were in bad shape. "We have all the labour but we have no materials to build staff houses," he added.

On farming, Mr Mwanza said the prisons department produced 17,800 bags of maize, 45 bags of beans, 25 bags of cotton, 79 bags of rice and 250 bags of sunflower and earned K223,358 from crop sales this year.

In the workshop sector, Mr Mwanza said the department sold K246,371.55 worth of manufactured goods last year and another K89,481.12 between January and July this year.

He admitted that progress was not healthy because of problems of running stocks and foreign exchange and asked the minister to approach the Government to invest money in prison industries if good dividends were to be realised.

He was supported by prisons superintendent of Lusaka, Mr Kenworthy Likando, who told the minister that overcrowding in prisons was so serious that inmates were piled up like logs of wood.

Mr Likando, who was giving a vote of thanks, described most prison buildings as sub-standard, fenced with chicken mesh and posing security problems.

He said: "Everything ranging from sweeping brooms to blankets and shirts for prisoners is missing. We even fail to allocate labour to other departments because the prisoners are naked."

Mr Likando said it was common to find one officer looking after 20 prisoners at a time which resulted in inmates escaping and that he was not convinced there was a shortage of funds when the sister department — police — had more vehicles and staff.

And assistant superintendent at Mukobeko prisons training school, Mr Chola Chilufya, said as long as the prisoners outnumbered officers, escapes would continue.

Mr Chilufya warned that there would be a spate of jailbreaks because prison officers had lost the will to work under the prevailing conditions.

He said prison officers were fed up with promises from the Government that their conditions of service would be improved.

Prisoners who were sent to jail came out worse criminals because prison officers had no means to rehabilitate them.

The Government must act in order to restore the morale of prison warders and their counterparts doing related jobs in the department.

ADB TO SET UP CASHEW NUT FARMS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 16 Oct 80 p 2

[Text] THE African Development Bank (ADB) is to set up 550 cashew nut farms in Western Province during its five-year development programme which is expected to start in 1982.

Senior programme officer of the Food and Agriculture Organisation based in Lusaka Mr Jan Winderickx said this yesterday.

Mr Winderickx said under the ADB programme, K14 million would be spent in Western Province alone and that other crops to be grown besides the nuts, could include guavas, rice, wheat and groundnuts.

A FAO expert is already in Mongu carrying out feasibility studies on cashew nut production on a 200-hectare land.

The FAO representative said because the crop did exceptionally well in areas which were below sea-level, cashew nut growing would be limited to Western Province only where it had shown signs of success.

The project has a budget of about K76,000, but with the planned extension of further assessments, FAO hoped to plough in nearly another K65,000 to bring the total to K141,000.

The project was supposed to have been handed over to the Zambian Government next week, but on request, FAO has provisionally agreed to extend by six months its handling of the project.

"This is very important aspect in counterpart activities, and we are training people to take over, but training takes a long time. As a result quick changes cannot be expected," said Mr Winderickx.

Finance Minister Mr Keboy Musokotwane addressing the seminar said the Government could not ignore constructive criticism on how to keep the wheels of the industry turning.

"All requests cannot be granted in full because we have to maintain a general view of the aggregate performance of the economy," he said.

Some businessmen have even suggested new ways of how the Government could earn more revenue, the minister said.

The task of working out economic policies is too onerous to be created single handedly and the business community must feel free to discuss such matters with the Government at any time.

But the minister said it was unfortunate that there was a tendency to dismiss ministries as bureaucratic when they were bogged down by red tape and indifference while the other side regarded the business world with suspicion, he said.

But the Government has been sensitive to the needs of the business community through provisions of various infrastructure and development of resources.

"The Government had wanted us to be there for another one year, but FAO agreed to extend the period by only six months. This will help the Zambian Government to have enough time to find alternative funding for other activities of the project when we finally leave," said the senior programme officer.

He added: "But as I have already said, the African Development Bank will later move in."

The cashew nut crop, he said, would become one of the country's leading foreign exchange earners.

On insufficient Government contribution, he said that there had not been much change in the situation since it involved much training of personnel who could eventually take over from expatriates.

[Text]

LUSAKA Urban governor Mr Bill Chanda yesterday announced that 123 candidates had gone through unopposed in the ward elections.

He said that the candidates were contesting 248 posts in 31 wards which had attracted 383 aspirants.

Three posts in three wards had not been contested. These are the post of vice-secretary in Kabulonga ward three, vice-treasurer in Chaisa ward 13 and vice-publicity secretary in Mutendere ward two. Fresh arrangements would be made for elections in these areas.

Candidates went through unopposed in Kalingalinga ward four, Mulungushi ward six, Roma ward seven, Munali ward eight, Independence ward 26 and Mwembeshi ward 31.

Other wards are in Chainda ward one, Mulungushi ward six, Roma ward seven, Munali ward eight, Ngwerere ward nine, Silwizya ward ten, Kapwepwe ward fifteen, Kanyama ward twenty, Nkoloma ward twenty-two, Lilayi ward twenty-four, Kamwala ward twenty-five, Independence ward twenty-six, Libala ward twenty-eight and Mwembeshi ward thirty-one.

Chairman of the Elections and Publicity Sub-Committee, Mr Bob Litana is awaiting a report from Ndola on the alleged dirty tricks being used by vetoed candidates to frustrate Party elections.

Mr Litana said he would comment on the alleged behaviour of vetoed candidates after he had received an offical report on the allegations from Ndola region.

According to reports from Ndola, vetoed candidates were allegedly confiscating UNIP and national registration cards from voters to make them unable to take part in the elections on October 21.

This was brought to light by Ndola Urban governor, Mr Alexander Kamalondo at a meeting of candidates and Party leaders at the Adult Education Centre on Sunday.

Mr Kamalondo warned that what these candidates were doing was illegal and those discovered would be prosecuted.

Meanwhile, the Party in Ndola is to organise a series of meetings from October 17 at which candidates in the October 21 elections will be introduced to voters.

According to a list drawn up by the regional office and released by regional youth and publicity secretary Mr Martin Mukompa yesterday, meetings would take place in the 14 wards where candidates are contesting various Party posts.

● Aspiring candidates in the forthcoming Party ward elections have been warned against resorting to anti-Party activities.

Addressing Party officials at Luburma market yesterday, youth regional secretary Mr William Banda said anti-Party activities would cause splits and confusion within UNIP.

Mr Banda explained that the Party's intention in conducting such elections was aimed at letting people choose leaders who could properly represent them in the new integrated council wards. — Zana.

REPORTAGE ON SUCCESS OF LIVINGSTONE ELECTIONS

Smear Campaigns Disallowed

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 15 Oct 80 p 5

[Text]

LIVINGSTONE regional secretary Mr Chisanga Mpepo has said that no candidate has been vetoed by the district committee in the ward election.

But Mr Mpepo warned that no mercy would be shown to candidates who engaged in a smear campaign against their opponents.

The regional secretary said no candidate would be allowed to campaign against others because this causes hatred among people.

Mr Mpepo, who launched a one-week programme to introduce candidates to the electorate yesterday, said the campaign for votes had been steered away from personal attacks to involvement and contribution to development.

In Solwezi ward elections are so heavily contested that in some areas as many as six people have filed their nominations for chairmanship in one ward, district secretary, Mr Winton Kachung'u announced yesterday.

But campaigns were being conducted peacefully and there had been no reports of intimidation from aspiring candidates, he said.

In Mufulira, a vetoed candidate in the forthcoming ward elections wants to be given reasons why he has been barred from contesting.

Mr Wilbroad Yamba Musonda said yesterday that he could not understand the attitude of Party officials in the area towards him because he had been a staunch supporter of UNIP since its birth.

Mr Musonda, 45, said he would seek advice from his lawyers so that reasons for vetoeing him could be made known in court.

He said leaders should treat everybody equal.

Mr Musonda claimed he was a branch chairman for Luansobe for seven years and stepped down because of friction within the executive. He wanted to stand for elections in the same ward.

Chairman of the Mufulira district political committee, Mr Addon Chilembo, who is area's governor, could not be reached for a comment.

The Party in Luanshya has warned candidates in the forthcoming ward elections against being involved in corrupt practices to woo voters.

Luanshya governor Mr Grant Ng'ombe and regional secretary Mr Peter Lishika gave the warning on Monday when they introduced candidates at Buteko Primary School. — Times Reporter/Zana.

Some Nominations Barred

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 16 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

SOME aspiring candidates in the Party elections in Livingstone were allegedly barred from filing their nominations by fellow candidates.

One candidate Mr Ndiyoyi Samba who is a councillor claimed that he was stopped from filing nomination papers for the chairmanship of Namatama ward on October 6.

He was surprised to find that another candidate was supervising nominations with the presiding officer.

"When I tried to file my nomination paper, he told the presiding officer not to accept it and told me to go away and come back later after they were through," Mr Samba, who is a teacher at Shungu primary school said.

He was disappointend with the way the regional office had handled the matter, and he could not understand why former constituency officials should be in charge of nominations when they were in the race.

He said: "It would appear that here in Livingstone, there is a sub-regional office which is becoming more powerful than the regional office."

Last week he wrote to governor Mr Mukazo Vunda on the issue. The governor could not be contacted for comment yesterday.

Regional secretary Mr Chisanga Mpepo said he had not officially received Mr Samba's complaint.

But he added that it was illegal for any candidate to bar another from filing his nomination.

Another candidate, Mr Log Chindambwi, a councillor said it was only through his determined efforts that he was able to file his nomination for the chairmanship of Libuyu constifuency.

"At first the constituency officials refused to allow anybody to support my nomination. But in the end they had to allow my nomination," he said.

In Lusaka, eight candidates in Lubwa ward have petitioned governor Mr Bill Chanda over alleged violation of rules.

Demarcation

The petitioners who are contesting the forthcoming ward elections on October 21 say in their petition dated October 14 that according to the recent ward demarcation exercise by the elections office, seven candidates from Woodlands extension and one from Chilenje had allegedly violated the regulations by contesting Lubwa posts.

The petitioners are contesting the posts of chairman, vice-chairman, secretary and vice-secretary, treasurer and vice-treasurer, publicity secretary and vice-publicity secretary.

They are Mr Rogers Nyaunde, Mr Noah Hachoongo, Mr H. Mweetwa, Mr Abel Koni, Mr Peter Kalyoti, Mr K. Likando, Mr Simon Chimpanga and Mr Tenson Muyuba.

According to the constitution, only a ward councillor is allowed to contest a post in a ward. But these are not councillors and these candidates have crossed the border. Demarcation lines in Lubwa are Mwatusanga, Burma, Chilo, Haile Selassie and Jacaranda roads.

The petition is copied to director of elections Mr Tobias Mbewe provincial political secretary Mrs Christine Mulundika and other regional officials.

They say they want the district committee chaired by Mr Chanda to scrutinise all nomination forms filed by candidates to exclude those from outside the ward.

In Chawama a candidate Mr Wallace Mutambo said there was a character assassination and intimidation campaign against him.

Mr Mutambo, a councillor alleged that a "gang" has been organised which was threatening to beat him up because he allegedly hiked water service charges from K1 to K3 in January.

In Kitwe, governor Mr Joseph Musonda has warned that he would not hesitate to bar candidates who resorted to dirty tactics.

Mr Musonda issued this warning at Buchi hall last night when he introduced candidates.

Seven candidates including mayor Mr Sunday Chiluba have been returned unopposed, but Mr Musonda warned that even those who went through unopposed should not engage in illegal practices.

Meanwhile, an elections office spokesman has said voters at branch and ward levels cannot be allowed to stand for elections at those levels.

In a Press statement released in Lusaka yesterday Mr Mbewe said he had received queries from district secretaries regarding ward candidates who were requesting to be allowed to vote on October 21.

TEAM NAMED TO PROBE LAND USE IN SOUTHERN PROVINCE

Acquisition of Land Sought

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 14 Oct 80 p 1

[Text] PRESIDENT Kaunda has appointed a seven-man commission of inquiry into the land issue in Southern Province under the chairmanship of Mr Justice Ernest Sakala.

This was announced in Lusaka last night by the secretary to the Cabinet Mr Evans Willima who said the commission was expected to begin its work immediately.

The commission will investigate and report on six points in relation to land in the province.

The commission will look into the availability of land for use by peasant farmers, methods which may be used to facilitate expeditious acquisition of unutilised or underutilised land.

It will report and recommend the need to alienate for agricultural use of certain portions of State land, Trust land reserves, forest land and wildlife reserves and to determine the extent of such alienation, the type of settlement to be established in respect of any land which is alienated in consequence of the commission's recommendations.

It will look into what, if any, restrictions ought to be applied in relation to the extent or type of economically viable land units which may be owned or occupied by a single lessee. It will inquire into any other matters which relate to the terms of reference and ought, in the public interest to be looked into.

Move Hailed

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in Enblish 16 Oct 80 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text] DURING a visit to Southern Province on November 1, last year President Kaunda accepted a memorandum from the humble villagers of Bweengwa in Monze district.

The villagers complained, inter alia, that although land was abundant and lying idle in their locality they had no access to it because of several factors at play.

They asked: why should people from far-off areas be alloted State land when they are starving for it?

Why should one person, because he has the money to buy out emigrating expatriates' farms, be allowed to own more land at the expense of the majority?

Let us look at section four of the Land (Conversion of Titles) Act of 1975.

It says: ". . . all land in Zambia shall vest absolutely in the president and shall be held by him in perpetuity for and on behalf of the people of Zambia", fair enough.

We refer to this Act to draw attention to the fact that while it was well-intentioned it is somewhat deficient in application and the need for a more revolutionary land law is urgent.

Zambia is in a hurry to feed herself. She has productive - land. No hurdle should be allowed in the path to the goal of food production.

But as the law stands at present can the State expropriate an expanse of unused land anywhere in Zambia and share it among the local peasantry without running the risk of having to pay heavily in compensation to the title holder?

Section six of the Act reads in part: "A person whose rights over and interests in any land . . . shall hold such land, as if he has been granted a lease thereof by the president for a term of 100 years . . ."

Even after that period has elapsed the leaseholder is entitled to renew ownership for another century. He holds the legal powers to the land.

Certainly since the 1975 law came into effect little has changed over alienation of land.

Yet we talk of an agricultural revolution, which should in common parlance be called "agro-revo".

However, there is a silver lining. This week President Kaunda named a commission of inquiry into land distribution in Southern Province.

This is indeed a welcome move. All the villagers, farmers and leaders in the region who are not satisfied must respond and give evidence to the Ernest Sakala commission.

Its terms of reference are so inclusive that they touch on almost every aspect of the rural development question. The commission should get to work because rural development is a must for Zambia.

We hope that other provinces with similar or even different land problems will be brought into the ambit of the Ernest Sakala inquiry.

MINISTER ZVOBGO REJECTS NKOMO'S CALL FOR POSTPONEMENT OF ELECTIONS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

THE Minister of Local Government and Housing, Mr Eddison Zvobgo, yesterday rejected Dr Nkomo's call for the postponement of the local government elections, terming such suggestions as mere politicking by the Patriotic Front leader.

He told a news conference in Salisbury that he was "astounded" by Dr Nkomo's claims that in certain areas voters had been lined up and ordered to cast their ballot by "men carrying arms" and that the conduct of the poll was not in the best interests of the country.

Mr Zvobgo was responding to a speech made at the weekend by Dr Nkomo, Minister of Home Affairs, who told a rally that he had been informed about results of polling in certain areas where the election had been conducted after some shooting had occurred.

Dr Nkomo said: "What is going on is disaster, and we cannot stand idly and let it destroy what we have fought for for years.

"People are lined up in other areas and ordered to vote by men carrying arms, and then results (of the election) are announced."

Yesterday Mr Zvobgo said the local government poll had been held only in three district councils — in Mtoko, Mudzi and Concession (Chiweshe).

In the first two districts, ZANU (PF) candidates had been returned unopposed, while in the Concession area, there had been no contest in two wards.

In the ward where the election took place, 10 ZANU (PF) candidates had been challenged by 10 PF nominees, although seven of them had withdrawn on polling day. All seats were won by ZANU (PF) members.

The Minister said: "Nothing untoward is reported to have occurred at any of the elections in the three districts concerned, and everything went off peacefully."

He said he was astounded by the allegations because Dr Nkomo had not raised them with the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, nor with him as the responsible Minister nor to the Cabinet Committee on Public Order, of which Dr Nkomo was a member.

"I can only assume that the ZAPU president has been stung by the results of the elections in those three districts since his party lost each and every seat," Mr Zvobgo said.

"As Minister of Home Affairs, he receives full reports about the security situation in every district. Should he demonstrate that in any district it had become impossible to hold an election, I will be prepared to listen to his plea.

"But we cannot postpone elections simply to make it possible for ZAPU to organise elections with some chance of winning. We would have to wait forever as there is no evidence that they will be able to win any seat in most of Zimbabwe."

Mr Zvobgo went on to say that neither the police, who are under the Ministry of Home Affairs, nor the district commissioners, controlled by his Ministry, had complained to him about any incident in the three areas where the elections had been

"It is quite clear from information available to me that the situation in most of the district council areas is peaceful and encouraging.

"We expect the rest of the elections to be held in as peaceful a situation as the elections we have now conducted and completed in three district councils.

"I certainly reject with the contempt it deserves the allegations made by the president of ZAPU (PF)."

Polling Dates Announced

THE Minister of Local Government and Housing, Mr Eddison Zvobgo, yesterday announced that the dates had been set for the holding of district council elections in various parts of the country.

In the table the date on the left is the nomination day for the council concerned, and that on the right the election date.

Mr Zvobgo said in the districts not covered in the list, the election dates would be fixed as soon as commissions working out the details had finalised their reports and had them approved by him.

REGISTRATION OF VOTERS HAS TO BE FAIR--NKOMO

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

THE Minister of Home Affairs, Dr Joshua Nkomo, yesterday reiterated his call that local Government elections due next month should be postponed because of what he termed unfair and irregular happenings in several parts of the country.

There were areas of the country where ZANU (PF) made it "physically impossible" for other political organisations to campaign freely, he said.

"People are asked to produce letters from ZANU (PF) chairmen in order for them to enter some parts of our country, especially in the Eastern region and Victoria district," he said.

"Registration of voters must be done openly and fairly by a Government-appointed team or commission whose impartiality is unquestionable if the elections are to be free of corruption and fairly conducted."

In Salisbury yesterday, Mr Peter Mandaza, president of the National Front of Zimbabwe, said it was only fair that the poll should be postponed until peaceful conditions prevailed.

'DECEIT'

Terming the present election an "exercise in deceit", he said that even a blind man could not fail to realise that conditions at the moment were "dominated by the gun" and free and fair elections were impossible.

The Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole's ZANU said its non-participation in the poll was a clear demonstration that the election would not be free. It would be useless to hold the election now as the winners would not be representative of the people, a party spokesman said in Salisbury yesterday.

PROGRESS OF GOVERNMENT LAND RESETTLEMENT SCHEME REPORTED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Oct 80 p 9

[Text]

MORE THAN 130 000 ha of land have been bought by the Government so far for resettlement, the Assistant Secretary in the Ministry of Lands, Mr David Hilditch, said yesterday.

The land incorporates about 90 farms and cost "in excess of $2 million", he said. The entire area would accommodate about 2 000 families.

It was hoped that at least 1 500 families would be settled in the first phase of the resettlement programme before the start of the rains, he said.

All the resettlement farms were in the eastern half of the country, although the Government was looking at more areas around Matabeleland.

Mr Hilditch stressed that there had been no expropriation of land. All the farmers involved had sold their land voluntarily to the Government, he said.

Commenting on the selection of settlers, he said first consideration would be given to refugees, landless people and those unable to support their families on their existing land.

Prospective settlers had to complete registration forms distributed through village committees. On these forms they were asked about the size of their families, number of livestock, if they owned any implements, and other questions. The form had to be verified by an official who knew the applicant.

The completed forms are sent to the local resettlement officer, who would hold a selection meeting, attended by representatives of the Ministry of Lands and of the local community.

Each family would be given 0,25 ha on which to build their huts. They would also get a 0,5 ha plot which the Ministry would have ploughed for them so that they could plant a subsistence crop before the rains.

Next year each family would get a 5 ha plot on which they could grow crops on a commercial basis, he said.

Many families had received seed packs from Devag, and people would be allowed to rear livestock on their plots.

The settlers would be issued with four permits, a temporary permit to cultivate (for the 0,5 ha plot), a permit to reside, one to graze stock and one to cultivate permanently (for the 5 ha plot).

Mr Hilditch said an attempt was made to incorporate all four permits into one, but this proved too complicated.

All the funds used so far had come from the Government, he said. "Obviously we would hope to attract external assistance for this scheme."

MINISTER PERSUADES HOSPITAL WORKERS TO END STRIKE

Workers Committee Complains

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

THE Minister of Health, Dr Herbert Ushewokunze, yesterday persuaded more than 100 general workers at the Andrew Fleming Hospital in Salisbury to return to work after a two-hour strike over alleged ill-treatment and racial discrimination by the management.

The workers alleged the hospital management was against the workers' committee and that it prevented the committee from trying to solve workers' problems during working hours.

They claimed they were being discriminated against with regard to allowances and that "sell-outs" were being promoted at the expense of "hardworking" workers.

They also demanded the dismissal of two senior officers whom they accused of being "big-headed".

In his address, Dr Ushewokunze asked the workers to make their grievances through the proper channels.

He said they were an important part of the health team at the hospital and should be mindful of their patients whom they were all committed to serve.

"If your actions do not affect the patients, then that is fine, but if they are affected then this is cutting across the ethics governing medical personnel which is the ideal you are seeking to support" the Minister said.

Acting on his advice, the workers chose 34 representatives who went into a closed-door meeting with the Minister and the management while the rest went back to work.

The meeting began at 10 a.m. and ended about midday. The Minister said later the situation had returned to normal. He did not elaborate and there was no comment from the hospital management.

● Dr Ushewokunze planned to attend a conference of Commonwealth health Ministers in Arusha, Tanzania, next month, a Ministry of Health statement said yesterday.

Dr Ushewokunze and the regional secretary of the Commonwealth Health Secretariat, Dr W. K. Kyaruzi, had held talks in Salisbury since Thursday in preparation for the conference, the statement said.

Election of New Committee

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Oct 80 p 7

[Text] General workers at Andrew Fleming Hospital will hold a meeting today at which they will elect a new workers' committee to replace the one which was chosen on an acting basis.

This follows a meeting between the workers' representatives, the Minister of Health, Dr Herbert Ushewokunze, and hospital management on Monday after a two-hour strike by the general staff.

The strike was over allegations of ill-treatment, racial discrimination and alleged refusal by the management to recognise or allow the existing workers' committee to operate.

Reporting on the outcome of the meeting, the chairman of the outgoing committee, Mr Innocent Munamati Muundi, said the major differences had been solved following Dr Ushewokunze's intervention.

"The Minister directed that we hold elections and that the management recognises the elected representatives and allow them to operate during working hours and not after hours as the management insisted on before," he said.

It was agreed during the meeting that two senior domestic staff department officers should be transferred to another department instead of being sacked as demanded by the workers.

Promotions, it was agreed, should be based on merit and length of service of the people concerned.

It was also resolved that all workers who fall ill on duty should be treated at the hospital instead of being sent to Harare hospital.

"We are very satisfied with the outcome of the meeting and what the Minister said, and what remains now is to follow up the decisions we arrived at," said Mr Muundi.

MINISTER DENIES MOVE TO CURTAIL MEDICAL AID ACTIVITIES

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Oct 80 p 1

[Text] There was no move or intention on the part of the Government to curtail the activities of medical aid societies, the Deputy Minister of Health, Dr Simon Mazorodze, said yesterday.

He was speaking at a meeting of the National Association of Medical Aid Societies in Salisbury.

The meeting was attended by representatives of more than 15 medical aid societies, including the major societies in Zimbabwe.

In his address, the Deputy Minister said that the Government's new policy was aimed at achieving health for all by the year 2000.

"By this I mean that everyone should be leading a useful social and economically productive life," he said.

The Government recognised the "serious" problems facing the rural people, and re-emphasised its commitment to primary health, the prevention of disease and the reopening of clinics and hospitals.

The doubling, and sometimes even trebling of the demand for medication at a number of rural clinics indicated that a large amount of the population was unable to afford proper medication before the advent of a free health service.

The free health service did not affect the medical aid societies as they dealt mostly with the higher-income brackets, he said.

In fact, the service helped as it reduced absenteeism among the rank and file workers.

Dr Mazorodze said there seemed to be reluctance on the part of medical aid societies to come forward with ideas for change and said this was probably due to a "breakdown in communications" between the Ministry of Health and medical aid societies.

"We are prepared to sit down and discuss this with members of medical aid societies," he said.

Turning to the proposed second stage of the free health service, the Deputy Minister said a scheme which would require a compulsory contribution from wage earners getting more than $150 a month was being considered, but the full details had still to be worked out.

UNION LEADER QUITS IN PROTEST AT 'INTIMIDATION'

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

THE vice-chairman of the six-week-old Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions, Mr Phineas Sithole, resigned yesterday.

In an interview here he said he had given up his post "in protest against increasing divisions in the Zimbabwe labour movement and because of the disruptive nature of the activities of the ZCTU which are totally 'untrade-union' in policies, practices and principles".

In a letter to the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, Mr Sithole said he would "continue to support the Government's official labour policy to the best of my ability in my position as general secretary of the United Textile Workers' Union of Zimbabwe".

Outlining his reasons for pulling out of the 20-member ZCTU executive committee, Mr Sithole said: "When the Labour and Social Services Minister invited me to join the ZCTU committee, I agreed because I thought it would be for trade unions to have a genuine umbrella organisation.

"But I have since discovered that apart from the Government and the ZANU (PF) trying actively to usurp the rights and role of established trade unions, the ZCTU is ZANU-orientated and divisive."

Mr Sithole produced a list of 30 trade unions which he said were formed by ZANU (PF)'s labour department "through intimidation and threats against members of established workers' organisations" in the past seven months.

Mr Sithole said the Labour Minister was overstepping his functions by getting involved in "petty labour squabbles".

COURTS SUFFER SHORTAGE OF MAGISTRATES

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Oct 80 p 1

[Text] THE Minister of Justice and Constitutional Affairs, Senator Simbi Mubako, yesterday confirmed that there was a notable shortage of magistrates in the country — at a time when more cases were coming before the bench.

In answer to Herald questions, the Minister attributed the shortage to resignations and retirement while other magistrates had left the country or gone into private practice.

He said although new appointments had been made, this was progressing slowly and the losses on the bench exceeded the gains.

Senator Mubako said: "At the same time, in terms of workload, magistrates have got a lot more work on their hands today than perhaps a year ago.

"One reason for this is that after the war more cases are coming before the magistrates, cases which used, for example, to be disposed of by martial law courts or which did not go to court at all.

"Furthermore, we have a post-war phenomenon whereby an abnormal number of serious offences is coming before the courts.

"There is also an increased number of lesser offences which the police are now able to detect because they are now devoting more attention to their normal role as civilian police."

As a result he had recently appointed 10 new acting black magistrates —in line with the Presidential directive to bring about racial balance on th bench.

His Ministry, in conjunction with foreign governments and donors, was also launching a one-year training programme for magistrates and supporting staff.

The minimum qualifications for the course, expected to run for the next three years, would be five O levels, the Minister said.

The course would be conducted on a full-time basis by the University of Zimbabwe.

In answer to another question, he said regulations governing food in prisons were now the same for all prisoners.

"There are, of course, distinctions made between prisoners on grounds other than race," he said.

"For example, an unconvicted prisoner is not treated the same as a convicted one, nor is a sick prisoner treated the same as a fit prisoner."

Senator Mubako denied that prisons were now overcrowded due to remand cases. He said because of the general amnesty which released about 18 000 prisoners, there was a lot of room in the prisons.

The appointment of an ombudsman would be made in due course as this was a new department requiring the selection of staff and provision of accommodation for them, he said.

GWELO FIREMEN END THEIR STRIKE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Oct 80 p 7

[Text]

GWELO.

MUNICIPAL firemen who went on strike in Gwelo on Monday returned to work yesterday after assurances that their complaints would be discussed between Gwelo City Council and officials of the Municipal Workers' Union.

Town Clerk Mr Alex Smart said yesterday that the 26-strong fire brigade stopped work at 9 a.m. on Monday and returned briefly at 8.45 a.m. yesterday when they were answering ambulance and fire calls but were not doing full duties. They stopped work again but resumed at 2 p.m.

The chairman of their workers' committee, Mr Cuthbert Chakanetsa, said 30 men were involved and they were demonstrating against "unpaid hours. We work 128 hours a month which are not paid for" he said.

● The Salisbury Municipal Workers' Union has welcomed the pay rise announced by the Mayor, Councillor Jack Whiting, last month, writes a Herald Reporter.

In a statement, the secretary of the union, Mr T. G. Mapfumo, said the starting salary for the lowest grade was now $90 a month, an increase of 21 percent. Higher grades also got improved percentages.

All these advantages, he said, were the result of patient negotiations, adding that his union regarded strikes as an "undesirable weapon" to end disputes.

● The strike by about 1 000 workers at David Whitehead Textiles Ltd., Hartley, which started last Friday, ended yesterday when all of them reported for work, a senior company spokesman said last night.

BULAWAYO INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION REPORTED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Oct 80 p 3

[Text]

BULAWAYO.

PROJECTS worth more than $16 million to expand Bulawayo's industries are either under way or will start before the end of the year.

Since April, demand for the country's products, both internally and externally, has been so great that many factories have been stretched to the limit.

Industrialists are now pushing through their building plans so that they can increase their production as quickly as possible

At least 12 Bulawayo firms are spending between $200 000 and $1.3 million on expansions, such as new weaving mills, a margarine factory, an edible oil processing system and a brewing plant.

From July to September, municipal and Government plans approved were about $4 900 000, but the rapid expansion in industry is causing problems.

Mr Charles Scott, president of the Bulawayo Master Builders' Association, said yesterday: "There is a shortage of virtually all building materials.

"Industry is particularly short of galvanised and chromium - plated fittings, artisans' tools, shovels and sanitaryware."

Mr Scott said members of his association were being kept busy on the council's low-cost housing schemes in the western areas.

"But when the more sophisticated type of work comes along, we are going to battle to find enough foremen and chargehands," he said.

STATE OF ECONOMY DESCRIBED

Salisbury THE FINANCIAL GAZETTE in English 10 Oct 80 p 4

[Editorial]

[Text]

A CERTAIN discontent may be regarded as a normal element in any businessman's outlook. Indeed, it may be regarded as essential, for complacency indicates a loss of the drive to improve and develop.

When such discontent concerns the level of the company's performance, the profit figures or staff outputs, it can be regarded as healthy. When it extends to the larger issues of confidence in commerce, industry or the country, it can be a positive danger.

Pessimism, like optimism, is spread more by personal contact and attitude than by hard facts. There is, at present, a mood of groundless pessimism being exhibited by some businessmen, who like evangelical dismal johnnies, propagate their morale-sapping dogma wherever they go.

In fact, the situation in the country, considering it has just emerged from a civil war, encourages optimism. The fears of a widespread state of anarchy have not been realised, and where there are disturbances the Prime Minister has initiated firm action to reaffirm the rule of law and order.

Industry, far from suffering a recession, is moving ahead firmly. The Manufacturing Industry Sector index of production reached a record 238 in July (1964 = 100). Electricity consumption also reached a record 671 million kilowatt hours in the same month. Mineral production in the first seven months of this year has reached $241 million, a progress which if maintained will surpass even the most optimistic forecasts for 1980.

Even agriculture, a vital industry which suffered more than most during the war, is making a remarkable recovery. Maize imports have been stopped following the discovery that this year's crop yielded 100 000 tons more than expected (how did that happen?). Next year Zimbabwe will regain its position as a net exporter of food. Beef production will be much reduced; but deliberately so, to ensure the recovery of the national herd.

These figures indicate that the country is experiencing healthy growth, and although there are individual areas causing concern, one cannot extrapolate these into forecasts of national doom. Not many countries in the world can be said to be in a better position than Zimbabwe, and most would envy our economy.

The Americans cannot even make up their minds whether their recession is over, with some economists arguing that "there is a cessation in the recession, temporarily". Britain is battling with two million people out of work, and school leavers are pouring into the labour pool with no hope of employment. Even Israel — where the natural financial acumen of the Jewish race should come into full and unfettered play — labours under a crushing inflation rate of over 100%.

So little Zimbabwe, with its undoubted problems, compares very favourably with the many of the highly developed nations of the world. There is a place for cautious optimism, based on solid evidence of growth and development.

If 12 months ago the business community had been asked to forecast the country's position in October, 1980, would they dared to have painted as bright a picture as actually exists today?

STATISTICAL ROUND-UP PUBLISHED

Salisbury THE FINANCIAL GAZETTE in English 10 Oct 80 p 4

[Text]

High-income index up, low-income index down

The consumer price index for higher-income earning families rose by 0,5% in August to 230,4 compared with 229,2 in July. (The base figure of 100 is calculated from prices obtained in 1964.) Price increases in beef, pork, poultry, sausages and onions were principally responsible for the increase.

Index figures within the nine categories are: foodstuffs 252,3; drink and tobacco 249,7; clothing and footwear 211; rent and rates 151; fuel and light 148; household stores 213; domestic workers' wages 277,7; vehicle expenses 334,1, and miscellaneous 263,4.

The consumer price index for lower-income families, which is calculated in three-month periods, fell from 234,2 in March to 231,8 in June. Significant price increases were recorded for poultry, cooking oil, cigarettes, beer and women's dresses. These were offset by decreases in the price of most fruit and vegetables and a decrease in sales tax.

Index figures in the main categories, compared with the average of 100 in 1964, are: foodstuffs 229,9; drink and tobacco 261,7; clothing and footwear 214,9; rent, fuel and light 217,8; household stores 302,9; transport 219,8 and miscellaneous 173,4.

Country loses 1 381 residents

1 931 residents left Zimbabwe during August this year and 550 immigrants were recorded, a net loss of 1 381. During the first eight months of this year, 10 593 residents left the country and 3 600 immigrants arrived, a net loss of 6 933. The Central Statistical Office admits that these figures are an incomplete record of migration. There are cross-border movements at points other than official ports, and there is evidence that some residents who declare they are leaving for less than twelve months, in fact stay away permanently or for longer than a year.

18 workers killed

18 workers were killed in occupational accidents during July, bringing the total number of fatalities in Zimbabwe's industries for the first eight months of this year to 96. The 1979 figure for the first eight months was 73.

Zimbabwe had a visible trade deficit of $2 141 000 in June. Total imports cost the country $64 771 000. The value of the country's exports was $62 630 000, made up of $62 106 000 for domestic exports (including gold) and $524 000 for re-exports.

ROLE OF TRADITIONAL BELIEFS, CHRISTIANITY DISCUSSED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Oct 80 p 6

[Article by the Rev Fred Rea: "The Church in New Africa--Does Christianity Have a Place for the Old Beliefs?"]

[Text]

MANY Christians have been disturbed by things that have been said concerning the relation between Christianity and traditional African beliefs. They are afraid that the Christian faith is going to be corrupted by the introduction of practices that are contrary to the word of God.

It is right that Christians should always be on their guard against false beliefs, a danger against which Peter warned the early church (2 Pet. 2:1). However it must also be realised that not every new idea is wrong.

When Christianity is brought to a new country there may be many things in the nation's former beliefs that should be preserved to the enrichment of the faith. In his vision of the New Jerusalem John saw the kings of the earth bringing their "wealth" into it: all that was not impure found entry.

The Church in Zimbabwe is passing through a stage similar to that experienced by most branches of growing churches since the earliest days. The first generation of converts tend to turn away completely from every aspect of the former faith, for it is not easy to "put new wine in old bottles".

However there comes a time, usually in the second or third generation, when the question is asked, "What is the relation of this new religion to the former beliefs and practices of our people? Was everything in the old faith wrong? Can there be no blending of the new with the old?"

DIFFERENCES

In the early Church as it spread through the Roman empire many differing answers were given to this question and it led to a period of much questioning and conflict, which is reflected in the writings of the New Testament. When Paul, for example, began to preach to the Gentiles, he made two discoveries.

That some of the customs inherited from his Jewish past and which he had thought to be important were not acceptable to Gentile Christians and indeed were not essential to faith: for example, circumcision and the observance of the Jewish Sabbath.

That some of the customs and beliefs of Gentile Christians which conservative Jewish Christians objected to, were not evil, such as the purchase of meat, previously offered to idols in the heathen temples.

In the second century two great leaders represented opposite extremes of thinking upon this subject. Origen sought a reconciliation between Greek and Christian thinking. Tertullian, on the contrary demanded, "What is there in common between Athens and Jerusalem?"

Clement again wrote that "philosophy was a schoolmaster to bring the Greek mind to Christ, as the Law brought the Hebrews".

The Christian Church refused to follow the narrow line and throughout the centuries of its growth it has been enriched by its contact with other faiths.

The task of indigenising the Gospel has been going on for a number of years in Zimbabwe. Some of the earliest pioneers have been the founders of indigenous movements such as the Zionists and the Ethiopians, some of which sprang up with the express purpose of incorporating traditional practices. At first there was a good deal of distrust of these groups, who were regarded as being outside the pale of the Church.

TRAINING

However the late Rev. Herbert Carter, realising that we must learn from each other, initiated training courses for their ministers and leaders. This approach at first yielded little fruit, but a decade later the Rev. Dr Daneel, after a period of intensive and sympathetic study of the indigenous groups, was instrumental in enabling them to form Fambidzano, a unique organisation for in-service training courses in Christian doctrine, with its headquarters at Fort Victoria.

By this means the indigenous leaders have been enabled to improve the standard of their knowledge of the Christian faith and so to discriminate for themselves what is of permanent value in the religion and culture of Zimbabwe.

In recent years this subject has been a matter of frequent debate at sessions of the Rhodesia Christian Conference. For example in 1972 papers were presented on the following subjects: Marriage in African Society, Lobolo, traditional funeral rites, seed fertility and rain ceremonies, polygamy.

Two years later, Bishop Khumalo, in his presidential address, said "Culture is the life of a people, and for Christianity to be meaningful to the African people, his culture cannot be ignored . . . Is it not time now that expatriate missionaries should only play the role of advisers and let Africans take the lead in building the Christian Church in Africa, bearing in mind that our situations are different, for example, the social, cultural and political problems, from those of Europe?"

As an expatriate minister of many years in Zimbabwe, I fully endorse this conclusion. However let it not be thought that theirs is going to be an easy task. Many of them have been brought up remote from the grass roots of African society.

Bishop Khumalo continues: "Today, more than ever before, the Church needs trained leadership. Like any other institution, church leaders must have the necessary qualifications."

MINGLING

Those who undertake this task must not allow themselves to be swayed by the emotional enthusiasms of the new era of African independence. While remaining firmly loyal to all that was good in the pre-colonial way of life, they must not be misled into thinking that everything "black is beautiful", forgetting that in every society good and evil are mingled together.

It is the task of church leaders, by careful study, to sift the wheat from the chaff, making truth and goodness the ultimate test of value.

Probably their most difficult task will be that which concerns witchcraft and the work of the ngangas. In this respect the churches of the West have been ill-equipped to offer much assistance, on account of their own past experiences.

After long centuries of belief in the reality of witchcraft — a period when superstition and fear led to dreadful deeds of persecution, since the 18th century there was a complete change of thought in the West.

Belief, in witches and ghosts, in demon possession and exorcism and in the world of the occult was abandoned as unworthy of an educated man.

Gradually the West is re-awakening to a realisation that there is an occult world, for which as yet science has been unable to provide an adequate explanation.

Psychic research in many universities is slowly preparing the ground for new discoveries and there is hope that in due course it will be possible to make an evaluation of what is good and bad in the work of those like ngangas who claim to have powers lying beyond the threshold of sense experience.

This is an open field for exploration and evaluation by African Christian leaders. The Church of Zimbabwe needs guidance if we are to be saved from the excesses of superstition on the one hand, or the scepticism of pseudo-intellectuals on the other.

BRIEFS

GARMENT TRADE WAGES--Pay increases of up to 36 percent for workers in the clothing industry had been negotiated with employers, the general secretary of the National Union of the Clothing Industry, Mr C. Pasipanodya, said in Salisbury yesterday. The salaries, which had been negotiated through the Industrial Council, would take effect on January 1, he said. These included a 20 percent increase for general grades, 26 percent for semi-skilled workers and 36 percent for skilled workers. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Oct 80 p 7]

CANADIAN MISSION ARRIVES--Seventeen Canadian businessmen are in Zimbabwe on a fact-finding mission to examine areas for possible cooperation with Zimbabwean industries in the mining, energy, agriculture and transport sectors. The delegation intends to hold talks with businessmen, industrialists and officials in the Ministries of Finance, Commerce and Industry, and Economic Planning and Development. The team is led by Mr D. J. Janigan, who is the director-general of Canada's trade fairs and mission branch. Mr Janigan said he hoped the delegation's visit to Zimbabwe would secure more economic aid and cooperation. It was also hoped the mission would formulate a policy on Canadian investments in future to Zimbabwe. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Oct 80 p 7]

LAND DISPUTE--A land dispute involving a farmer and more than 300 people in the Mrewa and Mtoko TTL was settled on Monday after a four-hour meeting, Senator Agrippa Makunde said yesterday. The Senator said the three-month-old dispute was over grazing land. The people in the TTL were grazing their cattle on the farm without permission. He said the fence separating the farm and the TTL had been removed. "The owner of the farm had refused to put up a new fence because it was constantly being taken down. He had also continued to seize cattle belonging to the people from the TTL. "But after the meeting, which was also attended by three policemen from Mrewa and five policemen from Macheke, the people pledged to form a patrol unit to scout the fence. In return the farmer agreed to erect a fence and to return the cattle to their owners," said the Senator. Senator Makunde said the farmer agreed to the women's request to allow them to fetch firewood from his farm. "The farmer agreed on the condition that the women would enter the farm using the gate to the farm and also on the condition that they would cut only dry wood. "He has also said that he is willing to help the people in the TTL with a tree-growing project to meet their future demands for firewood and poles for building huts," said Senator Makunda. The meeting was held at Masunzwi School in the Mangwende TTL. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Oct 80 p 1]

YUGOSLAV GIFT OF TRACTORS--Yugoslavia is to give Zimbabwe 60 tractors worth more than U.S.$1 million for the rural reconstruction exercise. The Yugoslav Charge d'Affairs, Mr Vojislav Vujovic, said in Salisbury yesterday Yugoslav private companies would also sell an unspecified number of tractors to Zimbabwean companies for the same purpose. The 60 tractors were expected to arrive at Beira on Friday, he said. "I am leaving for the port myself tomorrow to supervise their offloading from the ship and to hand them over to the Zimbabwean representative there." He said: "We consider this material help as a continuation of the strengthening of the relations between the two countries." [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Oct 80 p 4]

ZANU MAN RESIGNS--A senior official of the Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole's ZANU, Mr Mukudzei Mudzi, has resigned from the party. Mr Mudzi's resignation comes less than a month after eight other top ZANU officials resigned. Mr Mudzi, a former Maputo detainee, told Mr Sithole in a letter dated October 9 that he felt the February general elections had accomplished the first stage of Zimbabwe's revolution. "I accept the verdict of the people and prefer to put my efforts into the second stage of our revolution which is for social and economic transformation," he said. /Text/ /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 18 Oct 80 p 2/

PF COOPERATION WITH ZANU--Bulawayo--The Natural Resources and Water Development Minister, Senator Joseph Msika, yesterday told a rally at the Luveve Stadium that they must always remember that Mr. Robert Mugabe was the Prime Minister of Zimbabwe, but not the leader of the Patriotic Front. Addressing about 10 000 members of the Patriotic Front's Luveve Nehanda district, Senator Msika, who is also PF's secretary-general, said that when dealing with Government matters, the PF consulted the Prime Minister, but on party matters it had its own president, Dr Joshua Nkomo. "We of the PF are cooperating very much with those of Mr Mugabe's ZANU, but there have been incidents by ZANU which have left us wondering, because those responsible have not been punished or reprimanded." /Text/ /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 13 Oct 80 p 1/

BBC MEN HELP ZBC--Two experts from the BBC in London are to join the Zimbabwe Broadcasting Corporation next week as part of a cooperation agreement between Britain and Zimbabwe. A spokesman for the Ministry of Information said in Salisbury yesterday that Mr Ken Angold-Stephens, a technical instructor, and Mr Terry Heron, a news editor, would arrive in Salisbury today and work with ZBC until December 20. /Text/ /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 18 Oct 80 p 1/

NONPOLITICAL ARMY--It was necessary to establish a national army without allegiance to any political party to counter violence which had become politically motivated, Mr Emmerson Mnangagwa, the Minister of State in the Prime Minister's office, said yesterday. Addressing a Mashonaland East youth conference, he said the security situation had ceased to be one where incidents were carried out by guerilla dissidents, such as had occurred immediately after independence. "Security problems are now politically orientated and are being carried out in an organised pattern. Political motivation has now developed," Mr Mnangagwa said. He told a large crowd of youths at Stodart Hall, Harare, it was now necessary to establish "as rapidly as possible" a national army with one central loyalty. The Minister said the Government recognised the need for an army in which there would be no divided loyalty from the top to the bottom. He said that since the war the enemy was more difficult to pinpoint, and that is why the nation must be prepared for "any eventuality." "The outside manifestations of a threat to the nation usually start as something else less obvious to the eye. "Political dissidents are cancers which must be removed from the body politic," he said. /Text/ /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 13 Oct 80 p 2/

RECORD TOURIST TOTAL--Zimbabwe had 30 258 visitors from abroad in August--the highest monthly total in at least two years--underlining a steady increase in tourists to this country since the February election. According to the latest monthly Digest of Statistics, 11 555 visitors were from South Africa, 11 850 from Zambia, 1 728 from Britain and Ireland and 713 from the United States and Canada. In the same month 38 876 Zimbabwean residents visited countries abroad. This includes people leaving the country permanently who do not indicate they are emigrating. The country had a net loss of 1 381 people in August, its worst month for emigration since December 1978, the statistics showed. The statistics show that a total of 1 931 people emigrated from Zimbabwe in that month while 550 immigrants arrived. In December 1978 there were 2 596 emigrants and in August last year the total was 912. The figures bring the total number of emigrants from Zimbabwe up to the end of August this year to 10 593, or a net loss against immigration for the same period of 6 933. The digest also shows that a total of 26 638 residents returned from abroad in August. This includes returning refugees. The statistics show that of the total number of emigrants in August, 1 035 were from Salisbury and 392 from Bulawayo. Umtali lost 59 and Gwelo 68. /Text/ /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 18 Oct 80 p 1/

CONCESSION TO SQUATTERS--Bulawayo--The Forestry Commission has agreed to let squatters stay on its Bembezi Valley property pending a resettlement solution by the Government, the PF MP for Matabeleland North, Mr Sidney Malunga, told a rally near Lupane yesterday. Mr Malunga said he had recently voiced concern to the District Forest Officer, Mr Geoff Calvert, in connection with the fate of more than 500 squatters in the area. He said 26 were serving a jail sentence of 30 days after failing to raise a $30 fine paid by 16 others. "Eviction orders that have been served will now be frozen and there will be no further prosecutions," said Mr Malunga. Efforts were being made to see if the squatters could be moved to Nyamandhlovu farms acquired by the Government recently, he said. "The commission has agreed that you plant your crops on the property you are occupying this season," he said. /Text/ /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 13 Oct 80 p 2/

MINIMUM PAY RAISE--Steps to give promised pay rises to hundreds of workers have been taken by the Labour Minister, Mr Kumbirai Kangai. A Government Notice published yesterday provides for the pay of workers placed on a minimum wage of $70 four months ago to go up to $85 a month from January 1. Mining employees will get a minimum monthly wage of $58 from that date, a $15 a month increase. The wages of domestic and farm workers remains unchanged at $30 minimum a month.--SMR /Text/ /Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 19 Oct 80 p 1/

FERTILIZER SHORTAGE--Farmers are becoming jittery over a fertiliser shortage in Zimbabwe. But their fears that stocks will not arrive in time for the new planting season were allayed last week by two of the country's biggest suppliers. In a joint statement, they said: "Sufficient supplies are expected to be available in time for the 1980-81 crops." The main reason for the temporary shortage is rail congestion in South Africa. But the embargo imposed on train freight from South Africa to Zimbabwe, Zambia and Zaire because of clogged rail lines was dropped yesterday. Imports of urea--which will be added to local stocks of ammonium nitrate--are now expected to arrive soon. /Text/ /Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 19 Oct 80 p 2/

EIGHT POLICE INSPECTORS PROMOTED--The first promotions of blacks to superintendent rank in the Zimbabwe Republic Police were Gazetted on Friday. All are former inspectors, previously the highest rank reached by black policemen, who have attended or are attending 12-week courses at police training colletes at Branshill and Hendon in England. The new superintendents are: Govata Mhora, Nebart Ernest Madziwa, Wiridzayi Chandaengerwa Mugadza, Henry George Mkurazhizha, Godwin Hatichke Mabika, Jona John Ethraim Chademanah, Faustino Chikwangwani Makonese and Bamu Kefasi Zakeyo. /Text/ /Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 19 Oct 80 p 3/

WOMEN'S RIGHTS--Women represented half the world population and a third of the official labour force, yet only received a tenth of world earnings because of sexual discrimination, the Prime Minister's wife, Mrs Sally Mugabe, told the Zimbabwe's Women's Conference in Salisbury yesterday. Reporting on the success of the United Nations Decade for Women Conference which she attended in Copenhagen last month, Mrs Mugabe told about 300 women that men should become involved in programmes designed to change their attitudes towards women. Mrs Mugabe said the Government should take measures to eliminate discrimination against women, especially in employment, and ensure that women had equal rights in politics and other policy-making spheres. The Government should pass laws to protect them from sexual intimidation and exploitation. The development of family planning programmes should be encouraged by the Government, Mrs Mugabe said. "New approaches should be taken to increase women's status and technology should be developed to reduce the work-load on women, especially around the home." The conference was chaired by the Deputy Minister of Posts, Telecommunications, Roads and Road Traffic, Dr Naomi Nhiwatiwa and was opened by the President's wife, Mrs Janet Banana. /Text/ /Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 19 Oct 80 p 1/

POLICEMAN KILLED--A police Support Unit sergeant was shot dead in a gun battle between his section and armed dissidents at Chibuwe business centre near Chipinga at the weekend. At the height of the shoot-out three other members of the section were wounded by a grenade thrown into their vehicle by the dissidents. A police spokesman said the Support Unit section went to the business centre on Saturday to investigate a report about armed men in the area. "Three armed dissidents approached the police vehicle and spoke to the sergeant-major in charge of the section," said the spokesman. One of the dissidents raised his arm and another group appeared and opened fire on the vehicle with AK rifles. When the dissidents threw the grenade into the vehicle, the driver, Sergeant Maxwell Marira, stood up and returned the fire. He was shot in the chest and died instantly. The gun battle continued with other members of the section returning fire until the dissidents fled. The spokesman said the wounded policemen were in a "satisfactory" condition in hospital. TTL GRAZING OPERATION--Bulawayo, Operation Graze, Gwanda district's scheme to share commercial grazing lands with TTL cattlemen was being fully supported by local farmers, the District Commissioner of Gwanda, Mr Ian Matheson, said yesterday. About 10000 head of TTL cattle have been allowed on to farms surrounding the TTLs since the commercial and peasant farmers came to an agreement about three weeks ago. Mr Matheson said Operation Graze would continue until December 31. The scheme was started when the rate of trespassing rose because of the shortage of grazing in the TTL. It was decided that the peasant farmers should approach the commercial landowners and draw up an agreement for the lease of grazing land. In some cases farmers provided dipping and water facilities for a small charge. In return for grazing rights, the cattle owner pledges to safeguard the farmers' fences and to preserve the trees and vegetation. "So far it has worked very well and there has been a great degree of cooperation between the farmers," said Mr Matheson. "The TTL farmers have said that they will do all they can to abide by the agreement. They are very grateful for this gesture." [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Oct 80 p 3]

FOREIGN JOURNALISTS ACCREDITATION REQUIRED--The spokesman for the Ministry of Information has announced that all foreign journalists operating in Zimbabwe will be required to obtain accreditation as from next week. The spokesman said that in terms of regulations any foreign journalists will be required to obtain temporary employment permits on their arrival in Zimbabwe. These permits can be obtained from the Department of Immigration, and press accreditation will be done by the Department of Information. An accreditation exercise for foreign journalists will take place on Tuesday 28 October when all foreign media representatives are asked to report to the Ministry of Information conference room in Linquenda House between 9 am and 4 pm. Local media representatives will be asked to report for accreditation at a later date. On entering the country foreign journalists will be issued with notices valid for 24 hours after which the holder will be required to report to the ministry for press accreditation. Under the regulations, the permit and press accreditation card will give the holder an opportunity to identify himself to government officials including police, army and air force personnel who may demand such accreditation papers from any journalist. EXTENT OF EEC AID TO AFRICA EXAMINED

London WEST AFRICA in English 20 Oct 80 pp 2060-61, 2063

[Article by Veronica Forrester]

[Text]

AID DISTRIBUTION under the Lomé II Convention is now well advanced. Although the new agreement between the EEC and 59 African Caribbean and Pacific States is unlikely to come into force before 1981, preparations for the distribution of aid are moving ahead.

Since the end of 1979, officials from the European Commission and European Investment Bank have been touring each of the ACP capitals for talks with the individual governments. These "programming missions" serve to lay down guidelines for the distribution of Community aid over the next five years. A few weeks prior to the arrival of the EEC team, each ACP government is informed in writing of how much aid it can expect to receive. This avoids the previous practice by which the EEC team arrived as a sort of Father Christmas announcing the "Goodies". Apart from anything else the latter practice led to a great deal of confusion as each state inevitably hoped to get more than it was allocated. As a result the EEC team was often confronted with enormous lists of projects for which the ACP State wished to receive aid.

This time each ACP State is aware of the allocation before the EEC team arrives. Another innovation is that projects are not specifically mentioned in the programme; it is only indicated how much of the aid package should, in percentage terms, be allocated to the key sectors such as rural development, industry, etc. Specific projects are of course discussed and kept in mind by the EEC officials but there is no fixed commitment to finance "x road".

Commission officials seem happy with this new arrangement as it provides for greater flexibility. However, whether or not the new method will lead to a faster distribution of aid remains to be seen. There is a clear danger that an aid request for a specific project may do the rounds of a number of offices in the Commission to ascertain whether it is acceptable for financing. This "appraisal" process may then become more complicated than at present — a fact recognised by both Commission and ACP officials.

Programming Mission to West Africa

Programming missions have already visited 18 West African States. With the exception of Chad and Liberia, aid programmes for the remaining West African States should be completed this autumn. The political situation in Chad makes it impossible to predict when an EEC team will visit N'Diamena. In the case of Liberia the original programming date was cancelled due to the human rights violations following the coup d'etat. Despite Liberian attempts to normalise EEC-Liberian relations, the Commission is maintaining its cautious approach. The Liberian Minister of Planning and Economic Affairs, Mr. Tipoteh, visited Brussels on September 19 for talks with EEC Development Commissioner Claude Cheysson in an attempt to ease relations. However, the Commission has still not said when the programming mission will take place and there is still no Commission Delegate in Monrovia. The Commission Delegate was recalled following the coup and has not been instructed to return.

The 18 West African States which have been visited can expect to receive between 882m. units of account ($1,234m.) and 1,009m. ua ($1,412m.) under the New Convention. This compares with approximately 800m. ua ($1,120m. at current rates), under the Lomé I Convention. This is aid earmarked solely for projects. More aid will be available under the Stabilisation of Export Earnings Scheme and emergency aid. The Community is also prepared to make a further 120-150m. ua ($168-210m.) available to support regional projects in West Africa and 50-60m. ua ($70-84m.) for Central Africa.

The details of the aid programmes so far completed are as follows:

Benin can expect to receive between 52 and 59m. ua ($72.8 – 82.6m.), mainly in grant form. This compares with 44.3m. ua ($62m.) under Lomé I. About 32 per cent of the aid has been earmarked for rural development projects; 30 per cent for economic infrastructure; 15 per cent for social infrastructure; 8 per cent for training and technical assistance; 7 per cent for mining and energy and the rest for studies. During the programming missions a number of projects were specifically discussed and these are likely to receive aid allocations: a national food production and storage programme, stock farming in Borgou; asphalting the Dassa-Parakou road and improving the road between Parakou and Njougou; the drawing up of a geological and mineral map of South Benin and support for the Lokassa secondary school.

Cape Verde can expect to receive between 15m. ua ($21m.) and 17m. ua ($23.8m.). This compares with about 4.5m. ua ($6.3m.) under Lomé I. Cape Verde joined the Lomé I Convention fairly late and so the first allocation was not so high. Most of the Lomé II aid will be given in grant form, 29 per cent in support of water supply projects; 21 per cent for transport, 17.5 per cent for technical assistance, 6 per cent for electricity production and supply projects and the balance for cottage industry development and micro projects. Two projects were specifically mentioned during the discussions namely the development of water supply for Praia and the development of the Sal international airport.

Cameroon can expect to receive between 65m. ua ($91m.) and 77m. ua ($107m.). This compares with about 74m. ua ($103.6m.) under the Lomé I Convention. About 20m. ua of the Lomé II aid will be given in the form of special loans and the rest as grants. About 50 per cent of the aid has been earmarked for transport projects (notably the realignment of the Edea-Maloume railway and improvements to some main roads); 39 per cent is for rural development and the balance for training, health, technical co-operation, trade promotion and micro-projects.

The European Investment Bank has promised about 45m. ua ($63m.) in the form of loans which will be used to improve the rubber plantation and oil palm plantations operated by Socapalm and Camder; completing the third section of the Trans-Cameroon railway, developing electricity production and supply and for forestry development.

The Central African Republic can expect to receive about 49m. ua ($68.8m.) again mainly in grant form. This compares with 35m. ua ($49m.) under Lomé I. About 39 per cent of the aid has been earmarked for infrastructure projects; 39 per cent for rural development; 11 per cent for social infrastructure and training; 4 per cent for mining, industry and energy and the balance for micro- or village level projects.

A number of projects were also specifically mentioned namely the establishment of an integrated scheme to produce cotton and coffee; an unloading ramp for the port of Bangui and support for the Bangui high school.

Congo will receive between 28m. ua ($39.2m.) and 32m. ua ($44.8m.) mainly in grant form. About 50 per cent of the funds have been earmarked for rural development; 30 per cent for social infrastructure and the balance for micro-projects, training and trade promotion. Projects specifically discussed were the asphalting of the Bihoma-Loudima road; support for the Etombi and Kunda plantations and support for the Loukabou medical college in Brazzaville.

Gabon can expect to receive between 14m. ua ($19.6m.) and 17.5m. ua ($24.5m.), about 5m. ua of which will be in the form of special loans. This compares with 26m. ua ($36.4m.) under the Lomé I Convention. The Gabonese were very disappointed with the aid allocation and issued a public statement saying that it neither met their expectations nor requirements. They pointed out that the Lomé I allocation, was less than the allocations received under the Yaounde Conventions in the 1960s and now the Lomé II allocation was even less than Lomé I. As a result the unilateral statement issued by the Gabonese called for a final aid figure in excess of 17.5m. ua.

As the aid programme stands at present 58 per cent of the funds will support rural development projects; 28 per cent mining and energy and the rest training and trade promotion. Four projects were specifically mentioned namely a reafforestation programme; the development of the Ogooue and Fernan Vaz valleys; the Mitzic rubber plantation programme and the drawing up of a detailed geological map of Gabon.

In addition to the European Development Fund allocation, the European Investment Bank has promised 10m. ua ($14m.) in loans to finance mainly mining and energy projects.

The Gambia will receive between 13m. ua ($18.2m.) and 16m. ua ($22.4m.), mainly in grant form. This compares with 11.3m. ua ($15.8m.) under the Lomé I Convention. About 20 per cent of the funds will support rural development and fishery projects; 30 per cent health schemes; 24 per cent infrastructure (river and land transport); 21 per cent for education and training and the balance to assist small and medium-sized firms.

Special Loans for Ghana

Ghana will receive between 55m. ua ($77m.) and 63m. ua ($88m.), 15.5m. ua of which will be in the form of special loans and the balance in grant form. This compares with about 50m. ua ($70m.) under the Lomé I Convention.

About 45 per cent of the funds will support rural development schemes in particular the Twifo palm oil project and the Enchi-Tema rubber project. A further 22.5 per cent of the funds will support transport projects with emphasis on improving communications in the Central Region; 8 per cent will support energy projects (biomass, solar energy and micro-hydroelectrical schemes). The rest of the aid will be used to support social infrastructure (housing in rural areas) and training schemes.

Guinea will receive between 74m. ua ($103.6m.) and 84m. ua ($117.6m.) This compares with about 65m. ua ($91m.) under the Lomé I Convention.

About 37 per cent of the funds will support rural development, agriculture, stock farming and fisheries projects; 12.5 per cent housing and 12.5 per cent social projects. The transport sector receives 10 per cent and the energy sector also 10 per cent. The balance will support cottage industries, mining research and technical assistance.

Guinea Bissau can expect to receive between 23m. ua ($32.2m.) and 27m. ua ($37.8m.). This compares with an allocation of about 20m. ua ($28m.) under Lomé I. Most of the Lomé II aid is again in grant form, 46 per cent of which will support agriculture, forestry and fisheries projects, 34 per cent economic and social infrastructure; 11 per cent training and technical assistance and the balance micro-projects. Projects specifically mentioned were the Balata Gabu integrated rural development scheme, the Casheu local fishing industry and the bridge over the river Campossa.

Ivory Coast can expect to receive between 43m. ua ($60.2m.) and 63m. ua ($88.2m.). This compares with approximately 40m. ua ($56m.) under the Lomé I Convention. About 66 per cent of the funds have been earmarked for agricultural and stock farming projects; 22 per cent for domestic water supply schemes and the balance for energy and trade promotion projects. Ivory Coast authorities are particularly interested in support for a national sheep programme, the establishment of stock farming in rural areas, a soya cultivation programme and the development of the food canning industry.

The European Investment Bank has also indicated that it may grant 60m. ua ($84m.) in loans for mining and energy studies and for the Soudre Dam HEP scheme.

Mauritania can expect to receive between 40m. ua ($56m.) and 46m. ua ($64.4m.) mostly in grant form. This compares with 35m. ua ($49m.) under the Lomé I Convention. The rural development sector will receive about 42 per cent of the funds; 25 per cent will support infrastructure projects notably road repairs and extensions of port facilities; 11 per cent of the funds will support the health sector, 9 per cent goes towards fish processing and the balance for the education sector and to finance geological and mining research programmes.

Niger will receive between 73m. ua ($102.2m.) and 84m. ua ($117.6m.). This compares with 68.5m. ua ($95.9m.) under the Lomé I Convention.

About 25 per cent of the funds have been earmarked to support rural development projects (notably the Namarde-Goungou agricultural scheme and finance for the second phase of a cattle raising development plan); 20 per cent for transport projects (additional work to the Birni-N'Konni/Guidan Roumdji road and on the Zinder-Mirriah road). About 18 per cent of the funds will support education and training schemes; 15 per cent social sector projects; 8 per cent energy projects and the balance industrial and trade promotion schemes.

Senegal can expect to receive between 65m. ua ($91m.) and 75m. ua ($105m.). This compares with 62m. ua ($86.8m.) under the Lomé I Convention. About a third of the aid will be given in the form of special loans and the balance in grant form. The rural development sector is expected to receive about 31 per cent of the total funds; education projects 17 per cent; infrastructure 16 per cent. Projects specifically mentioned were a village water supply scheme along the Senegal river and in the east of the country, construction of the second stage of the National Nursing School and phase 2 of the Dianke-Makam-Kedougou road; and improvements to the Gueule Tapee district and repairs to the Front de Terre road.

Sierra Leone will receive between 45m. ua ($63m.) and 52m ua ($72.8m.) mainly in grant form. This compares with about 32.5m ua ($45.5m.) under the Lomé I Convention.

About 40 per cent of the funds have been earmarked for rural development and fisheries projects. The government is keen to receive aid to promote cash crop products, particularly tree crops and introduce new agricultural techniques. The aid will also be used to promote the development of disease resistant livestock particularly at smallholder level and finally to promote inland and coastal fishing.

About 20 per cent of the funds will be used for social development projects, in particular schemes to expand primary education and improve health services in rural areas. A further 20 per cent of the funds have been earmarked for infrastructure projects, notably improving drinking water supplies in rural areas, developing domestic energy resources and improving roads.

Togo can expect to receive between 40m. ua ($56m.) and 46m. ua ($64.4m.) mainly in grant form. This compares with 34.4m. ua ($48m.) under Lomé I.

About 41 per cent of the aid package has been earmarked for infrastructure; 35 per cent for agriculture; 7 per cent for education and training and the rest for trade promotion, technical assistance and micro-projects. Among the projects specifically mentioned was a stock farming programme, the development of the Kara valley and improvements to the Lomé-Blitta road.

Rural Support for Upper Volta

Upper Volta will receive between 78m. ua ($109.2m.) and 89m. ua ($124.6m.). This compares with about 68m. ua ($95.2m.) under the Lomé I Convention.

About 38 per cent of the aid has been earmarked to support rural development in particular rural water supply projects. About 22 per cent will support the transport sector (specific mention being made of asphalting the Ouagadougou-Yako road). About 19 per cent will support energy and mining projects and the remainder education and social projects.

Zaire will receive between 110m. ua ($154m.) and 112m. ua ($156.8m.). This compares with about 100m. ua ($140m.) under the Lomé I Convention.

About 40 per cent of the aid has been earmarked for transport schemes, in particular projects which improve access links to the sea and rural areas. Improvements will notably be made to the Akula-Gemena road, the Kitwit-Batshamba road and rural roads in the Ubangi and Shaba provinces. A further 30 per cent of the funds will support rural development schemes. Specific mention was made of agricultural development schemes in the Gosuma and Bulu regions and the development of fish canning industries along the Zaire river. Energy and industry projects will receive about 13 per cent of the aid, part of which will support the Tshaba electricity project, improve water supplies in Kinshasa and develop a hydrated lime and aluminium sulphate plant and a bitumen plant

DETAILS OF GHANA-NIGERIA AGREEMENT

Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 16 Oct 80 p 3

[Article by Edward Ameyibor, GNA Correspondent, Lagos]

[Text] Ghana and Nigeria have signed an agreement establishing a permanent joint commission to promote bilateral relations and strengthen economic, political and social relations between them.

Dr Yakubu Saaka, Deputy Foreign Minister who led a 12-man delegation here, signed for Ghana while Mrs Adenike Oyagbola, Minister of National Planning, signed for Nigeria.

The agreement envisages cooperation in agriculture, civil aviation, trade, energy, education and culture.

Negotiations to this end started in 1978 between the late Ghanaian leader General Frederick Akuffo and General Olusegun Obasanjo when the former visited Nigeria. It was revived by President Hilla Limann when he paid a similar visit last year.

Since then experts have worked hard to put the ideas of their leaders into concrete form which was initialled in Accra last April.

The Parliaments of both countries are expected to ratify the agreement to make it operative.

Under the agreement, Nigeria will participate in the exploitation and processing of the bauxite of Kibi to help the aluminium industries of the two countries.

On trade, the two countries will meet soon to discuss details of the potential areas of cooperation while in education and culture, Nigeria sought Ghana's help for teachers and the training of qualified personnel in Ghanaian institutions.

Much progress has already been made in civil aviation and further discussions in this area will continue next January.

Commenting on the deliberations, Mrs Oyagbola said they were very successful, stressing that the package of ideas agreed upon, if followed by action, would boost the econmies of both countries.

She noted in an interview with the GNA, the history of Ghana-Nigeria cooperation in the past and said: "Our talks are an important re-start."

CENTRAL AFRICAN POWER CORPORATION PLANS DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 22 Oct 80 p 4

[Text]

THE Central African Power Corporation which supplies electricity to many institutions in Zambia and Zimbabwe is to spend about K3 million on development projects in the country.

Regional transmission engineer in Lusaka Mr Ken Brooks said yesterday that Zambia was posed to earn between K24 and K25 million this year in foreign exchange from exporting electricity to Zimbabwe.

Zambia will soon become independent of Capco's electricity control centre in Sherwoord, Zimbabwe, when a K14 million national control centre owned and operated by the Zambia Electricity Supply Corporation (Zesco) is commissioned.

"Some of Zesco's engineers were in Sherwood recently to see how our high voltage system is operated and they are now back and busy commissioning theirs," said Mr Brooks.

Capco will be Zesco's consultants in the operations of the national control centre for about a year.

Capco intend to have two additional transformers at their Leopards Hill sub-station in Lusaka to cost K2 million. The present transformer capacity has been found to be too small to cope with the growing demand.

In addition the company is about to commission a static compensator supplied by a Finnish company at the Luano sub-station near Chingola to maintain voltage, at a cost of K1.2 million.

Both projects are being entirely financed from Capco's own resources.

Mr Brooks said there were signs of increasing the demand for power in Zambia with the cobalt development in the mines, the proposed electrification of Zambia Railways and other industrial projects.

Zimbabwe has all along dominated the supply of power from the jointly owned Kariba Dam complex.

The two countries have a 50-50 agreement of the power and Zambia which cannot take her share exports her surplus to her partner.

"From what I see, demand will not be sudden but will certainly continue with a slow growth," said Mr Brooks.

Meanwhile, representatives of the partners of the joint company will meet in Lusaka next month.

MALAWI DENIES DESIGNS ON ZAMBIAN TERRITORY

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 17 Oct 80 p 1

[Text] Malawi's high commissioner to Zambia, Mr Joseph Itimu, has rebuked people who spread rumours that his country "wants to grab part of Zambian territory."

Describing the charges as fabrication, Mr. Itimu reiterated an earlier statement from President Kamuzu Banda's office that his country "has never claimed any part of a neighbouring country's territory and she cannot and will not do so."

The high commissioner particularly singled out exiled former cabinet minister Kanyama Chiume for trying to exploit rumours from the "columns of irresponsible journalists."

Mr Chiume, who fled his country together with five cabinet ministers after major policy differences with Dr Banda in 1964, has now formed his own "Congress for the Second Republic."

Following reports that Malawi claimed that the Zambian customs and immigration posts at Mwami lay within Malawian territory which should be handed back to the Lilongwe government, Mr Chiume cabled President Kaunda and said:

"The Congress for the Second Republic of Malawi publicly dissociates itself from deplorable claims of the Banda regime for part of Zambian territory."

But Mr Itimu dismissed Mr Chiume as a propagandist who had no following inside Malawi.

Asked if a border dispute existed between the two countries, the high commissioner said lawyers from Malawi and Zambia had only been detailed to redefine the border line following suspicion that about two buildings of the Zambian customs and immigration post were on Malawian soil.

Meanwhile, Prime Minister Mr Daniel Lisulo arrived in Blantyre yesterday for a three-day official visit to Malawi.

Mr Lisulo's 18-man delegation includes Mrs Betty Kaunda, Power Transport and Communications Minister, General Kingsley Chinkuli and Works and Supply Minister Mr Haswell Mwale.

S. AFRICAN RAILWAYS LIFTS EMBARGO ON GOODS TO ZAMBIA, ZIMBABWE, ZAIRE

Lusaka ZAMBIA DAILY MAIL in English 17 Oct 80 p 3

[Text] South African Railways has lifted the embargo which was imposed on the loading of goods for rail freight to Zambia, Zimbabwe and Zaire about two weeks ago.

A Zambian Railways spokesman confirmed in Kabwe that the embargo was lifted last Friday and that several goods which include a large tonnage of fertiliser, had started arriving in the country.

Early this month, a SAR spokesman announced in Durban that a three-day embargo on all rail freight to Zambia, Zimbabwe and Zaire had been declared because of congestion on the two rail lines to the north.

The spokesman added that the three-day embargo could be extended if the congestion had not been sufficiently eased. The main cause of the congestion was the recent arrival in Durban of several shiploads of commodities for the three countries, including cereal, sulphur and potash.

A few days later, SAR announced the extensions of the embargo from three to seven days to relieve congestion on their line.

It was explained that there had been an unprecedented loading of cargo for Zambia, Zimbabwe and Zaire as well within South Africa itself which had caused a buildup on the entire system.

Explaining the situation on the Zambian side, a ZR spokesman said that traffic in the country, while heavy, was not abnormal at this time.

An official from the Contingency Planning, Mr Adrian Chuzu, has advised importers to use the cheapest and shortest routes to speed up the clearing of goods from the ports.

Speaking at the one-day seminar organised by the Lusaka Chamber of Commerce and Industry at Lusaka's Inter-Continental Hotel, Mr Chuzu said plans were by the Contingency Office to find alternative routes to the ports to ensure that the goods arrive in Zambia quickly and safely.

"In order to achieve this, importers should work hand in hand with clearing agencies because it would be wise for importers to ask the Zambian Government to clear the goods when the clearing agencies have branches or representatives at all the ports, he added.

Tazara has a lot of problems but there are new routes which are working efficiently like the southern one and the Beira route via Moatize and Katete in the Eastern Province, he said.

The Katete-Moatize road is fully operational and work on it was completed in September.

Mr Chuzu, who requested importers to use Beira port and Umtali-Victoria Falls route, Moatize and Salisbury-Lions Den via Chirundu routes, added that the only problem with the southern rail route was that Zambia Railways and South African Railways do not allow more than 2,000 wagons on the north of the Victoria Falls.

"However, we are containing the situation, we are doing exactly what they want and we receive daily reports from Zambia Railways on the number of wagons from South Africa," he said.

CHADIAN TROOPS IN NIGERIA--The Deputy Chief of Army Staff, Major-General M.O. Wushishi, has given assurances to the inhabitants of the Nigeria-Chadian border that the alleged invasions and killings of Nigerians in the area by fleeing Chadian troops would be checked and stopped if the allegations proved true. The general said that several reports reaching Lagos alleged molestations and killings of citizens in the border towns by the Chadian troops. Major-General Wushishi said he had sent Brigadier J.A. Kpera, Director of Army Engineers, to visit the area and report to him "for appropriate measures to be taken." Other reports from Maiduguri said that over 2,672 Chadian refugees made up of soldiers and civilians were being catered for, by Nigerian troops in the area. The reports say that it was impossible to check immigration of Chadian nationals into Nigeria. A government statement, however, said that the major problem facing the refugees was housing. They were reported to have sufficient food and medical facilities provided by army authorities. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English 20 Oct 80 p 2085]

SUGAR OUTPUT NORMAL, HELP FOR POPULATION ANNOUNCED

Beira NOTICIAS DA BEIRA in Portuguese 25 Sep 80 p 5

[Excerpts] The national sugar campaign for 1980-1981 is proceeding normally throughout Angola, specifically in the country's northern and central areas, according to a report published by the JORNAL DE ANGOLA in its Wednesday edition.

Located in Benguela Province, the 1 May Sugar Refinery, one of the country's largest with 3,200 workers, expects to produce 20,000 tons of sugar by the end of the season.

With a daily production of 3,500 kilograms of cane, the refinery's current levels of productivity are better than they were in colonial times, in the opinion of the director of that production unit.

More Support for Inhabitants

The second meeting of provincial commissioners from all over the country was held from 22 to 23 September. The participants advised the organizations concerned to take steps to meet the population's needs in the areas of agriculture, housing, transportation, and electricity.

At that meeting--it is held every 6 months--it was also decided to give major consideration to the rural inhabitants by providing them with seed, fertilizer, hoes, tractors, and essential items.

The participants also decided to pay special attention to do-it-yourself construction in the rural areas.

Evaristo Kimba, minister of provincial coordination and member of the MPLA-Labor Party's Political Bureau, admonished the participants in the meeting to do everything possible to see that the decisions reached at the meeting are carried out.

SUCCESSFUL COFFEE HARVEST ANNOUNCED

Beira NOTICIAS DA BEIRA in Portuguese 25 Sep 80 p 5

[Text] About 90,000 tons of coffee have been harvested to date as part of the fifth harvest, which began last 1 June. That is what ANGOP [ANGOLAN PRESS AGENCY] was told by Alvaro Faria, general manager of ENCAFE (National Coffee Enterprise), who also said that the operation will be completed within the next few days.

In summarizing production at the provincial level, Alvaro Faria said that Kwanza-Sul is in first place with 36,500 [copy not clear] tons, followed by Uige (27,950 tons), Kwanza-Norte (18,546 tons), Cabinda (1,603 tons), and Malange (738 tons).

In the same connection, ENCAFE's general manager said that "this harvest has been a success" and that "by the end of the month (the harvest has not yet ended because of late ripening of the fruit, chiefly in Bengo Province and certain municipalities in Kwanza-Norte), it is certain that a minimum of 2,000 additional tons will be harvested. That means that this harvest will be 2.5 times greater than that in 1979." But it is already the largest since independence.

Alvaro Faria said that this year the RPA [People's Republic of Angola] will export 48,000 tons of commercial coffee, and he felt that "no drop in production is in sight at present. We will be able to move ahead by 1981 to a slight increase in exported tonnage. The increase should be on the order of 5 or 10 percent."

It should be remembered that the total production figure will not be known until the end of the current season, when the exact figures will be in from the peasants and cooperative members and from the sector responsible to the Ministry of Agriculture.

NEITHER SIDE REPORTED GAINING IN CIVIL WAR

Brazzaville LA SEMAINE AFRICAINE in French 2-8 Oct 80 p 4

[Text] After 6 months of civil war at Ndjamena between President Goukouni Oueddei's partisans and Hissein Habre's Armed Forces of the North (FAN) it is still not possible to distinguish a winner, and the positions of the protagonists are practically the same as at the beginning of the conflict, it is reported by the FRENCH PRESS AGENCY [AFP]. Oueddei's Peoples Armed Forces (FAP) and his allies of the Joint Action Front (FAC)--pro-Libyan, Arab--which is led by Ahmat Acyl, Minister of Foreign Affairs, and Mahamat Abba Said, Minister of the Interior, are still installed in the administrative European city, which has been deserted by its inhabitants, as well as in the village of Farcha, along the Chari River (behind the former French base evacuated last May).

For their part Habre's Armed Forces of the North control the African city at Kousseri on the other side of the river; a large part of the population which had fled from it to Cameroon have returned to their quarters where the houses have apparently not suffered from the fights and bombardments which, nevertheless, are almost a daily occurrence. This is one of the paradoxes of the war. However, as well as the AFP correspondent could recently ascertain, the FAN are constantly and perseveringly chipping away the positions of their adversaries.

On the southern front the FAN positions are now 20 kilometers from Ndjamena, facing the Chadian Armed Forces of Col Wadal Abdelkader Kamougue, vice-chairman of the National Union Transition Government (GUNT).

On the way to the command post for this front, along the road, which has just been graded by the FAN's "military engineers" following the rainy season, one sees the carcasses of Land Rovers of the Chadian Armed Forces, victims of direct hits by anti-tank rockets. "There is all that remains of Kamougue's last offensive, which enabled us to capture a large amount of equipment," stated Idriss Miskine, Hissein Habre's deputy.

At the command post there is no excitement but an obvious firm determination among the some 300-400 combatants.

Installed in a number of heavily armed positions around a former brick factory, they are awaiting a possible attack by the southern forces, whose last offensive goes back to the month of June.

At the northern outskirts of Ndjamena, where the new road joins, the FAN positions have also been enlarged. Fighting for control of the village of Deguel, where many houses have been raked, and gutted, by shells and bullets, has ceased.

Habre's forces are holding advanced positions not far from the end of the Ndjamena airport runway, toward the former explosives magazine.

In the city itself, in spite of intensified gunfire, the positions remain stable. The presidential palace is held by President Goukouni's FAP. The "Camp du Treize," despite numerous bombardments, is hardly damaged, and the FAN combattants have installed their encampments in the rear buildings.

In the Beguinage district, severely damaged, an impressive calm prevails between the bombardments. The airport now seems to be the stake in the next combats, after the gendarme headquarters, still held by the FAP. In this entire sector there is only desolation and abandonment, whereas 500 meters behind, beyond the Saint Martin Basin, in the African city held by Habre's forces, life is normal, and Bololo, one of the FAP districts of Ndjamena, is still equally alive.

ADDITIONAL EEC HELP TO CFCO

London WEST AFRICA in English 20 Oct 80 p 2093

[Text]

Additional aid to complete the modernisation and realignment of the Congo-Ocean Railway (CFCO) has been made avilable by the European Economic Community which decided in Brussels recently to give the project supplementary assistance worth 6.86m. EUA (1 EUA = $1.3) from the resources of the fourth European Development Fund. Further help is also expected once the new Lomé Convention enters into force.

EEC assistance to Congo under the new Convention is expected to total between 28 to 32m. EUA. Aid will also be forthcoming from the regional chapter of the Fund which has earmarked 50m. EUA for regional projects in Central Africa.

The need for additional aid for the CFCO project became clear at the meeting of aid donors held in Paris in April this year. The cost of the project is now estimated at about 258.6m EUA, compared with the initial project estimate of 113.8m EUA drawn up in July 1975. The increase in costs had been caused by a higher rate of world inflation than that initially forecast and technical problems caused by varying types of soil.

Following the Paris meeting, the Congolese Government asked the EEC, which had already given about 18.6m. EUA to the project, to supply additional assistance worth 18.5m. EUA. Although only a part of the Congolese request has been met by the EEC to date, there are indications that further assistance will be coming from the EDF under the new Lomé Convention.

EEC officials note that the realignment of the railway, which is of vital importance not only to Congo but also to the neighbouring states, will increase the traffic capacity of the line, and allow for transport regularity and reliability and lower railway operating costs.

EEC aid to Congo over the next five years is expected to focus on two major sectors: rural development and the improvement of health and social conditions. The EEC will help to build the Jean-Joseph Loukabou paramedical training school in Brazzaville, and will draw up a study for the construction of the Ouesso hospital. EEC aid is also expected to improve Brazzaville airport, the Rai Route bridge on the Congo river and to renovate the Suco sugar refinery.

MANDATORY SANCTIONS AGAINST PRETORIA REGIME CALLED FOR

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 19 Oct 80 p 2

[Editorial]

[Text]

The independent countries of Africa, along with progressive and peace-loving member countries of the United Nations Organization have been consistently calling for the imposition of mandatory sanctions against fascist South Africa.

In all international and regional forums, spokesmen of the Organization of African Unity and representatives of individual African states have often been campaigning, and continue to do so, for the isolation of the apartheid regime and the application of all-round mandatory sanctions against it.

The arrogant posture of the Pretoria regime in the face of demands by the international community to put an end to its infamous policy of racial segregation and its persistent acts of armed aggression against neighbouring independent states continues to pose threat to peace and security, both regional and global.

All UN member countries are duty-bound to work in earnest towards removing such a visible danger to peace, security and meaningful co-operation among the peoples of the world.

The United Nations has long ruled that the policy of apartheid and racial discrimination represents a crime against humanity. As part of efforts to eliminate that evil, the world community, through the mechanism of the United Nations forum, has demanded the application of total arms embargo against South Africa.

Yet, in open defiance of relevant UN resolutions to observe strict arms embargo against the apartheid regime, the capitalist Western powers and some puppet regimes continue to militarily collaborate with the Pretoria racists, including co-operation in the nuclear sphere.

Needless to say, this mean and irresponsible policy stance of the countries grouped in NATO and their accomplices such as Zionist Israel is becoming an obstacle to the campaign being mounted by many developing countries and progressive and socialist states to bring about the abolition of apartheid rule in southern Africa.

The racist authorities of South Africa are drawing strength and encouragement from the support they get from the imperialist Western powers, which are also not co-operating with African efforts to deprive the Botha regime of oil supplies. Fascist South Africa could not have been that adamant to ignore the will of the African peoples and their sympathisers had to not enjoyed the crucial support of the West.

It must be stressed at this juncture that the Pretoria regime should not be allowed any more to defy the will of the majority of peoples of our planet. Nor can progressive mankind let the Western powers imperil, through their further support to fascist South Africa, the future of peace and security of the peoples.

Those countries that violate, with impunity, UN resolutions demanding strict arms and oil embargo against the racist Pretoria regime should be subjected to appropriate punitive measures, as provided by the UN Charter. Mere condemnation of apartheid and stressing the threat it poses to international peace and security could not bring about the much desired result.

Only recently, on October 11, the forces of peace and progress in the world observed International Solidarity Day with Political Prisoners in South Africa. The event highlighted the urgency to step up joint struggle towards the restoration of freedom and justice in southern Africa.

On the solemn occasion, progressive and democratic forces of the world renewed their call for the observance of basic human rights and dignity in southern Africa. They further called on all freedom and peace-loving forces of the world to come out strongly more than ever before in support of the struggling masses of Namibia and South Africa.

Today, the South African racists stand condemned before the eyes of progressive mankind, because of their dismal failure to heed the call of reason and human decency. Their continued arrogance and adventurism, however, is heading them towards a disgraceful end even though they seem not prepared to admit it.

ERITREAN WOMEN'S LEADER PRAISES WOMAN'S ROLE IN STRUGGLE

Kuwait AL-QABAS in Arabic 25 Sep 80 p 5

[Article by Alfit Qatamish: "President of National Federation of Eritrean Women Says That Women in Eritrea Have a Social and Militant Role"]

[Text] President of the National Federation of Eritrean Women Miss Lul Gebre Ab praised the role of Eritrean women in the liberation battle with the Ethiopian forces, and told AL-QABAS, "The Eritrean woman has begun to share in various social and economic activities, in addition to participating in the fighting alongside the revolutionaries. She has a role in political guidance and social awareness because of her qualifications and concern."

The president of the federation, who is currently visiting Kuwait, pointed out, "The fighting Eritrean woman is the vanguard of our women, and has had a major role in spreading the spirit of vigilance and guidance among the ranks of Eritrean women."

She added, "What has helped the Eritrean woman to give of herself in a good, methodical manner is her membership in various societies and federations, each one of which has its own special features and spheres."

Speaking of Eritrean women's participation in world women's federations, she said, "Eritrean women held their constituent congress on the national level in November 1979.

"The purpose of the congress was to unify the women so they could struggle to liberate the homeland and participate in the country's civilian and social life.

"In February 1980, the regional (Middle East) conference of Eritrean women was held in Khartoum. In addition, a regional conference was convened in Europe a few days ago, at which time the mass organizations requested Eritrean women overseas--wives, workers and students--to play their part in the struggle.

"A number of seminars were also held in anticipation of the sixth campaign during which the Ethiopian regime intends to make use of poison gas. These organizations requested the world authorities to provide financial and material aid to Eritrea to enable the revolution to confront these challenges."

In response to a question about the natural social life of Eritrean women, she said, "Marriage is a social problem which cannot be separated from the other issues concerning women. The Popular Front for the Liberation of Eritrea has drawn up a marriage law giving the Eritrean woman the opportunity to participate effectively in the struggle. It provides that marriage should not stand in the way of the struggle but should aid it, because the woman's natural life can help her in the struggle; with the provision that the female combatant has the full right to choose her partner without pressure, as was the case in the past, and provided that she have the first and last say in forming the integrated, happy family."

BORA DISTRICT PEASANTS ASSOCIATIONS AT WOLBA STATUS

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 14 Oct 80 pp 1, 6

[Excerpts] Alem Tena (ENA)--Three kebele peasants' associations in Bora district of Haikotch-Butagira province, Shoa region, organized themselves into Wolba--second level of co-operative--and received a certificate to that effect Sunday.

The certificate of legal recognition at Wolba level peasants' co-operative was handed over to the Malima, Jarawayo and Teriberi peasants' associations by Comrade Debela Dinsa, COPWE Central Committee member and COPWE representative for Shoa region.

Speaking on the occasion, Comrade Debela noted the importance of incorporating the means of production and of working along co-operative lines for the consolidation and development of the country's economy and declared that the moves being taken in the different parts of the country towards consolidating existing producers' co-operatives and establishing new ones have become a source of inspiration for farther advances.

Earlier, Comrade Ashebir stated that so far three producers' co-operatives have been formed in the province and that 26 other peasants' associations are presently intensifying their preparations to raise their level of co-operation to that of producers.

PULP WOOD AREAS IDENTIFIED, PAPER INDUSTRY DESCRIBED

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 17 Oct 80 p 5

[Text] Addis Ababa (ENA)--Scientific research into the vegetation and climatic characteristics of the highland area stretching from the Wonji plains to Assela in Arasi region has provided conclusive evidence that pulp wood could be cultivated in that part of the country.

This was disclosed by Comrade Guebre-Kiros Habtu, General Manager of the Ethiopian Paper Paper and Pulp Factory in an exclusive interview with the Ethiopian News Agency. The factory, the only one of its kind in the country, has so far been utilizing imported raw materials. The general manager said due to limited marketing outlets and various other constraints, the factory could neither produce pulp nor operate on a self-sustaining basis. Comrade Guebre-Kiros noted that the nearly 11-year-old factory in fact incurred considerable loss during the first three years of its operation due primarily to the conspiracy of then largely private printing presses which then imported paper stocks enough for that period of time. An American firm which held one-third the factory shares was later obliged to sell its stock to the Agricultural and Industrial Bank.

The general manager said thanks to timely and decisive measures taken by the bank and technical assistance provided by the Finnish Government, the Ethiopian Paper and Pulp Factory has since overcome most of the obstacles in its way. He stated that the factory achieved production quotas of 117.5 percent and 119 percent respectively during the first and second development campaigns.

The general manager pointed out, morever, that plans have been finalized for the modernization and expansion of existing production facilities which, when fully accomplished early in 1982 at a cost of 2.6 million Birr, is expected to raise the current production of 8,000 tons to 12,000 tons annually.

Comrade Guebre-Kiros said also that there are plans for installing machinery which should enable the factory to produce 30,000 tons of pulp within five years and of establishing another factory which is expected to produce 30,000 tons of pulp from sugar molasses within a year. The two projects provide for a total outlay of 143 million Birr, of which around 100 million Birr is earmarked for imported goods. By the time the plans are made fully operational it was noted, the factory will have employed 400 additional workers.

Steps have meanwhile been taken to replace fuel heating by hydro-generated electrical heating of a cost of 1.8 million Birr in order to cut expenses on the import of oil, according to the general manager. The Ethiopian Paper and Pulp Factory, which imports most of its raw material needs from Sweden, Finland and France, presently produces various kinds of paper for printing, office and industrial use. There are plans to import some of the raw materials from Romania, it was noted.

Comrade Guebre-Koris said the high demand for paper which the Revolutionary Government's educational and literacy programmes will occasion makes the project of cultivating pulp wood all the more timely and urgent.

The Ethiopian Paper and Pulp Factory presently produces 28,000 kilograms of paper daily while the country's annual needs of the commodity is around 25,000 tons.

LAND CULTIVATION, EXPECTED YIELDS DETAILED

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 19 Oct 80 p 8

[Text]

ASSELA (EH) — A good crop yield is expected from the state farms covering 40,731 hectares in Arssi region.

The crops which will be ready for harvest within a period of two months comprise wheat cultivated over 37,932 hectares of land and rape seed, maize and barley cultivated over 1,426,771 and 632 hectares respectively. The technicians at the farms have overhauled the combine harvesters at their disposal and the managers are awaiting the arrival of more combines.

According to on-the-spot briefing given to journalists, on the problems encountered and the preparations being made towards the proper harvesting of the crops, very law yield of rape seed is anticipated mainly due to climatic factors.

Most of the experts at the state farms refrained from estimating the yield per hectares at the present stage. Assuming climatic conditions to be normal, some of them said that 12-15 quintals of wheat could be harvested from one hectare and foresaw greater yield of barley.

Targets and Performance

The plan for the second-round development campaign called for cultivation of 66,436 hectares of land by the state farms in the region. Hence, implementation of the plan required the cultivation of 55,600 hectares of additional land than the previous year. But the additional land brought under cultivation this year is only 30,079 hectares.

It was learnt that the land under the state farms before the launching of the National Revolutionary Development Campaign was only about 6,000 hectares, and there were only four state farms including the Dixis farm which was opened in 1970 E.C. During the current campaign year, two new state farms, Adelle and Goffer, have been established and cultivated cereals over 12,600 hectares of land.

Several Factors

Asked why the envisaged amount of land was not cultivated the experts and the officials enumerated several factors. Lack of surveying inadequate data at the time of planning, shortage of machinery, manpower and service are some of the difficulties encountered during the campaign for the implementation of the plan. Infact, the top officials in the region lauded the performance of the experts and the farm workers and termed the work tremendous taking into account the difficulties encountered.

Officials in all the state farms complained about shortage of spare parts. Especially, in the premises of Adelle State farm one sees a number of tractors and farm machinery which are out of use. Some of the machines remain out of operation for minor defects.

Workers at the estates were said to be performing their duties diligently in co-operation with the management. Those who don't read and write attend literacy course regularly. The management assists the workers union in improving living and working conditions.

The workers and members of the management expressed resolve to work at higher rate of productivity during the next campaign period. According to the experts in the estates, the farms require more skilled manpower for better performance and expansion. The officials in the region called upon the Ministry of State Farms to look for ways and means of securing the required spare parts for the farm machinery.

REASONS FOR LOW FISHING INDUSTRY PRODUCTION NOTED

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 18 Oct 80 p 6

[Article by Girma Lemma in the column "Spotlight": "Ethiopia's Fishery Resources"]

[Excerpt] In Ethiopia, the area covered by lakes amounts to about 7000 kms. There are several major rivers with valuable fish species. The country has about 1000 kms. of coast line on the Red Sea. Its inland waters harbour about 110 species of fish. Since no detailed survey has so far been done, it is certain that there are more species still unknown to us. There is also very little information on the details of the fish potentials of Ethiopian waters. The knowledge that we have is very general and is based on estimates relating our waters with those of Kenya, Uganda, and Tanzania about whose lakes and rivers there is more concrete information. Hence, the need for at least a preliminary study of our fish and fisheries potential cannot be overemphasized.

The commercially valuable species of fish of our inland waters are, in order of importance, Tilapia nilotica (Koroso), Clarias mossambicus, Barbus gregorii, Lates niloticus and Bagrus docmac. There are other species with localized importances.

In Ethiopia both coastal and offshore fisheries, especially the latter, are under-exploited and this is generally true in the case of all developing countries. The under utilization of the marine fish resourcesis accounted for by the absence of meaningful mechanization and lack of modern fishing gears and techniques. In Ethiopia, capture methods employed range from spearing and harpooning to seines and tawls. Some of the techniques used are hand catching in drying lagoons and flooded fields, digging out lungfish from their burrows (i.e. Barro river) and line and other devices such as traps, gill nets, lift nets and cast nets.

Non-mechanized fishing vessels generally operate up to a distance of about 40km from the shore for about 15-16 days in a month, and only 40% of the time is spent in actual fishing, the remaining time being spent in waiting for favourable wind and in reaching to and returning from fishing grounds. Mechanized boats, on the other hand, are able to extend their range of fishing area to about 80 kms. from the shore for 22-24 days in a month and nearly 70% of the time of absence from the port is spent in actual fishing. Mechanized vessels are also able to land their catches in fresh conditions at proper marketing times. In Ethiopia there are only a few mechanized boats used for fishing.

Another underdeveloped aspect and hence, a cause for low efficiency in fisheries in Ethiopia is the use of fishing gears which are made from very crude materials. In Ethiopia as well as in many other developing countries where division of labour is less specialized in comparison with the developed countries, there are fishermen who spin their own fibres and braid their own nets. Wooden floats, stones, shells, lumps of coral and baked clay may also constitute the fishing gear. Fibres of many plants are still the main raw materials for net making. All natural fibres are susceptible to the attack of microorganisms which thrive very well in humid and tropical areas. Moreover, there is the danger of rotting in immersion of long duration or by storage. Most of the synthetic fibres, however, are resistant to setting and they dry immediately after they are pulled out of the water. The synthetic fibres are resistant to abrasions which could be either chaffing against sand and pebbles on the sea bed or against the boat. This will eliminate the time spent in repairing. There are more advantages to the use of synthetic fibres in net making and hence, introduction of these nets will increase the efficiency of our fishermen.

In short, we need to have better information about our fisheries through scientific surveys on the types and numbers of fish in our water bodies. We should also improve our technology for catching fish, be it in inland waters or in marine habitats. The practice of fish culture should also be introduced step by step. A special educational programme geared to the improvement of our fish production needs to be established.

LEATHER INDUSTRY--Addis Ababa (ENA)--The reputation of Ethiopian sheep and goat hides and skins on the world market is growing steadily and the foreign currency earning potential of the commodity is considerable, it was disclosed here yesterday. The head of the commercial section of the National Leather and Shoes Corporation, Comrade Getachew Desta, said here that the foreign exchange earning capacity of the product could be greatly boosted if proper steps are taken towards qualitative and quantitative improvement. He said the recent international leather fair held in Paris which he attended was notable for the preponderance of sellers over buyers because of the soaring prices of leather products in the capitalist countries. Ethiopia's share of the 1980 export season is 2,000,000 Birr worth of leather products compared to 5,000,000 Birr last year due to the instability of the world leather market, Comrade Getachew said. Comrade Getachew disclosed that the corporation has completed preparations to open hide and skin receiving centres in three major towns while there is a plan to open three others. USSR VAVILOV INSTITUTE AGRICULTURAL DELEGATION

Libreville L'UNION in French 27-28 Sep 80 p 4

[Article by Obaine Emane]

[Text] Continuing its series of visits across the African continent, the delegation from the Soviet Institute of Agricultural Research (Vavilov Institute) led by Mrs Sophia Bakhyareva, department head, and including Messrs Varadinov and Pod Kouithenko, institute experts, has been at Libreville since 18 September.

To comprehend the object of this visit, it is necessary to go back to the activities of this institute which consist of collecting, from all over the world, certain vegetable species, both cultivated and growing in the wild, of good value, and which it conserves under climatological conditions suitable for each species.

According to Moise Obiang, Director of Studies and Research in the Ministry of Agriculture, interest in such conservation is based upon the fact that some useful species may disappear, either because of pollution or changed atmospheric conditions (drought, for example). In such case the Vavilov Institute, as in the case of Japan which had lost a particular variety of rice, can deliver the disappeared species without charge to any who request it, even if not of its own country.

That is why, during the course of visits to CIAM (Center for Introduction and Improvement of Vegetable Materials) and the SONADECI [expansion unknown] banana project at Ntoum, on the one hand, and at Akok, Cocobeach, and Lambarene on the other, the Soviet delegation collected specimens of corn, peanut, soya, alytosanthe, sweet potato, rice, and other wild species. In this connection let us state that the Vavilov Institute has just perfected techniques to conserve seeds for a period of 50 years. In addition, it has recently undertaken a study looking toward conservation, for a like period, of tubercules and slips of plants with food value. It must also be pointed out that the Soviet experts have delivered to the Ministry of Agriculture 50 varieties of plants with food value, cultivated in the USSR, for experimentation in a humid, tropical region. In that ministry it is stated that the observation will be provided by the CIAM and IRAF (Agronomics and Forestry Research Institute).

At Sebang, on the Kango highway, Sophia Bakhyareva and her co-workers became acquainted with some of our forest species, notably okoume, douka, ozigo, limba, okala, and podouk.

On Thursday, 18 September, they had a working session with Gabonese experts in agriculture, with director general of the Ministry, Paul Kounda Kiki, as chairman.

Stating the conclusions drawn from her visit Sophia Bakhyareva expressed satisfaction to see the efforts undertaken by the Gabonese government to promote agriculture and rural development.

MESSAGE TO BANI-SADR, HUSSEIN--Greatly disturbed by the Iraq-Iran conflict, President Bongo yesterday sent the following telegram to Presidents Bani-Sadr of Iran and Suddam Hussein of Iraq: "I have the honor to express my very great and active disturbance in the face of events now developing in your region. The war taking place between Iraq and Iran disturbs us in more than one way, but most particularly because it affects the unity of the Moslem world which more than ever must give proof of its cohesiveness to face the challenges which confront it. Thus it is my duty to appeal to your spirit of wisdom and for dialogue in order to stop this conflict which I hope is short-lived. The eyes of the whole world are turned toward your region. It is counting upon the capability of its leaders for return of peace and harmony to the Gulf region. POOR SCHOOL FACILITIES--Classes resume this morning, at least for our youngsters of kindergarten and primary grades. As in each year it is going to be necessary to pay the cost of schooling as well as the notorious insurance which serves for what, I, Makaya, truly do not know, all the more so as it includes no bonus as there is with automobile insurers. All these expenses during the longest month for us who are not civil servants. There is only one other problem close to my heart. Several days ago I visited the school in my district to enter my children. What a sad sight: no tables, no benches, no chairs. Windows had lost their panes. A village school indeed. I have, personally, no civics lesson to impart to others, especially when it is a matter of our children's future, but I believe some exaggerate a little. A good inspection can only bring to light some deficiencies or others. And let nobody come along to tell us that money is what is most lacking to maintain these establishments. NON-USE OF DOMESTIC WOOD--For a small wooden bed for our house it is necessary to spend a large sum of money. For a small parlor chair the cabinet maker in the district will take half a month's pay from you. For a buffet or an armoire it is the same. Now I understand that it is imported furniture which is favored to the detriment of our own wood and domestic production. However, forests cover more than 80 percent of our territory and the woods found there are classed among the world's best. Nevertheless to exploit them nobody is going deep into the thick brush because they border water courses. And, none the less, the large forest products company is at Port-Gentil with its great plywood production. Then--how to encourage, under these conditions, small local industry in this world of the jungle dominated by synthetic products? I, Makaya, believe that only a new policy of prices at the M3 level and an administration decision on Gabonese furniture would be able to support our own wood. That is my opinion. SOUTH KOREAN URANIUM DELEGATION--A large delegation of 30, consisting of geologists and administrative employees from the Republic of Korea will arrive at Libreville next 7 October from Seoul. This mission, which is coming within the scope of agreements executed with the Korean Engineering Company by the Gabonese government and the COGEMA [expansion unknown], will be engaged in uranium exploration in the Mouanda and Lastourville regions. For these explorations the Korean Engineering Company will commit 12 million dollars (3 billion CFA [African Financial Community] francs). The work is supposed to begin immediately after the Korean geologists arrive in Gabon. The equipment used is of Korean manufacture. It includes heavy and light units as well as everything needed for prospecting and boring in the above mentioned regions. It must be pointed out that the exploitable reserves in the Mounana region are constantly increasing. If the Koreans succeed in finding uranium Gabon's annual production will be raised to 2,000 tons. The COMUF [expansion unknown] then will be producing 1,500 tons. [signed Muslabu Massamba] [Text] [Libreville L'UNION in French 26 Sep 80 p 3] 11,706

GOVERNMENT CONDEMNS OPPOSITION MP'S IN TAMALE RIOTS

AB251318 Accra Domestic Service in English 1100 GMT 25 Oct 80

[Text] The government has repeated that it would not discriminate in providing the basic necessities of the people within the constraints on the economy. In this regard, it wants to assure the residents of Tamale and (Dabon) traditional areas, in particular, that they would not be neglected in the sharing of the national cake.

In a statement issued in Accra, the government recalled an incident at Tamale last Tuesday in which a group of demonstrators led by members of parliament in the minority parties from the region went on a rampage. The demonstrators, who handed a petition to the regional minister on water and electricity problems facing the area, looted personal belongings, assaulted innocent people and caused serious damage to government and private property.

The statement expressed the government's shock over the incident, because the politicians who led the demonstration are aware of efforts being made by the government to solve the problems facing residents in the municipality. It said that as a short-term measure the government has provided Tamale with five generating sets, which when commissioned will meet about 70 percent of the requirements of Tamale for both electricity and water supply. As a long-term solution, the statement said the government sent the regional minister to Canada in June this year to hold discussions with officials of the Canadian International Development Agency on the Northern Region integrated program. As a result of these discussions, the government reached an agreement with the Canadian Government to provide the whole of the Northern Region with adequate water and electricity for domestic and agricultural consumption.

In addition, the government has consulted the West German Government, and it has agreed to give three electric generating sets to Tamale.

The government, therefore, described as unfortunate the parts played by the MP's who have failed to give the right information to the people regarding the efforts the government is making to solve the power and water supply problem in Tamale.

STUDENTS IN USSR CALL FOR NEW ECONOMIC ORDER

Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 14 Oct 80 p 8

[Text]

THE National Union of Ghana Students in the Soviet Union has called on the PNP Government to diversify its external economic relations so as to bring Ghana into the framework of a new international order.

The union also urged the Government to develop stronger economic and trade relations with socialist countries in order to take advantage of the favourable terms offered by such countries which normally aimed at industrialization and the building of all-round independent economy.

In a memorandum presented to the PNP delegation to the Soviet Union recently the union noted with concern the difficulties the country was going through with regard to its external economic relations, especially with the Western countries which were quite unfavourable to Ghanaians as a result of unequal economic order bequeathed to Ghana by colonialism.

"We are alarmed by the piling foreign debts, balance of payment difficulties and heavy irrational dependence on foreign aid termed by Nkrumah as neo-colonial way of investment."

DOMINATION

The union urged the Government to beware of the increasing domination and the wrecking of the Ghanaian economy, deliberately by the International Monetary Fund (IMF) to precipitate such crises as to provide a suitable opportunity for imperialism, subvert the state, and hold the nation to ransom at the mercy of unscrupulous neo-colonialist businessmen.

It advised the Government to keep its promise to the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC) and the election pledge to review all dubious contracts with foreign companies particularly VALCO Firestone and Lonhro.

JOURNALIST SAYS GOVERNMENT COMPOUNDS OWN ECONOMIC DIFFICULTIES

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 14 Oct 80 p 3

[Article by Yaw Boakye]

[Excerpts]

I DO not know of any country which has no problems. I do not know of any country which has solved all its problems within a specified period. Problems are synonymous with the very existence of man. Nature knows it.

But problems are not meant to be protected. They are not meant to be displayed like books on the shelves of a library. They are not meant to be exhibited like goods at a trade fair. They are not meant to attract sympathy in rhetorical speeches.

Problems have to be solved as they crop up. If they are permitted to heap up in the fashion of the rubbish in parts of Accra, the rot sets in.

Certainly, the problems of this country have only been watered, allowed, to grow. Think of the lessons of the great exodus. Ponder over the acute shortage of drugs in the hospitals. Talk of the mounting prices of goods. Take a look at the rocketing rate of unemployment.

And do not forget the transportation headache. The list is by no means exhausted.

The worsening condition of the roads is beyond the tolerable limit of description. Agriculture exists on platforms of political rallies. The cost of education is becoming too hot to handle.

I am amused anytime I go through a news item with the introductory paragraph "The Government is determined to...". The Government is determined "to make living better for all Ghanaians".

Obviously the Government is determined to do everything. Determined to do everything with what? Determined to end where? Maybe I am asking funny questions. Maybe I am not aware of the resources of the Government. May be I am a stranger in Ghana.

Better living for all Ghanaians involves a number of activities over which the Government, for the moment, appears powerless, in terms of finance.

I have always held the belief that the Government in power cannot behave as a party canvassing for votes. During electioneering campaigns, political parties are at liberty to promise the electorate honey. They are at liberty to build castles in the air.

A government which takes refuge in the problems confronting it creates more problems for itself than it can imagine. A government which seeks to attract sympathy from its people by dishing out promises is likely to deceive itself. A government is elected into office to act with precision. A government does not live on the wave of gigantic promises.

Nobody can seriously point an accusing finger at the present Government for the serious problems it inherited.

The nation is now being threatened with massive demands of pay increases. The Trades Union Congress is gradually losing its patience in the delay over the minimum wage for workers. The TUC has often been accused of neglecting the welfare of the workers. It seems it does not want to miss any opportunity to re-assert itself as the protector of the workers. It is a wounded tiger.

The teachers, scared by the unpredictable exodus in which their colleagues feature prominently, want more pay. There is bound to be a chain reaction. With such calls for salary adjustments, how does the Government find itself able to meet its obligations in urgent areas. But who is to be blamed?

If the Executive had been firm enough to slash the salaries and allowances of the Members of Parliament, perhaps workers would have exercised restraint in their demands.

It is not a Member of Parliament only who has to live on adequate salaries and allowances. In defending the emoluments of the MPs, the Government committed a blunder, the consequences of which are grave indeed.

The second year of the Third Republic has just commenced on the note of threats of industrial unrest. Can't Ghana find herself a Ludwig Erhard to hold the tail, or the head, of her problems?

OPEN BORDERS FOR GOODS ADVOCATED

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 17 Oct 80 p 2

[Editorial: "A Bar to Progress"]

[Excerpt]

BRITAIN knows too well that her currency, the sterling, is flying outside her boundaries. And to get it back she has adopted a more flexible method.

You arrive at Gatwick or Heathrow and nobody demands to know how you came by the British pounds. In most cases, the immigration officer is happy to see you carrying bundles of his country's money. You have come to spend it in Britain, and that is the most important thing.

In Beirut, Lebanon, there is nothing like "black market" in respect of currencies. There are kiosks in the open where people — travellers, traders, tourists — exchange all sorts of currencies for another.

Countries which have nothing to wear or eat have declared themselves "free ports" or "free zones". Importers therefore make sure that every commodity under the sun is available for sale and consumption by the general public.

Ghanaians must be funny people. Right now we have nothing to be proud of — no shelter, no clothing, no food, no drugs, no soap, no drinkables etc — yet this country claims to be one of a few that have well-trained and well-equipped border guards and customs officers.

And what do they do? They prevent people who possess foreign money from bringing into the country goods which we badly need but which we have not set eyes on for ages. So who is fooling who?

It is in the interest of both the Government and the people that our borders are open to allow free flow of goods from individuals to supplement Government

TUC CALL FOR MINIMUM WAGE--The Ghana Trades Union Congress (TUC) yesterday called on the Government to convene an urgent meeting of the Tripartite Committee to finalise discussions and come out with a new minimum wage before next November 8 to help "defuse the tensely-charged atmosphere in the country." In a letter to President Hilla Limann made public in Accra, Alhaji A.M. Issifu, Secretary-General of the TUC said the letter was the result of an emergency meeting of the TUC Executive Board held on Thursday during which current economic hardships facing workers were discussed and the urgent need for a new minimum wage to help mitigate the hardship of the lowest-paid workers. The TUC boss said since coming to office of the Limann Administration, eight meetings of the Tripartite Committee had been held without arriving at a conclusion. He said from the foregoing the President would realise that the TUC had demonstrated tolerance and understanding in their handling of the sensitive issue without resorting to deliberate actions that would otherwise have worsened the state of restiveness among the rank-and-file workers. LIMANN PRAISES OFORI-ATTA--The President, Dr Hilla Limann, has described Mr William Ofori-Atta as a great statesman, nationalist and patriot. Speaking at a luncheon he hosted for Mr Ofori-Atta, who is also chairman of the United National Convention (UNC) and the chairman of the Council of State on his 70th birthday, the President therefore urged Ghanaians to emulate the shining example of Mr Ofori-Atta. He pointed out that the statesmanship of Mr Ofori-Atta, who is also known as Paa Willie should rekindle in all Ghanaians the love and respect for "our country and our fellow citizens." The President wished Mr Ofori-Atta good health, personal success in all his aspirations, prosperity and great happiness in the years ahead. [Excerpt] [Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 11 Oct 80 p 8]

UNDP DEVELOPMENT LOAN--The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) has approved an amount of 40 million U.S. dollars for the construction of various development projects in the country. Mr Michel Doo Kingue, Assistant Administrator and Director of the African Regional Bureau of the UNDP, disclosed this during a courtesy call on Dr Amon Nikoi, Minister of Finance and Economic Planning in Accra yesterday. The amount which shows an increase of 14 percent over the last one represents the UNDP's contribution towards the development of the country for the period between 1982-86. ADB COCOA MODERNIZATION LOAN--The African Development Bank is to lend Ghana $10.5m to finance modernisation of cocoa plants at the ports of Tena and Takoradi. The ADB said that the loan was repayable over 15 years, including a three-year grace period, but gave no details of interest rates, which are usually on soft terms. The cocoa plants modernisation programme, due to be launched later this year, will give both plants a capacity of 52,500 tonnes of cocoa a year. The ADB said the plants are due to be completed in two years time. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English 20 Oct 80 p 2080]

EFFORTS TO IMPROVE DOMESTIC TRAVEL NOTED

Abidjan FRATERNITE MATIN in French 30 Sep 80 pp 8-9

[Article by Jean-Pierre Aye: "From 1975 to 1982, 2,200 km of Roads to Be Completed at a Cost of 265 Billion"]

[Text] If there is an image which is clinging to Africa and will be hard to shed, it is that of a continent whose access roads to the interior of the various countries lend themselves to a cattle roundup. And this image is resisting gigantic efforts being made here and there to map out routes, maintain those already in existence and make the principal highways passable in all seasons. Investments in this sector and in the countries involved are colossal.

Ever since Ivory Coast's independence, the country has placed particular emphasis on opening up the interior through the construction or development of major highways which will permit surface communication between the various areas and the capital and between the areas themselves. And nowadays no prefecture or subprefecture is really isolated except by distance and the length of the trip.

This policy is obviously designed to provide an answer to two major concerns: first, to make all areas accessible in order to promote the migration of people; second, by mapping out roads, to further the exploitation of the natural and agricultural resources of the various areas and the conveyance of those resources to export and processing centers. In both instances, the criterion of highway development is also a powerful factor in our economic development. This undoubtedly explains why areas with a high level of agricultural production have for a long time been the ones with the best roads: Abengourou, Divo, Bouake, Daloa and their vicinities, each area having a public works subdivision whose principal task is to maintain the various roads.

From Trail to Paved Highway

Although it is easy to recognize the efforts being made without uniformity to render the interior accessible, it is nevertheless true that a long trip sometimes takes on the aspect of an expedition, ending in dust, makeshift bridges, detours, and wood across the road. But from year to year the "unexpected" is occurring less frequently at the rendezvous point of the inland routes.

The roads are wider. And the new policy is to do something "definite" by paving the major roads of economic significance. In the southwest, San Pedro, a new Ivorian port on the sea, has thus benefited from an extensive program which makes it easily possible to reach the port from Gagnoa and Issia, these two cities themselves having easy access to other production centers (Daloa, Guiglo, Duekoue and Man). In the north, road development has been remarkable. And Ivory Coast is the only country in West Africa which offers motorists 670 km of uninterrupted paved roads. In fact, one can go from Abidjan to Korhogo via Bouake, Katiola and Ferke without driving a single kilometer on a dirt road. And in the near future it will be possible to continue to Boundiali. This stretch is still under construction. In the north and northwest, the Odienne-Man stretch via Touba and Biankouma has been paved, and this has made it possible to transport the production of those areas to the port of San Pedro.

	Length (km)	Cost (billions CFA francs)
1. Road projects completed 1975-1980
Roads paved in open country	1,130	98
Improvement of existing paved roads	315	10
Superhighways and expressways	95	63
2. Road projects in progress
Roads paved in open country	560	50
Dirt roads definitely laid out	117	5
Superhighways and expressways	78	39
3. Projects planned over short and medium terms
Roads in open country	482	54
Improvement of existing roads	337	14
Superhighways and expressways	12	9

Between 1975 and 1980, 1,130 km of highway have been paved in open country, the principal projects completed being Abidjan-Agboville and the connecting road with Adzope; Man-Touba-Odienne; Issia-San Pedro; Toumodi-Oume; Bouake-M'Bahiakro; Zimbakro-Sinfra; and the like.

During the same period, 315 km of existing paved roads were improved. This is the case with Sikensi-N'Douci, N'Douci P4 40-Divo road, N'Douci-N'Zi Bridge; Toumodi-Yamoussoukro; PK 40-Divo road and Lakota-Gagnoa.

Major highway projects are underway on other stretches of road and are expected to be completed by 1982. They total 558 km. With respect to this program, we may cite Moossou, Bonoua, Agnibilekrou-Bondoukou, Oume-Gagnoa, Daloa-Guessabo, Abobo-Alepe and others. Another program involving short and medium-term highway projects is that of Aboisso-Noe, Dimbokro-Bongouanou-Kotobi, Daloa-Issia, Issia-Sinfra, Memafou-Akoupe and Adzope-Betie, totaling 482 km. There are also plans to improve existing paved roads during the same period: Issia-Man, Duekoue-Guiglo, Akoupe-Kotobi-Bongouanou and Akoupe-Abengourou. This means that 800 km of roads will be paved or improved in the next 4 years.

Northern Superhighway

In addition to the above programs whose importance is obvious, work will continue on the Northern Superhighway. With a length of nearly 80 km, the first stretch of this sizable project--Yopougon-Sikensi (two lanes each way)--is making it possible to avoid the long lines of traffic previously encountered and even achieve speeds which are not pleasing to the police and gendarmery.

Although this first stretch can be considered experimental, it can already be said that the idea is a good one and its success assured. But a superhighway is not an ordinary road and requires a far greater investment. We may then ask how far the Northern Superhighway will go. It will undoubtedly go beyond Sikensi passing through N'Douci, an important crossroad which must now be "freed"! Will the superhighway then go as far as N'Zi Bridge? Will it be extended to reach Yamoussoukro? And continue on to Bouake? No one knows. Everything will depend on the status of the national economy in the next few years. In the opinion of those who know what the future holds, it would appear that the horizon is not as dark as they would have us believe.

Must we then believe that the Northern Superhighway will extend into the north to be truly worthy of its name? Or must we rather believe that an ambitious program of highway projects on the 1983-1985 horizon will make it possible to travel to the interior of Ivory Coast on roads reflecting the health of the various economic areas? Whatever be the case, any effort favoring the modern peasant class must include continuous improvement in the access roads to each production center. Therefore, the government is obliged to pursue its present policy, even to give it added emphasis, so that the peasant will not feel like the poor relation of a real development from which each one should profit.

Air Transportation

The airplane has ceased to be a means of luxury transportation, even in Africa. In Ghana, Nigeria and Gabon the airplane has become quite an ordinary means of transportation which one sees take off and land regularly in remote areas, most often because of difficulty of access by highway. In Ivory Coast, in addition to the policy of opening up the hinterland by building and maintaining national highways, we have now "killed distances" by promoting air transportation for people as well as merchandise.

Air Ivoire, the National Air Transportation Company, whose history began in 1960, is assuring the development of air transportation to the interior of our national territory. Although the government's rather timid participation in the joint company of that time--in which SODETRAF (French Company for the Development of Air Transportation in Africa) had a 34 percent share, then 20 percent of the capital, and, later, Air Afrique 20 percent--fostered the myth of the airplane as a luxury means of transportation for a long time, the National Company, having become completely Ivorian in 1975 and having passed under the "military cap" in March 1979, succeeded in putting the airplane at the service of all Ivorians.

To become convinced of this, one needs only to spend a short time at the inland airport where, if it were not for the proximity of the planes, one would have the impression of being in a railroad station.

Air Ivoire planes transport a daily average of 750 passengers who depart and land in 18 localities crisscrossing our national territory at will. There are 52 weekly flights from Abidjan to the interior. But it is undoubtedly on the weekends that the traffic is heaviest: 1,200 to 1,500 passengers on Friday, Saturday and Sunday. It is the "big return to the village" when inhabitants of the interior come to Abidjan to shop.

This infatuation with the airplane is new in Ivory Coast. Credit should be given to the company's new military leaders who, inheriting a company wisely managed but limited in its actions, knew enough to create a psychological shock by lowering the fare at least 40 percent on all flights. From that time on, air travel being slightly more expensive than railway travel but much faster and more reassuring than travel by bush taxi, Air Ivoire built up a clientele at all social levels.

This "enticement policy" was possible only under rather favorable conditions offered by the merger of Air Ivoire and GATL (Air Transportation and Liaison Group): the pilots and technicians, retaining their military status, did not have to accept a cut in pay; the new fleet (consisting of eight planes, mostly Fokker 27 and 28) offered greater carrying capacity. Repairs, overhauls and other maintenance precautions were assured by qualified air force technicians. As a result, development costs being by far much lower than in the past, rates could be adjusted without disturbing the company's financial balance. And that is what was done.

Unusual Scenes

Decrease in fares, the creation of new menus--nothing more was needed to result in the unusual. And at times scenes were encountered which were as unintentional as they were astonishing. For example, the man who takes the plane on a certain day for the sole purpose of getting a closer look at the clouds, the sun, the earth from the sky and who, upon rejoining his family, feels that he is no longer completely like them. He has taken a plane and is henceforth an important person. From then on, everyone is supposed to give him a prominent place in their daily relations.

Another example: passengers arrive at various departure areas with their baggage but also with various purchases they have made: a hamper full of poultry, mutton and the like. And they do not understand that on this "new" means of transportation one cannot take what one wishes or have "the watchman keep an eye on one's belongings stored in some unknown place." For some travelers this means of transportation is not at all permitted to disturb their traveling rituals. For example, the elderly couple who are making their first flight with astonishing calm and, the plane having taken off, the wife places the morning meal on her husband's knees--the same traveling meal they are accustomed to take along on the train.

The husband proceeds to eat as if it were the most natural thing in the world. After which, his wife relaxes. But the trip was not as long as they expected, and the elderly man, arriving at the airport, is sorry not to be able to partake of the welcoming meal his daughter-in-law will be offering him shortly. The astonishment felt about the duration of the trip is often expressed aloud. But for this woman of a certain age, the Abidjan-Boundiali trip cannot last just 1 hour. She remains sitting in her seat. When she is convinced by her pilot nephew that she is really home, she utters just one sentence: "Well then! our children are now as gifted as the whites."

Flights to Neighboring Countries

To this reflection so full of wisdom and down-to-earth common sense, we could add: "Provided we have faith in them and let them express their spirit of initiative." Initiatives are being multiplied at Air Ivoire: the opening of new lines, the training of flight personnel, the training of ground personnel, airplane charter service, the computerization of the reservation service in the near future, equipment specifically for regional flights and the like. But the biggest innovation is still unquestionably the inauguration of flights to neighboring countries. First begun with Upper Volta, this experiment has just been extended to Mali. It will soon be extended to Guinea. Negotiations are underway with Guinea and could very possibly be completed next month. In time, Air Ivoire will serve Mali, Guinea, Ghana and Liberia in addition to Upper Volta.

These flights to neighboring countries are making it possible for many travelers to return to their homeland or tour Ivory Coast without necessarily passing by way of Abidjan. And they can do this at favorable rates which, starting from Abidjan, have already been reduced at least 20 percent.

Key:

1. Regular lines 2. Projects

However, if we consider that flights to neighboring countries are complementary to flights to the interior of our national territory, we see that the development of air transportation through a policy of popularization is now linked with the development and creation of much better flight plans than those which exist in the interior. In that respect, considerable effort is being made by the specialized services of the TP [Public Works] and the ASECNA [Agency for Air Navigation Safety in Africa and Madagascar] so that a landing or takeoff outside of Abidjan, Yamoussoukro and Bouake will not depend solely on the pilot's skill.

Aviation is a sector in which negligence and mistakes are very costly. The Ivorian has taken a liking to the comfort of the airplane; now he must be assured of safety beyond that provided by the pilot. There is no doubt that this requires heavy investments. But are not these investments commensurate with the option of putting the airplane at the service of every Ivorian?

GOVERNMENT BACKS MOVES TOWARD POLITICAL COMPROMISE

BCP Committee Meeting

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 17 Oct 80 p 2

[Article by Chris Freimond, Mike Pitso]

[Text] NEW moves to reconcile the two major political parties in Lesotho and to end the escalating guerrilla conflict in the north are being made in Maseru.

The national executive committee of the Basutoland Congress Party (BCP) met at the weekend for the first time in seven years and national reconciliation was high on the agenda.

The Government of Prime Minister Leabua Jonathan sanctioned the meeting by granting the necessary police permits, indicating that it backs the peace moves. Applications for similar permits have been refused previously.

In a brief statement after the BCP meeting, the secretary-general, Mr G M Kolisang — he was released last month from detention under the country's 60-day detention regulations — said the committee had made "certain recommendations" to the exiled party leader, Mr Ntsu Mokhehle.

It is believed the recommendations centred around possible talks between Mr Mokhehle and Chief Jonathan. The committee hopes to receive a reply soon from Mr Mokhehle, who is in Zambia.

If talks can be arranged, they could pave the way to a general election. The last general election in Lesotho was held in 1970.

The executive secretary of Chief Jonathan's Basutho National Party (BNP), Mr Desmond Sixishe, was reported recently to have agreed that elections were overdue, but could not be held until guerrilla action by BCP insurgents ended and stability was re-established.

Observers believe that while both the BCP and the BNP have considerable support, Chief Jonathan's party probably has the majority following and he may be anxious to organise elections which he is confident he can win.

The results of the 1970 elections were annulled before they were announced when the BCP, many observers believe, was on the verge of winning power from the BNP.

After simmering for three years, Lesotho erupted into violence in 1974 when five police stations were attacked by guerrillas who are believed to have supported the BCP.

While the police mobile unit acted against the insurgents, killing an undisclosed number of people, Mr Mokhehle and six other senior BCP officials fled the country.

Since 1970, the BCP has split twice. In 1973, the then deputy-leader, Mr Gerard Ramoreboli, broke away and now leads the BCP internal or "parliamentary" faction. He is also minister of justice.

In 1975, the deputy-leader, Mr Tseliso Makhakhe, left the party and leads a faction from his base in Botswana.

Last month an amnesty law was introduced in Lesotho to allow exiled opposition members to return home.

A former BCP secretary-general, Mr Koenyama Chakela, was the first prominent leader to accept Chief Jonathan's offer.

SOL CRUTSE reports from Maseru that Mr Chakela was made Minister of Economic Affairs in a Cabinet reshuffle announced yesterday.

In other moves, Mr Sixishe was appointed as Minister of Posts and Telecommunications, a post he took over from Mr Pete Pete, who was made Minister of Agriculture.

Return of Chakela

[Text] MASERU: In a statement made over Radio Lesotho, Mr Koenyama Chakela who after self-exile of 6 years in Zambia, said he came at cross roads with the exiled leader of BCP, Mr Ntsu Mokhehle in 1976 after the executive committee found him incorrigeble when he was found collaborating with the SA Boss.

Then the National executive had to take a stand.

Mr Chakela was welcomed by the head of the police, Major General S R Matela, the head of the security Mr S Molapo, the Foreign Affairs Minister Mr C D Molapo, 80 members of the infantry and many leading officials of the Lesotho Government.

He has been to Moscow and is alleged to be behind Lesotho's establishment of diplomatic relations with Russia, a close government source said here.

Referring to the nation, he called for unity and added he came back in order to build his country peacefully and to develop it.

He would not comment on rumours that he is getting a cabinet post in the Leabua Government.

He called for unity among the fighting forces of Lesotho.

"I have come back unconditionally," he also thanked the government for pardoning him. He called on all BCP elements in exile to come home.

Mr Chakela left the country in 1974. As he put it the faction he led after ousting Ntsu Mokhehle was supported by both African Governments and the liberation movements.

TRAORE: RE-LAUNCHING OF SOLE PARTY NEEDED

London WEST AFRICA in English 20 Oct 80 p 2091

[Text] President Traore, speaking to the country on radio on the occasion of the national independence anniversary, has said that the attempt to return the country to a normal constitutional life by creating a single party "came up against the moodiness, indifference and wait and see attitude of the militants." He admitted that "one is now obliged to admit failure."

As a result, the Union Democratique du Peuple Malien, the country's only party, will soon have an extraordinary congress which will "seek to realise the legitimate aspirations of the militants and thus to re-launch the party." It was possible that many changes would take place in this Congress, the President warned. "The Party leaders must accept all eventualities, including the possibility of relinquishing their mandate." He also suggested that party militants were responsible for the UDPM's failure to generate any popular enthusiasm because an attitude of "indolence and indifference" has enabled "incompetent persons without any scruples to achieve posts of responsibility."

The President reserved particular criticism for the national "cadres," the public servants whom he also attacked for laziness and indifference, adding that they were to a large extent responsible for "the difficult situation now being experienced by our country."

A correspondent writes: The President's warnings should come as no surprise. Apart from some well organised manifestations of public support for the UDPM, political lassitude has prevailed. In Bamako there has been hostility towards the regime. When students demonstrated earlier in the year, they were treated by the police with a severity unexpected from a government which is seeking to establish an image of constitutional rule. There were deaths and many reports of maltreatment of imprisoned student leaders. Bamako's population has always been known for its political volatility and the President was particularly critical of UDPM branches in the capital where, he said, they had done little to engage the support of the public for the party.

The problem is that for many Malians, the real change in the country took place back in early 1978 when some of the most notorious members of the military regime were arrested and subsequently imprisoned. In spite of President Traore's protestations that the new form of constitutional rule provides for the participation of all sectors of society, including the military, the impression still remains among a large proportion of the public that the military remain the real masters. This view was reinforced by the intolerant response to the students in the first few months of the year. The President is equally aware of the fact that in Bamako there is a reservoir of politically active people who, if called upon and offered the right signs of a political opening in the system, could prove very useful to the country's government. It is only 12 years ago that Modibo Keita was overthrown. If, at the time, his socialist experiment has disenchanted many because it failed to produce material results, it did manage to politicise an important section of the population. In the subsequent years of austere military rule and in the last two years of constitutional rule, many of these people have found little evidence of hope. The military never managed to come to grips with the country's economic problems, and the military committee which ruled the country until 1978 always gave the impression of being more preoccupied with its internal divisions. Now, by the President's own admission, the new political system has failed to achieve its principal aim, the attraction of popular support.

RENEWED MRM GUERRILLA ACTIVITIES REPORTED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 18 Oct 80 p 7

[Text]

SALISBURY. — Mozambican refugees arriving in eastern Zimbabwe report an upsurge in activity by guerrillas opposing President Samora Machel's marxist government, according to travellers from the area.

The guerrillas belong to the Mozambique Resistance Movement (MRM), which sprang up after independence from Portugal in 1975.

Several hundred Mozambicans have fled to the Mount Selinda area of eastern Zimbabwe because of harassment by MRM guerrillas and renewed fighting just east of Mount Selinda, travellers said.

The latest arrivals included two officials of the ruling Frelimo who were being treated in hospital after anti-Marxist guerrillas cut off their ears, it was reported.

The accounts of renewed guerrilla activity came two days after informed sources reported that a train on the Umtali-Beira railway in Mozambique was derailed last month by an MRM landmine.

Travellers arriving in Umtali also said they had seen burned-out lorries and cars on the 250 km road from Beira.

Last June, the Mozambique government claimed a major victory over the MRM, saying a base-camp had been overrun, with 270 guerrillas killed and 300 captured.

Latest reports indicate, however, that the June offensive failed to crush the guerrilla movement, which Mozambican officials and western intelligence sources claim is backed by South Africa.

Refugees arriving in Mount Selinda are reported to have heard gunfire in the Espungabera region, near the town, almost every night. — Sapa-Reuter.

PROBLEMS, FUTURE OF CIVIL AVIATION DISCUSSED

Maputo TEMPO in Portuguese 28 Sep 80 pp 14-17

[Article by Filipe Mata]

> [Excerpts] A great number of the light planes and helicopters existing in the People's Republic of Mozambique are immobilized today. If the country suddenly experienced floods like those that devastated Gaza Province in 1977, either we would have to call for foreign help or there would be a catastrophe.
> In order to deal with the problems arising in this area and revive light aviation activities that will meet the country's ever-growing requirements, a plan has been prepared for a new state enterprise that will coordinate all activities in this sector. Its establishment is expected to be made official very shortly.

The People's Republic of Mozambique has a fleet of more than 100 light planes belonging to the state, private bodies, and flying clubs. It also has more than 20 helicopters for various tasks in the civilian sphere. But of that total, only a small number of light planes and helicopters are currently operational, the rest being immobilized with damage of various kinds.

Of the aircraft now lined up in hangars, a small percentage of light planes and helicopters can be restored in the medium term, while the solution recommended for the remainder is that they be torn down and their respective components and parts used to maintain the fleet in service.

The restoration of some of the light planes and helicopters that are now immobilized is considered uneconomical because of the investment that would be required to overhaul their engines and because the technical capability does not exist in our country.

Disassembling those units is also justified by the many types and makes constituting the fleet, a situation that makes maintenance work difficult.

For that reason, it is becoming necessary and urgent to standardize the fleet. That will also make it possible to rationalize the procurement of spare parts and the training of personnel.

Since many of the light aviation units are immobilized, there is limited capacity for carrying passengers to and from localities situated between LAM [expansion unknown] stops, while on the other hand, work in support of agriculture is deficient.

This state of things is due basically to the ruinous management of the COMAG (Mozambican General Aviation Company) and HELMO (Mozambique Helicopters) firms. In addition, various irregular situations have caused those firms to operate at a loss and seriously affected the maintenance sector.

Currently, just under 150 workers are employed in the maintenance of light aircraft in Mozambique. COMAG, for example, employs 130 Mozambican workers and Portuguese headed by an engineer.

For its part, HELMO currently employs only 10 people of the same classification assisted by a foreign inspector.

Parallel with that, the 1973 rates are still being charged today, despite the fact that the cost of fuel and spare parts on the international market has increased. To bring earnings into line--or rather, to effectively cover the expenditures incurred by the companies--the rates must necessarily be increased.

Future of Light Aviation

Studies for setting up a new state enterprise to coordinate the activity of all air transportation and work are now quite far along, and it is expected that they will soon be approved by the appropriate structures.

Separately, and with the objective of rationalizing the fleet, there are plans to acquire a type of light plane and helicopter using a cheaper type of fuel.

This will also make it possible to standardize the acquisition of spare parts and the training of cadres (both pilots and mechanics), something that is not possible now due to the diversity of makes and types.

Another thing that is said to be among the major concerns of the industry's management is the training of Mozambican cadres, both for piloting and for maintenance, since it is true, as a mechanic in the industry said, that "you can't make an omelet without eggs."

Indeed, and as is asserted by the workers in the industry themselves, new prospects for light aviation in Mozambique are opening up.

The general idea is that as a result of the efforts being exerted to revive this industry, perhaps our light planes and helicopters will eventually fly at the same altitude as the country's needs.

DIFFICULTIES OF COASTAL TRANSPORTATION REVIEWED

Maputo TEMPO in Portuguese 28 Sep 80 pp 12-13

[Article by Filipe Mata]

[Text] The People's Republic of Mozambique has a coastline longer than that of Portugal, Spain, France, and Germany combined. Situated along its 2,600 kilometers of coast are many ports, both for oceangoing vessels and for coastal shipping.

In addition to the ports of Maputo, Beira, Quelimane, and Nacala, which serve a great number of the countries in southern Africa, we must also consider the ports of regional value, examples being Xai-Xai, Inhambane, Chinde, Pebane, Moma, Angoche Ilha de Mocambique, Ibo, Mocimboa da Praia, Macuse, Moebase, and others. These have effectively contributed to the appearance and growth of the socioeconomic centers located in those regions.

Many rivers also cross the country in various directions for a total length of 4,272 kilometers, of which about 1,500 are navigable. Some investment would be necessary, however, to make certain of their upper stretches passable throughout the year.

Those resources have never been rationally exploited, although a few colonial companies made a number of attempts in that direction.

Today river traffic is almost nonexistent, while coastal shipping is struggling against many difficulties created by erroneous exploitation in the past, especially during the post-independence period.

Since transportation is one of the country's biggest problems, and since water transportation is the cheapest as a general rule, this sector is being called on now more than ever to give its utmost.

Starting From Nothing

Considering the material and human resources at the merchant marine's disposal, it can be said that if the requirements imposed by the program for rapid development which we have in mind are to be fully met, this will be another area in which the country is going to start practically from nothing.

Mozambique currently has seven coastal vessels with a total capacity of about 15,000 tons. But of that fleet, only four units are operational--the Chinde, the Pemba, the Linde, and the Polana--while the other three are immobilized with damage of various kinds.

Today all of those coastal vessels are very old--almost all have been in service for over 20 years--and this means that there is an almost permanent need for repairs. What makes the situation worse is that there are no spare parts, and the manufacturers do not even make them any more.

The poor management to which the sector was condemned for many years has meant in fact the exhaustion of the equipment, with the result that even the minimum of what is required in the way of navigational safety does not exist. Added to that is the absence of conditions for the well-being of crewmembers.

Hours at Sea Without Communications

If a ship along our coast suddenly began to take in water or caught fire, the sailors would probably die without the authorities even knowing about it. Such is the situation with communications in this field.

The fact is that sometimes the crewmembers are on the high seas for dozens of hours without any communications with the land--they are simply left to their fate. What little marine communications equipment exists is now obsolete and does not satisfy the requirements of safety.

That is the situation as regards the lack of safety at sea, and its cause is the absence of an efficient communications system. Along with that, according to information from persons linked with the sector in question, the absence of means of communication also causes serious problems as far as commercial operation of the ships is concerned. They often find themselves unable to request instructions from their base when schedules are changed.

One official attached to the merchant marine said, "It happens that the ships remain in a port for 2 or 3 days waiting for cargo and with no instructions as to what they should do" (it should be noted that each of our coastal vessels costs about 100,000 meticais per day).

First Steps

As one of the first steps toward making this industry really operational, a state enterprise known as NAVIQUE [expansion unknown] was established last May. It coordinates all the activities of Mozambique's coastal fleet.

That enterprise emerged following liquidation of the enterprise which had previously operated the Mozambican vessels and whose administration had led to the exhaustion of the industry's equipment and other assets.

According to Oscar dos Santos Redondo, director of NAVIQUE, one of the first steps taken was that of hiring experienced cadres for the industry, with the result that this problem is now minimally under control.

Taking inventory of the existing assets, reviewing their condition, and drawing up forecasts of short-term needs are also one of the tasks of the moment, as is the creation of conditions of safety at sea and of well-being for the personnel on board.

Another current objective is stimulation of the maintenance and repair sector, which, once equipped with technical and human resources, will be able to assume a preponderant role in rehabilitating and reviving the industry.

With a view to insuring the fleet's capability, the appropriate structures have been negotiating for some time with the objective of acquiring four coastal vessels with a total capacity estimated at about 3,700 tons.

Separately, it is known that an Italian firm is going to provide the Mozambican merchant marine with sophisticated communications equipment, including installation of the necessary facilities on the ships and on land.

With the consolidation of these first steps aimed at reviving Mozambique's coastal shipping, it is hoped that the industry will be in a position to respond at least minimally to the country's needs in the field of transportation, which is one of the nation's big problems.

LIGHT BULBS FROM GDR--A shipment of about 493,000 light bulbs recently arrived in our country from the GDR. About 258,500 units from that order will soon be received in Beira by the local office of DIMEL--the state enterprise that distributes electrical and electronic equipment--for the central region. The light bulbs in question will be sold to the industrial sector as well as to the general public through the appropriate shops with a view to reducing the great shortage of bulbs. Out of the quantity soon to be received by DIMEL's Beira office, a large proportion will be used to supply the capital of Sofala Province, while the remainder will be distributed in Zambezia and Tete provinces. We learned from DIMEL that the price at which the bulbs will be sold to the public will be announced at the proper time, the purpose being to prevent instances of speculation. We were also told that the arrival of miscellaneous other electrical goods is also expected. [Excerpt] [Beirua NOTICIAS DA BEIRA in Portuguese 28 Sep 80 p 3] 11798

CUBAN FOOD DONATION--The Republic of Cuba's embassy in Mozambique has announced that it has placed about 500 tons of condensed milk and 100 tons of compote at the Mozambican Government's disposal in response to the appeal for help for the drought victims. Those products will soon arrive in our country. Separately, a note received in our Maputo office announces that with the same objective, the Christian Council of Mozambique will soon deliver $100,000 worth of foodstuffs that have been ordered from abroad. The same note adds that Caritas of Mozambique expects the arrival shortly from abroad of 270 tons of corn, which it will place at our government's disposal. This is also for the purpose of helping victims of the drought that is devastating various regions of our country. [Text] [Beira NOTICIAS DA BEIRA in Portuguese 23 Sep 80 p 2] 11798

CROP SPRAYING CONTRACT AWARDED--Contracts worth over US$1 million (Z$625 000) have been awarded by the Mozambique Government to the Field Industries Group of companies for that country's 1980/81 aerial crop spraying protection programme. The contracts were won in the face of severe competition from four countries, including two from Eastern Europe, says the managing director, Mr RP Hacker. The group's Skywork subsidiary will be responsible for pre-season re-repair, overhaul and maintenance of the Mozambique aircraft fleet and will provide ground crews. Agricair is to recruit seasoned pilots. Mr Hacker said that expatriates will be used in the operation, but stressed that this would have no effect upon Agricair's activities in Zimbabwe. "Some 45,000 hectares are involved. The Mozambique Government is providing five pilots and we are supplying a further 11. The programme starts in a couple of weeks and finishes around the end of May next year," he said. [Text] [Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 23 Oct 80 p 1]

EDITORIAL CRITICIZES GOVERNMENT FOR MISDIRECTED ACTION

Windhoek WINDHOEK OBSERVER in English 18 Oct 80 p 18

[Editorial: "If Not a Cavern of Brigands, an Assembly of Indecisive Personalities"]

[Text]

A famous contemporary novelist, in alluding to the political state of affairs in a fictitious Latin American country, spoke of that cavern of robbers, intriguers and brigands.

Applying such an allusion to our country is, of course, overstepping the limits of reasonable criticism. But one is well within the confines of an unpalatable truth if one says that, with very rare exception, our country is in the stranglehold of incompetent, indecisive vacillating personalities, whose greatest concern seems to be to retain their positions of security and wealth.

Within four weeks our country will have, instead of the now less than half a dozen Legislative Councils, a total of eleven, plus a Parliament known as the National Assembly, and a supreme executive body called the Ministers Council.

There could hardly be a more puerile exercise than just merely hurtling criticisms. But let us look brutally at the facts facing us, and then ask ourselves whether this newspaper's feelings of growing bitterness are justified or not.

Numerically, our country has the biggest political machine, considering proportions of course. Several hundred men are being paid a collective salary running into several million Rands, not at all taking into account the salaries of the various civil services. We are talking of the Herren seated in the many chambers as Legislators.

When they meet, they discuss a new sea boundary to "protect" a fishing resourse long since dead; or, in the alternative, the decay of morals. One has no hesitation in saying that even steel fibre would have decayed under such a poor administrative system, although morality at our point of development is the least of our problems.

Or they discuss the import of skilled foreign workers, while tens of thousands of people are jobless because every Ovambo-speaking citizen is automatically a revolutionist.

Everything is done in a half-hearted, lukewarm manner. Yes, nowhere is there to be seen a steady, unflinching hand at the controls, steering these pitifully small language clans to the objective of nationhood.

The truth is, of course, that South West Africa's interests are dwarfed by the strategic interests of the occupying force. Yet, that does not constitute an insurmountable hurdle. Why then the curious lack of action on the part of Mr. Dirk Mudge and his colleagues? Again, the truth is glaring at one: They can't make a single move without Pretoria's approval. For how does one account for the lack of constitutional and economic development in the presence of the strongest military force south of the continent's equator?

To compound matters even further, the prospect of an international solution is kept alive. For years already. Legislation is made and governments are created, only with the likelihood of it all being disbanded and scrapped.

It is political lunacy.

If there is any sincerity, then the time has come to move, or SWAPO will do it for us, as they are already busy doing.

We need a rallying point; we need a voice to herd the fragments together; we need a force - even ruthless if necessary - to whip into the hearts of our tired and dispirited people a sense of belonging to the soil, and of unity.

Above all, this country must stop being the playground, the picnic spot of venison dealers, of foreign companies like the one controlling our diamond fields and owned by people who will never set foot on our soil but who spend the inheritance of our children in the sumptuous casinos of the world.

Can't the Almighty throw into our laps a dictator who can beat us into a national entity?

SHIPANGA SAYS UN SHOULD FOOT BILL

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 20 Oct 80 p 2

[Text]

THE NEW-PROCLAIMED "impartility" of the UN negotiating team, which arrived in Pretoria during the weekend - for talks on the UN settlement plan for SWA, is about to meet its first acid test.

Mr Andreas Shipanga, leader of Swapo D, has decided to lay it on the line.

Speaking from Windhoek, he said: "The UN team has said they will make themselves available for talks with internal leaders.

"In the past they had always claimed that the internal leaders were puppets of the SA Government.

"The SA Government has stated that it is prepared to make aircraft seats available, to enable the internal leaders to fly to Pretoria for these talks.

"I am not prepared to accept that.

"The UN has always paid for petitioners from Swapo and elsewhere to go to the UN for discussions.

"We maintain that if they want to talk to us, then as a matter of principle it is the UN, not the SA taxpayer, which should pay for us to fly to Pretoria and to pick up the tab for other expenses incurred.

"If they are serious in their claims of 'impartiality', then we should enjoy exactly the same facilities as the UN has always extended to Swapo.

"If the UN is bankrupt and cannot pay these airfares, the UN mission must fly to Windhoek to hold the discussions there.

"Alternatively, the Western Five, which has played a major role in the affairs of Namibia, should pull together and they should bear the expense.

"The internal leaders want the same recognition from the UN and the Western Five as they accord Swapo. We do not see why we should ride on the back of the SA taxpayer.

"If these people are genuine in their claim that they wish to be impartial, then it must be square deals for all."

Mr Shipanga emphasised that he was speaking purely on behalf of his own party.

"I cannot speak for the other internal leaders. I do not know how they view this issue," he said.

EDITOR TAKES UN TO TASK FOR PARTIALITY

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 20 Oct 80 p 2

[Article by Leon Kok: "UN Favoritism a Hindrance"]

[Text]

AS LONG AS the UN Secretary General Dr Kurt Waldheim declines to officially distantiate himself and the UN Secretariat from Swapo, there will be little opportunity for UN involvement for a settlement in SWA.

This is the general stand that will be taken by the SA Government in this week's talks in Pretoria.

Sources in Pretoria said that the UN team will have to give an emphatic assurance that no action will be taken by the UN or its officials that go against the grain of UN Security Council Resolution 435 as this would further jeapardise the implementation of the settlement plan.

The SA Government has argued that the UN General Assembly and, via it, the US Secretariat, has officially favoured Swapo by:

- acknowledging that it is the sole and official representative of the people of SWA.
- and by giving preferential treatment financially and politically to Swapo.

Swapo officially receives between R7.5m and R11m annually from the UN.

The UN Secretariat fully finances Swapo's permanent representative at the UN, including the salary of Swapo's permanent observer, at a rate of over R170 000 a year.

The UN has also voted about R900 000 for the Council of Namibia.

Swapo furthermore has a direct say on all matters at the UN involving SWA through all recommendations involving the country at first being coordinated with Swapo's permanent observer.

Other political assistances to Swapo includes the financing of Swapo tours to various countries from the UN Budget.

Also significant is that both Dr Waldheim and his special representative take pro-Swapo stands and only recently Mr Ahtusaari called for sanctions to be imposed against SA.

Leader of the UN team in SA, Mr Brian Urquhart, confirmed on his arrival at Jan Smuts Airport on Saturday that the question of the UN bias would be discussed.

"But it must be remembered that impartiality works both ways," he said.

Mr Urquhart said the UN delegation wanted to create a climate of impartiality on all sides.

INSURGENTS' SURPRISE ATTACK FAILS

Windhoek WINDHOEK OBSERVER in English 18 Oct 80 pp 1, 6

[Text] The Glenn [Outjo District]: The unexpected incursion by an estimated 21 insurgents cutting across a vast tract of land, took people in this region by surprise for all thought that, after the pounding of bases in murderous raids across the border, the guerrillas' fighting ability had been too severely impeded for such an infiltration.

Yet they came. And in a season when foliage is virtually non-existent. Inspecting the corpses of two of them who had been shot by a gunship at Bakenkop, I was struck by their youthfulness. Their uniforms have also changed, no longer being the pale green shade of the FAPLA battle fatigue, but of different colour and texture -- definitely better quality.

From where they came, it is not known. One theory is that they had cut across the west of the Etosha Game Reserve, while another is that they had come down from their hide-outs in the mountainous wastelands around Opuwa from where they make intermittent attacks on lone army vehicles and, of course, the high tension power line from Ruacana.

Their section commander must have been under strict orders to take his men into the area here at this time of the year. It can be described as a potential suicide mission, yet their presence did result in a great scare to many people here. Farms were abandoned, and the grip of fear became evident. Last Sunday the insurgents opened fire on a number of commando men who retreated when the AK47 submachine guns started their rasp.

ELEMENT OF SURPRISE LOST

But the insurgents had no hope, for the element of surprise was lost. They arrived at the farm 'Maureen', about 20 kilometers north-west of Otjikondo. That was last Sunday.

On Monday, two of the infiltrators were shot in an action in which a gunship played the decisive role. Looking at one of the dead men, a young man with a keen and very handsome, intelligent face, I got the impression that a rifle grenade must have exploded on his chest. It had been badly ripped -- probably a machine gun bullet which had struck a rifle grenade fastened to the webbing of the insurgent.

After the action, the group of an estimated 21 men split into four groups. Radio signals by the insurgents were picked up by army monitoring systems. Monitored conversations suggested that some of them could speak Portuguese. It was evident that the insurgents were explaining that they had run into mishaps, for gunships had found them. The SWAPO men spoke of the helicopters in the rather descriptive term of "takka-takka".

INCREDIBLE FITNESS

The physical fitness of the guerrillas is incredible. I walked for ten kilometers through the bush after the car had bogged down in sand -- an exhausting experience. For example, one of the insurgents had arrived on Wednesday morning at the farm 'Amalinda' after having fired a flare in an effort to find his comrades from whom he got lost. He was fleeing. Blood had come from his mouth when he called at a cattle station for water. He quenched his thirst, and rested for a while. Meanwhile, a security force unit had been alerted. On their arrival, the insurgent was gone.

On our way to The Glenn, we called at an abandoned farmstead, a sight which characterises large parts of the Kamanjab region, not as a result of insurgents, but because of drought and economical reasons forcing the occupants to leave.

At this particular farm I found water, and guinea fowl abound. It was clear that people had made a fire and had done some cooking. One could not help wondering whether the insurgents had camped there for the night.

There were those who, on having been alerted last weekend that insurgents were in the area, did not go to Otjikondo or Khorixas as requested. They stayed. One such person was Mrs. Hazel Caspers of 'Maureen'. I found her with a double-barrelled shotgun and a small .22 pistol, the latter an almost ridiculous little weapon which crime reporters call the "suicide gun".

SPOTTERS ON STANDBY

There is no security fence around her property. Asked if she were afraid, she said that she depended on her employees and her dogs. In each room of the house she had placed ammunition conveniently, in the event of an attack so that she can move around without having to cart cartridges.

"They were two young men who had been badly mutilated. But I felt nothing for them, because I know of the evil things they are doing", she said. It was from her house that I ascended the hill, on top of which the two men had been shot.

Nowhere in the region did I find soldiers. Only at Otjikondo were there fighting men and four helicopters, two gunships and two lighter machines, apparently used as spotters.

The soldiers were totally relaxed.

Air Force men were on standby. As soon as word was received from a tracker, the machines were put into operation.

The successive blitz raids into the deep south of Angola which started on May 12 of this year and which six weeks later culminated in the capture of masses of war material and the destruction of guerrilla bases, caused most of the country to lapse into a false lull that infiltration beyond the operational area was out for the time being.

The last time an insurgent made his appearance in the so-called White area was on Friday night, February 22. The farm 'Hairablb' near Grootfontein had been attacked and Mr. E.E. Dressel, the owner, was shot and killed. Mr. Dressel's 15-year old daughter, Sonja, shot and killed one of the attackers. She wounded a second, who had been dispatched by a low velocity bullet fired into his head by his retreating comrades.

Silence then fell until last Sunday.

STUDENTS PROTEST EDUCATIONAL POLICIES

Windhoek WINDHOEK OBSERVER in English 18 Oct 80 p 4

[Text]

GRAHAMSTOWN:
The Association of SWA/Namibian students at Rhodes University has compiled a petition in which they strongly protest the educational policies applicable in South West Africa.

The petition, which has been compiled with a view to distributing it generally, states that the process of constitutional evolution has been in progress in South West Africa since 1975.

The authorities still adhere to the educational policies as formulated under the system of separate development, the petition notes. The document says that schools and colleges, with the exception of a few private schools, are not open to all races, and are not providing for equal educational facilities for all the children of South West Africa.

The petition also notes that multi-racial sports competitions at school level are not permitted by the secondary authorities.

The petition says that the Association believes that South West Africa is on the path to independence and that cosmetic changes to the status quo are no longer adequate. Changes should lead to a racially non-discriminatory educational system.

The Association therefore resorts to calling on the Turnhalle's Ministers Council and the Administrator General, Mr. Danie Hough. They should facilitate a meaningful, peaceful change. They will be approached, the Association states, to seriously consider the possibilities of an integrated educational system, with equal opportunities for all the children of South West Africa.

The Association urges all South West Africa's citizens to join it in its democratic endeavour towards racial harmony.

In a letter to the Observer, the President of the Association, Mr. Harald Geier, writes that the Association is deeply concerned about the future of South West Africa and the direction the path to independence is going to take. If bloodshed is to be avoided, writes Mr. Geier, then cosmetic changes are no longer good enough. He stressed the Association's commitment to democratic changes.

Mr. Geier urges all other students from South West Africa studying at other institutions, to come out in support of the petition. He says it is only UNITED that South West Africa can stand strong. Therefore, a solid foundation must be built. This can be achieved through education of future generations in the new spirit, which should prevail if ever there is a desire to build a new nation without the present racial attitudes and prejudices which are still cherished by certain sectors of the White population.

THREE PARTIES CONTEST DAMARA LEADERSHIP

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 21 Oct 80 p 4

[Text]

THE ELECTIONS for a Damara Representative Authority will be contested by three parties, viz the Damara Council of Chief Justus Garoëb, the Damara Executive Committee of Mr Kefas Conradie and the SWA People's Democratic Unity Front of Mr Engelhard Christie, member of the DTA, National Assembly and Ministers' Council.

Mr Christie has represented the Damara people since the one-man-one-vote election in December 1978 but the opinion has often been expressed by opposition groups that Mr Christy was not democratically elected and would lose an election against Mr Garoëb.

A surprise turn in the Damara election was the controversial decision by Mr Garoëb to take part in the November election, in defiance of the policy of the Namibia National Front, of which the Damara Council is a member party, not to take part in the ethnic elections.

Mr Garoëb decided to take part in the November ethnic elections to eliminate Mr Christy from politics, maintain democracy among the Damara people, secure the survival of his party and fight compulsory military service.

Mr Kefas Conradie, like Mr Garoëb, boycotted the 1978 elections and has expressed regret at having done so. He now realises the importance of taking part in elections and will at this stage even accept a seat in the National Assembly, should this be offered to him.

In the event of Mr Garoëb winning the Damara election, the very existence of the NNF will be in danger for they will have to decide whether or not to allow the continued membership of the ethnic leader of the Damara people and President of the NNF to an alliance opposed in principle to ethnicity.

MEAT SHORTAGE MAY ABATE IN 2 YEARS

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 21 Oct 80 pp 5, 7

[Text]

Production at meat factories dwindle as local farmers opt for rocketing prices in SA.

MEAT FACTORIES in SWA have had to cut back drastically on production because there is simply no supply of stock to be had to make continued full operations viable.

In Windhoek, Damara Meat Packers has cut back and it is in the balance whether the factory will continue further operations this year. At Otavi the Damara Meat Packers factory has already closed down and if and when it will reopen for operations is uncertain. Karoo Meat Packers at Okahandja are still operating but at a very slow pace and drastically cut back.

The Windhoek Advertiser approached the Manager of the Meat Trade Control Board, Mr H W Kreft and asked him what this decline could be ascribed to. According to various sources, the reason that no stock or very little, comes to the factories here is because farmers prefer to send their stock to the Republic where extremely inflated prices are being paid, and that many farmers have now sent their young stock to feed lots in the Republic so that their stock will be in the peak of condition by January to hit the markets there.

Mr Kreft discounted these reasons. Local prices, he said were just as good as those being offered in the Republic. He explained that the gross price might seem to be higher there, but one had to consider transport and other costs. The net price here, he emphasised was just as good if not a bit higher.

Referring to farmers sending their cattle to feed lots, he said that this would not really have a bearing. Sending animals to feed lots was a completely normal thing. Farmers usually started feeding their stock just after the winter.

The main problem being experienced now, he said, was the total supply of slaughter cattle and according to his estimates it would take the next two years before the situation righted itself.

A spokesman for Damara Meat Packers confirmed that there was a cutback in production. He declined to give a commitment as to whether Damara Meat Packers would close until next year because of the lag in production.

He gave the assurance that everything would be done to keep the factory going for the sake of the farmers but explained that the factory would have to close if there were insufficient cattle to warrant further operations.

During June the factory had a 99,4 percent utilisation of capacity; during July this came down to 94,6 percent; during August it dropped further to 86,5 percent and in September right down to 69,2 percent. He explained that the factory would probably now have to further reduce intake to match indications of supply.

He also confirmed that Damara Meat Packers at Otavi had closed already in September. The factory would remain closed until conditions improved, he said, and it was uncertain if and when this would take place.

At Otavi, the factory had a 97 percent utilisation of capacity in June this year; in July it dropped to 89 percent and in August to 68,9 percent. During September there had been a slight climb to 79 percent.

A spokesman for the Karoo Meat Packers at Okahandja said that the factory there was also experiencing a cutback in production, but added that the best was being done to keep the facility open to deliver a service to farmers. The slaughter figure there had also dropped, he said, adding that since Tuesday this week there had not been one carcass.

But he said, they tried to keep any stock over as it was not economical to slaughter small numbers. He also mentioned that going prices here now were just as good as those being paid in the Republic and everything possible was being done to retain good prices here.

SWAPO LITIGATION--Windhoek--A Windhoek attorney, Mr. Peter Koep, accompanied by either Mr. Issie Maisels QC of the Johannesburg Bar Council, or Mr. Kentridge of the same Bar, will be meeting in New York on Monday at 11h00 with a top SWAPO delegation. Asked here what the purpose of the hurried mission was, Mr. Koep of the law firm Henry van Biljon en Kie, said that he was acting on behalf of a client. "We will be attempting to get evidence on commission after consultation in New York. We are not acting on behalf of SWAPO, but a client resident in South West Africa. SWAPO's evidence is required, though, for a pending litigation, Mr. Koep said. He held that such dismention the nature of the litigation or to disclose the identity of his client. He held that such disclosures could prejudice his case. Asked, he said that arrangements had been made to meet with Mr. Theo-Ben Gurirab, SWAPO's United Nations representative. Who else is to be present at the briefing is not known. Mr. Kentridge must be back in Johannesburg by Tuesday of next week, and the possibility of Mr. Maisels accompanying Mr. Koep appeared to be very strong. Both advocates are to act in the impending litigation. [Text] [Windhoek WINDHOEK OBSERVER in English 18 Oct 80 p 9]

SWAPO TERRORIST DEATHS--Windhoek--The SWA and South African security forces have shot dead eight of an estimated 15 SWAPO terrorists who had infiltrated the Outjo district in the traditional White farming area of the Territory, Major General Charles Lloyd, Officer Commanding the SWA Territory Forces, said in Windhoek on Saturday. Intelligence reports indicated that the remainder of the group had scattered and had fled from the district, he said. He said the group had scattered after two of their number had been shot and killed by security forces on Monday last week. This had complicated the follow-up action. The terrorists had done everything possible to disguise and erase their movement through the bush, further frustrating the follow-up operation. In one of the latest contacts in the operational area two days ago, 15 SWAPO terrorists were shot and killed in a single operation, General Lloyd said. This group had initially consisted of an estimated 25 men, during continuous pressure and pursuit, six of the group were killed earlier this week. The remainder managed to evade the security forces. It was clear, General Lloyd said, that the group had been moving towards a definite target. General Lloyd said this group had apparently had a dual purpose for infiltrating Owambo: To terrorise the local population and to recruit men for SWAPO. General Lloyd said it was remarkable how young these insurgents had been--some as young as 15. This could be ascribed to the manpower shortage among SWAPO ranks as a result of the heavy losses the past year.--Sapa [Text] [Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 20 Oct 80 p 3]

SWAPO FINANCING--The U.S. taxpayer was indirectly financing SWAPO. This was alleged this morning by Dr Ben Africa, member of the Ministers' Council who returned from a visit abroad recently. Dr Africa and Mr F. Kozonguizi from the Department of Inter-State Affairs visited Washington, London and Paris to promote and publicise the activities of the Ministers' Council and discuss problems pertaining to the implementation of UN Resolution 435. Dr Africa said it was pointed out that there were two problems connected with the implementation, namely the feasibility of the DMZ and the partiality of the UN towards SWAPO. An election in SWA would not be acceptable unless the UN could prove its impartiality as mediator in SWA. He said it was stressed during talks in Washington that the U.S. contributed the lion's share to the UN and that SWAPO was financed to a large extent by UN funds. This meant that the U.S. taxpayer was indirectly financing SWAPO. Mr Kozonguizi said the American people were ignorant of the situation in SWA and surprised to hear about the abolishment of racial discrimination and that it was punishable by law. OKAVANGO AGRICULTURAL SUFFICIENCY--Okavango became agriculturally self-sufficient for the first time with this year's grain harvests, yielding 50 000 bags of maize and 2 500 bags of wheat. This was revealed by Mr Nico Oelofse while addressing the 34th SWA Agricultural Congress in Windhoek this week. Mr Oelofse is the Chairman of the Agricultural Advisory Committee. VACANT FARMS--Blocks of farms purchased by overseas speculators and left lying vacant, served as infiltration routes for terrorists, enabling them to walk from Angola to as far as the outskirts of Outjo, undetected. This argument was voiced by Mr Jack Meinhardt of Outjo district when he introduced a motion during the 34th congress of the SWA Agricultural Union in Windhoek, requesting the authorities to take active steps to discourage the practice of foreigners buying potentially productive farms which were then left unused. The motion was referred to the Executive Committee by a unanimous vote of congress. Mr Meinhardt said that these purchases were apparently conducted for speculative purposes only, and although he had no proof, there was reason to believe that in some instances these buyers had access to Land Bank finances. Replying to Mr Meinhardt, the retiring president, Mr Andries Pretorius asked the former to submit any evidence he had in that regard privately. TV IN NAMIBIA--The establishment of television in SWA is expected to cost between R85m and R125m. This has apparently emerged out of the official investigation that has just been conducted into the possibility of introducing TV into the country. The Chairman of the Ministers' Council, Mr Dirk Mudge, made it clear in Tsumeb last Monday that SWA will definitely get TV in the near future. The official report apparently recommends that TV should be phased in over the next five years at an annual cost of about R17m. The figure of R17m, however, does not account for inflation and other cost escalations, but does include commercial revenue that will be discounted. The upper cost margin is put at R25m a year. The bulk of the programme content will be imported initially with the local content increasing as resources and expertise become available. It is recommended that there should only be one channel in the initial stages. The report has apparently just been presented to the Ministers' Council and a final decision on the matter will be made in the near future. PARTNERSHIP WITH JAPANESE COMPANY--The Nigerian National Petroleum Company (NNPC) has awarded a contract of ₦40m. for the construction of gas and power plants in Kaduna. The Control and Administration Manager of the Kaduna Oil Refinery Project, Mr. M. Sadao Yokoyama, said the Northern Nigeria Development Company, (NNDC) were partners in the project expected to be completed in 1983. A Japanese company, Chiyoda Chemical Engineering and Construction Limited, won the gas and power contract. They had constructed the ₦500m. Kaduna Oil Refinery which went into production last month on schedule. Mr. Yokoyama explained that the gas plant would produce high quality cooking gas from raw materials derived from the Kaduna Refinery depots while the power plant would provide electricity for the gas plant and a proposed detergent project which had been awarded to an American firm. The two projects would provide over 60,000 jobs when fully operational. Mr. Yokoyama said that a supervisory and maintenance school has been established at the Kaduna Refinery to train Nigerians who would take over the manning of the projects from the Japanese experts and technicians. PORT HARCOURT AIRPORT--The new international airport of Port Harcourt would go into operation on November 3, a release from the Nigeria Airways Headquarters, Ikeja announced. According to the release, over 918,000 "revenue passengers" were airlifted from the total networks of the airline, in the first half of this year. This figure was more than 44 percent higher than the record for the same period last year which was 30 percent higher than the corresponding period in 1978. In the fourth quarter of 1979, 447,722 "revenue passengers" travelled on Nigeria Airways as against 344,488 in the same quarter in 1980, the airways said. The total air passengers for the period under review--January to June 1980--showed 918,645 "revenue passengers" airlifted, the Airways said. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English 20 Oct 80 p 2085]

POSSIBILITY OF SUDES-GOVERNMENT DIALOGUE NOTED

Dakar LE POLITICIEN in French No 59, Sep 80 p 16

[Text] The government has finally decided to deal a very heavy blow to the SUDES [United Democratic Teachers Union of Senegal] which, as is well known, had ordered its members to disrupt the end of the school year in order to induce the government to take negotiations of their demands upon eight points more seriously.

The government, likening this position to political blackmail, simply took upon itself the responsibility of keeping SUDES elements away from the examination centers.

The strike against the examinations, ordered by SUDES precipatously, was a glaring mistake. It will have, as a principal result, the isolation of the SUDES at the domestic level for, while it is true that the parents of the pupils, even those of the Socialist Party had regarded the strike on 24 hours notice effected by the union sympathetically, the fact no less remains that the great majority of the Senegalese disapproved of the order to boycott the examinations. And that is understandable.

Thus the SUDES, having deliberately deprived itself of the objective support of the parents of pupils, the government was in good position to make its response and deal vital blows to the union. First, upon orders from the Ministry of National Education many striken saw their salaries stopped during vacation. That was wholly illegal, for, being suspended, they had the right to day pay. But this point of law, raised by the union's lawyer, was quickly settled, the government admitting that the measure was only in readiness and not to be executed, that the victims would be recompensed... by its action of resending the orders.

Next it was the turn of the striking probationers whose precarious situation allows for dismissal for the slightest professional deficiency. Here, too, the SUDES directors blundered. They should have shielded them against dismissal by calling a formal strike. That was not done. And today the threat weighs more and more heavily.

In any event, a goodly number of teachers have already been dismissed and the decrees, already signed, should be in the process of publication.

We share the belief of observers that these somewhat draconian measures are not of the kind that will reduce tension. No doubt the basis for the government's also giving an overtly political coloration to its reaction is the overtly political nature of the step taken by the SUDES. One must have been born yesterday in order not to know that the SUDES, like the government, has political motivations in this struggle.

The role being played in this struggle by the semi-clandestine opposition cannot be masked by the falsehood-laden communiques of the clandestine PAI [African Independence Party].

But, in spite of everything, the government has too great a responsibility to respond tit-for-tat to the blows of a political adversary. The minister of education himself stated to all who wanted to hear that he knows what it costs the government to train a teacher. For our part, we remain convinced that 50 percent of the teachers affected by the dismissal measures are not even aware of the underlying politics of the struggle they are waging in the name of a union ideal. It is for that reason that we still believe dialogue is possible.

SPPF EQUAL EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITIES POLICY DETAILED

Victoria NATION in English 16 Oct 80 pp 1, 2

[Text]

THE Ministry of Education and Information has released further details of the next stage in its plan to implement the SPPF policy providing equal educational opportunities for all. The first stage was the provision of nine years of education for all children at primary level.

This reform of the secondary level of education which comes into force next year, aims at:

- Further equal opportunity for all children to continue their studies beyond the universal nine years of primary.
- A curriculum adapted to the socio-economic and political conditions of the country.
- Improving standards to enable more children to enter high-school or polytechnic.
- Doing away with the system which yearly turned out very young unskilled job-seekers on the market.

Background

In a statement made yesterday, the Minister of Education and Information, Mr. James Michel, traced the background to the reform, explained the opportunities opened to the P9 leavers as well as the new subjects that will be taught, the institution of a national examination and the merger of Regina Mundi Convent and Seychelles College schools.

He said:

"Since 5th June 1977, the Government of Seychelles has embarked on a very ambitious programme of education reforms, based on the fundamental principle of equality of opportunity for all.

"During the last three years every effort has been made to achieve this aim, culminating in 1980 in the zoning of all primary schools. Although this decision has been the subject of much criticism, the results of Government efforts to upgrade both the physical and pedagogical facilities in all schools are becoming so obvious that most parents, particularly those whose children attended the two fee-paying schools, readily admit that their children are making as good progress as they were making previously, at either Regina Mundi or Seychelles College.

No complacency

Such achievements, however, do not call for complacency and Government will continue to improve facilities Moreover, it is Government's view that the time has now come to examine more closely the secondary school system and to start implementing those reforms which are essential, if the principle of equality of opportunity is to apply at secondary level.

Previously more than 50% of the school population left at the end of P8 or P9 to join the ranks of the unemployed It has now become clear that children leaving P9 are still relatively young and should have, if they so wish, the opportunity of pursuing their studies in one educational establishment or another so that they can be better equipped to earn their living.

Therefore, in 1981 various venues will be available to them.

Firstly, we have the National Youth Service (NYS) which will provide excellent opportunities for all the youths who wish to develop their practical or academic potential to the fullest. Full details are available in the NYS brochure which has been given such wide circulation and publicity that there is little more to add to what has already been stated on so many occasions.

Alternatives

For those who do not wish to join the NYS, alternatives have been provided. Those F3 and P9 students who have the necessary aptitudes and academic ability may proceed with their studies either in F4 at Seychelles College or in one of the vocational schools.

In order to determine to which institutions the students are best suited, all students applying for entry to any one of these institutions will have to sit a selection examination. This is essential since only a limited number of places will be available in any one institution.

It must be remembered that this is not a departure from existing practice. Therefore in 1981, students will compete for the same number of places as in previous years, the only exception being the Maritime School which will now run a full time residential course for approximately 60 to 70 students.

Co-education

Similarly the number of places available in F4 will remain similar to that of 1980. However, with a view to providing a wider choice of subjects, more adapted and relevant to the needs of the country and an atmosphere where boys and girls learn to mix, study and play together, the two schools, Regina Mundi and Seychelles College, will merge into one new school.

The obvious advantages of co-education are so well established that little needs to be said here. Moreover, co-education is already practised in all our Primary schools as well as at Form VI level. The proposed action is, therefore, only a rectification of an anomalous situation.

This course of action has now become all the more feasible since the implementation of the zoning policy has resulted in the phasing out of Forms II in both the College and Regina Mundi Convent schools. Consequently, there will be enough space at Seychelles College to accommodate the remaining Form IIIs Form IVs and Form Vs from both schools. As already stated in the NYS brochure, after the two years at the end of Form V, all students will have to sit for the same National Examination which will be comparable in standard to the present 'O' level examination.

The content of the examination will be closely linked to the teaching programmes in both the NYS and the secondary school. An added advantage will be the wide variety of subjects available, including Marine Biology, Business Studies, Agriculture and Technical Drawing, etc . .

Examinations

Examinations will be set and marked in Seychelles. However, all necessary measures will be taken to ensure recognition of certificates in overseas colleges where our students need to study and if need be, external examiners will sit on the Examining Panel.

It is obvious that the present system of 'O' level is no longer adapted to the specific needs of our country and the step we will be taking in two years time has already been taken by most developing countries.

Those students who reach the required standard in the National Examination will qualify for entry into the Sixth Form or in the proposed Polytechnic which will provide training at a much higher level than the present technical school. Some of the present professional institutions will form the nucleus of the polytechnic and many more technical departments will be instituted in order to provide high leve training in all areas which are relevant to our needs.

The construction of the Polytechnic will start in 1981 and it is estimated that by 1982 some departments will be functional.

The Sixth Form will be accommodated in the building presently occupied by the Regina Mundi Convent school. Although at first it will be under the responsibility of the Principal, Seychelles College, a Deputy Head will be based on the premises to ensure the smooth and efficent running of the classes.

Advantages

The main advantages of the measures outlined are that :

All those students who wish to further their education will have the opportunity of doing so and the NYS will be specially equipped to provide the necessary facilities for those students who are in need of special help to enable them to pursue a normal course of studies.

● Young childrenn will no longer be turned out of school to become unskilled job-seekers at a very early age.

● Opportunities to achieve academic excellence will exist at the NYS, therefore students will no longer feel that they are offered an inferior quality education unless they attend Seychelles College or Regina Mundi.

● Programmes in all institutions will be revised and adapted to the socio-economic and political realities of our fast developing country.

● Examinations will have direct relevance to courses followed rather than courses having to be geared to examinations which care little relevance to the needs of the country.

● Both courses and examinations will take into account our official language policy.

● Improved standards will enable more students to reach an academic level which should enable them either to go in for further studies in either the Sixth Form or the Polytechnic.

Therefore all those youths who are ambitious and highly motivated to do their best in order to play a meaningful role in the development of their country will have the opportunities available. It is for them to take these opportunities and make the most of them •

SUCCESS OF PIONEER DAY REPORTED

Victoria NATION in English 16 Oct 80 pp 1, 2

[Text] The first Pioneer Day held at Anse Aux Pins last Saturday for the Pioneers and Young Pioneers of the East Mahe region which comprises the districts of Plaisance, Les Mamelles down to Cascade and Anse Aux Pins was a complete success.

This was reaffirmed yesterday morning by the Principal Secretary in the Ministry of Youth and Community Development, Mr. Ralph Adam, who has also announced the results of the various competitions organised for 343 children who took part.

In the Political Education Section, first was Cascade district followed by Plaisance with Les Mamelles in third position and Anse Aux Pins fourth.

For the traditional dances, Anse Aux Pins came out first, Plaisance second with Cascade and Les Mamelles in the third and fourth places, respectively.

The football competition was won by Les Mamelles with Plaisance second and Anse Aux Pins and Cascade sharing the third place. In netball, Anse Aux Pins came out top, followed by Les Mamelles and Cascade.

The districts that come out first in the different events will be represented at the National Pioneer Day to be held in future and a spokesman for the Department of Youth and Community Development said yesterday that more events would be included in other regional pioneers days.

The next region to have its Pioneer Day will be West Mahe which includes La Misere, Port Glaud, Grand Anse and the Anse Boileau districts. It is expected to be held at Grand Anse in 15 days time.

Mr Ralph Adam has also congratulated the Pioneers and Young Pioneers for taking part in the recent song contest in which the Cascade district came out first, followed by well known singer John Wirtz and Vincent Elizabeth.

He said that the winning song chosen by the children was a very good one, but this did not mean that it would necessarily become the National Song of the movement.

"It's true that we are looking for a National Pioneer Song but we need something special, a song that fully expresses the essence of the movement and its objectives." Mr Adam said "What we might have to do is follow the example of the jury that chose the National Anthem and pool expressions and ideas from all over the country to compose the Pioneer Song."

PRESIDENT PRAISES U.S. ATTITUDE ON RETURN FROM TRIP

London WEST AFRICA in English 20 Oct 80 p 2093

[Text]

President Siaka Stevens has praised the new attitude of the United States Administration to Southern Africa, and said that Sierra Leone would strive for maximum relationship with the Carter Administration and government. The President was speaking at a reception on his return from the United States of America where he addressed the United Nations General Assembly as Chairman of the OAU and held discussions with President Carter.

The President said that he has learned from experience that no one can live in isolation. During his visit to Massachusetts the President said that it became evident that personal rapport with people can produce more positive understanding in areas connected with advancement.

He said that he met a group of black Americans from the National Association for the Advancement of Coloured People who were anxious to establish contacts with Sierra Leoneans.

Referring to his address at the UN, the President said he was obliged to carry the message about the imbalance between the rich and the poor nations, and the remedial measures to such imbalance as seen by the developing countries.

The Head of State praised the new American Ambassador, Miss Theresa Ann Healy, for her help in organising his visit to Washington, and for making it so rewarding. In a jovial mood, the President spoke of the Sierra Leoneans who attempted to demonstrate against him while he was in America, describing them as outcasts and unpatriotic opportunists who were out-foxed during their so called anti-government demonstrations.

He said that Government will soon make representation to the US Government on the status of such Sierra Leonean troublemakers.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY MEETS, ISSUES RESOLUTIONS

London WEST AFRICA in English 20 Oct 80 p 2093

[Text]

The Agricultural Society of Sierra Leone held its tenth annual conference in the Northern Province town of Makeni. A sixteen-point resolution was adopted by the society, which emphasised amongst other things the need for better prices for agricultural commodities as well as the need to strengthen the agricultural expansion service.

The society also resolved that there is a need to examine further the establishment of Chiefdom Plantations, something that has been called for time and time again by President Stevens, and the conflict that has been going on for decades between cattle and crop farmers, especially in the north, and fo the inclusion of goats and sheep in one livestock package.

During the meeting a plea was made for a re-examination of the role of the Sierra Leone Produce Marketing Board with a view to upgrading its service to the farming community, and for the transformation of the Pest Control Unit of the Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry into a Crop Protection Department.

A review of the Crash Rice Programme, the creation of an Action Research Centre and the need to enhance the production of fish and shell fish protein, were also advocated by the conference.

Among the papers presented at the conference was one on the Work Oxen Project and the trials at present taking place, comparing the use of work oxen with hand and tractor operation.

The Agricultural Society of Nigeria was represented at the meeting by the General Secreatry, Dr. Ola Ope, who also had discussions about the formation of an Organisation of West African Agricultural Societies.

NEWSPAPER PRICES SUBSTANTIALLY INCREASED

London WEST AFRICA in English 20 Oct 80 p 2093

[Text]

The price of newspapers in Sierra Leone has been increased by up to 100 per cent.

The first paper to raise its price was the Daily Mail, the government owned paper which is the oldest newspaper in the country. It went up from five cents to ten cents. Next to follow was the independent Tablet, which, citing the increase and general inflation, raised its price from ten to fifteen cents.

The latest paper to increase its price is the Sunday We Yone and Midweek We Yone, both owned by the APC Party, which has gone up by five cents to fifteen cents. In a front page piece justifying the increase the Editor said that after months of resisting the pressure of escalating cost of newsprint, to keep the price of the two newspapers at ten cents, even at a loss, the experience of recent weeks have forced the paper to cut production to one edition a week. In view of the fact that the price of newsprint has gone up again, he has been compelled by sheer force of circumstance to bow to the inevitable, and raise the price to fifteen cents. He ends up by saying, "Let us all endure together what is absolutely beyond out control."

The Daily Mail, in a recent editorial also called attention to the large increase in the price of newsprint in the country saying that in 1974 a ream of newsprint was sold at between Le3.75 and Le5.00. Today it sells for Le16 or more while bonded paper has gone up from Le22 to Le40. The paper comments that the situation means a writing on the wall for Sierra Leone newspapers and the printing industry in general, unless the government steps in to help as it has done over the question of textbooks.

As if to emphasise the gravity of the situation, the edition of the paper that day was printed on orange (front and back pages,) pink (second and last page) and light blue (inside pages).

WSLF CLAIMS ETHIOPIA IS MAIN SOURCE OF WEAPONS

Jiddah ARAB NEWS in English 15 Oct 80 p 3

[Article by Munir Muhammad]

[Excerpts] JEDDAH, Oct 14 — An official of the Western Somali Liberation Front thanked the Kingdom for its aid to the Western Somali people through international and regional humanitarian organizations.

Abdishakur Sheikh Ibrahim, WSLF envoy to the Middle East and editor of DANAB the front's weekly bulletin, also appealed to friendly and brotherly countries to increase their assistance to Western Somali refugees and the front.

"Saudi Arabia is one the leading Arab and Islamic countries supporting the people of Western Somalia financially and morally," he said. Appreciating the Kingdom's role, the WSLF is seeking to open offices in Saudi Arabia. "We hope to be allowed to open offices here soon," Ibrahim added.

The WSLF now controls about 70 per cent of Western Somalia that comprises Harar, Bale, Arusi and part of Sedamo. These areas are claimed by Ehiopia as some of its 14 provinces. Over 90 per cent of the guerrilla-controlled area is rural areas.

Ethiopia has mobilized more than 200,000 soldiers to fight the WSLF and other guerrillas battling for self-determination. "They exceed the number of our fighters," Ibrahim said, "but most of them were what they call militia, peasants taken into the army by force and handed machine guns without adequate training."

The WSLF will change its tactics to wage an urban guerrilla warfare. "We will carry out commando operations inside Ethiopian territories, including the capital Addis Ababa," Ibrahim said. The front has long before planned a long-term war against the occupiers.

The main arms source of the guerrillas is Ethiopia itself. The arms and ammunition they capture from Ethiopians during battles form a portion of their armament. "But most of arms are bought from the Cubans in the Ethiopian army," Ibrahim said. Through WSLF men in the cities, a carton of cigarettes brings a few machineguns and a box of ammunition.

The Cubans and Ethiopian army have a shortage of supplies, according to Ibrahim. "For a few Birrs (Ethiopian currency — Birr equals about (SR1) we can have several guns and ammunition," he said.

Soviet officers are training 45,000 multinational force to intervene quickly in case of pro-Soviet coups in the region's countries. They are being trained at the Debre Zeit air base in northern Ethiopia.

The Soviet Union is strengthening its presence in East Africa. In addition to the military invasion, the Soviets are undergoing cultural and ideological brain-washing. A long-term plan to educate children on the Communist ideology has been adopted.

Kindergartens are being opened in several parts of the country and are operated by East German nurses. Children and infants are taken away from their parents by force. "There are more than 30 suffering mothers in refugee camps in Somalia now whose children were taken away and placed at the kindergartens. The infants were of about 40 days old," Ibrahim said.

Mosques and churches are being demolished, or re-opened as Communist youth education centers. Copies of the holy Koran were burned in public, and ulema were killed also in public.

During their battles with the Ethiopian army, the WSLF fighters have taken many Cuban, South Yemeni and some Soviet prisoners . The Yemenis were released after pleading that they were forced to fight by their government. They asked to be sent to an Arab country. "We contacted a country and it allowed them to enter." Ibrahim said declining to mention the country's name.

The Cubans are living in the frontline camps in Western Somalia. "A lieutenant of the Cuban army, Orlando Carlos, asked by a reporter why he had come to Ethiopia, "I was ordered by the Cuban Communist Party to help the Ethiopian revolution and fight against a certain Nabiya Saudi", he replied." Ibrahim said.

STRATEGIC ITEMS LEAD SHARP INCREASE IN IMPORTS

Johannesburg SUNDAY TIMES-BUSINESS TIMES in English 5 Oct 80 p 4

[Article by Elizabeth Rouse]

[Text] IMPORTS of strategic goods — presumed to include arms and oil — have rocketed this year and have made a marked impact on South Africa's balance of payments.

The value of strategic goods imports are found under the Customs and Excise Department's "other unclassified goods and balance of payments adjustments" imports category and it must be emphasised that these figures give an approximate account of strategic imports.

Strategic imports led the import boom, which really got underway in April this year. Goods in this category were worth R2 845-million in the eight months to August.

But as the economic upswing has quickened, capital goods imports are now expected to rise at a faster rate, say economists.

Defence and industrial needs have escalated so fast this year that they are mainly responsible for the rise in South Africa's imports to a record R3 585-million in the second quarter of the year, reducing South Africa's surplus on balance of payments to R160-million from R3 000-million at the end of 1979, according to Reserve Bank June quarter bulletin figures.

The department's figures show that, on a quarter-to-quarter basis, unclassified imports soared by 70% in the June quarter to R1 176-million from R692-million in the March quarter, far outstripping a 16.8% increase in machinery and electrical equipment imports to R837-million from almost R717-million.

The big spurt came in April when the value of unclassified imports climbed by 55% from the March level to almost R1 073-million, showing a 69.5% rise on imports of almost R633-million in the same time in 1979.

At that stage machinery imports were up 35.6% at R972-million from R719-million in the first four months of 1979, reflecting the first burst in capital goods imports as industrial expansion got going.

The May on April increase in unclassified imports was again impressive at 49.6% to R1 606-million, showing a 122% jump on R723-million in the first five months of 1979.

By comparison, the machinery imports' monthly rise was 30% to R1 266-million, a 40.7% increase on almost R900-million in the first five months of 1979.

Month-on-month unclassified import growth slowed down to 16.4% in June, but at R1 868-million was up a massive 110% from R890-million in the first six months of 1979.

Machinery imports trailed with a 22.7% increase to R1 553-million, showing a 43.4% rise on R1 083-million in the first six months of last year.

By July the strategic tempo geared up again and unclassified goods imports were up 28% to R2 393-million, a 139.4% jump on almost R1 000-million imported in this category in the first seven months of 1979.

In August unclassified imports rose at a slower rate of 19% to R2 845-million, but the increase on the first eight months of 1979's imports of R1 284-million was still an impressive 121.5%.

Machinery imports moved almost in line with unclassified goods in August, showing an 18.4% rise to R2 248-million and a 54.4% advance on R1 457-million's worth of machinery coming into South Africa in the first eight months of last year.

Economists believe that the surge in strategic imports earlier this year was a one-time phenomenon (at least for this year) and that accelerating capital goods imports will push South Africa's current account into a deficit of just over R1 000-million.

Naturally, that calculation does not take gold earnings into account, which assure the country's economic health.

TRADE FIGURES SHOW INCREASED FAVORABLE BALANCE

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 23 Oct 80 p 8

[Text] SOUTH AFRICA had a favourable trade balance of R4 590,5-million in the first nine months of this year compared to R3 756,4-million in the corresponding period last year, according to a preliminary statement of trade statistics released in Pretoria yesterday by the Commissioner of Customs and Excise.

Import during January to September this year amounted to R10 364,5-million free on board (FOB) compared with R6 739,3-million in the same period last year, while exports (also FOB) totalled R14 955,-million as against R10 495,7-million during January to September, 1979.

The import and export figures reflected in the statement had been adjusted largely to bring them into line with the requirements for the compilation of the balance of payments.

Figures relating to the physical movement of gold bullion, oil imports and imports of defence equipment are included in the trade statistics.

Imports from Africa increased from R188,4-million to R217,7-million and exports to African countries from R520,9-million to R846,9-million.

Imports from Europe increased fom R3 065,4-million to R4 160,6-million and exports to Europe from R3 623,7-million to R3 867,1-million.

Imports from America increased from R1 073,7-million to R1 533,5-million and exports to America from R1 397,5-million to R1 537,1-million.

Imports from Asia increased from R824,6-million to R1 279-million and exports to Asia from R1 217,7 million to R1 428-million.

Imports from oceanea increased from R55,9-million to R72,4-million and exports to oceania from R57,4 million to R70,9-million.

Imports of other unclassified goods and balance of payments adjustments increased from R1 581,3-million to R3 101,3-million and exports in this respect from R3 644,5-million to R7 924,4-million.

Exports of ships' and aircraft stores increased from R34-million to R37-million. — Sapa.

ATTEMPTS BY NEIGHBOR STATES AT 'COUNTER CONSTELLATION' DISCUSSED

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 15 Oct 80 p 2

[Article by Patrick Laurence]

[Text] THE attempt by seven Southern African states to stem the flow of migrant labourers to South Africa should be seen as part of their bid to establish a "counter-constellation" of states, Dr Deon Geldenhuys, of the Institute of International Affairs, said yesterday.

Dr Geldenhuys was commenting on the announcement in Lusaka by the Zambian Minister of Labour, Mr Joshua Lumina, of a decision by seven black-ruled states to set up a joint labour commission to end the export of labourers by their countries to South Africa.

The decision was taken at a recent meeting in Swaziland by representatives of Zambia, Angola, Zimbabwe, Mozambique, Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland. The last five of these are substantial exporters of labour to South Africa.

Describing the export of labourers to South Africa by these states as an issue of symbolic importance, Dr Geldenhuys said: "They simply could not ignore it. But to set up a committee to end migrant labour does not mean that they will succeed."

Since the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, committed himself to the establishment of a Pretoria-centred constellation of states, black-ruled Southern African states have held three major conferences at which ways and means of lessening their economic dependence on South Africa have been discussed.

The conferences were held at Arusha in Tanzania, Lusaka, and, most recently, Salisbury. The Swaziland conference seems to have been a smaller affair, but may be significant as a pointer to a new field of activity in the bid to lessen economic dependence on Pretoria.

The first three conferences seem to have concentrated more directly on diminishing trade ties with South Africa and building an alternative African-controlled network of communications.

Zambia and Angola excepted, the member states of the new labour commission have been dependent on South Africa as a provider of work for thousands of their citizens. As underdeveloped regions, they have been characterised by large-scale unemployment and underemployment.

A spokesman for the Chamber of Mines, which recruits migrant workers from neighbouring countries, yesterday put the proportion of foreign migrant workers on South African mines at 42% (of 470 000 workers).

The mines are the chief but not the only employers of foreign blacks. In June 1978 there were more than 327 000 foreign black workers in South Africa, of whom more than 258 000 were on the mines.

NEW SADF CHIEF, VILJOEN, DISCUSSES ROLE

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 15 Oct 80 p 11

[Text]

GENERAL Constand Viljoen, new Chief of the South African Defence Force, yesterday pledged to keep party politics out of the SADF at an informal press conference in Pretoria.

He said that like his immediate predecessor, General Magnus Malan, he would "adhere to the traditional attitude — that the Defence Force is not there to further any political party."

He noted that the Defence Force was subject to the decisions of the Minister of Defence and had to carry out government policy decisions, and sometimes it was difficult to draw a complete distinction between politics and national interests, "but my attitude will always be to refrain from party politics."

The lean, grey-haired former paratrooper was addressing military correspondents for the first time as South Africa's senior military officer.

General Viljoen said he believed the SADF "belongs to all of us. It serves all the language groups and nations of the country. We are all share- holders in this organization."

He saw his primary task as "trying to obtain maximum efficiency . . . for us in the Defence Force, it's a matter of pride".

He invited the media to be "honest" with him and to bring problems and suggestions to his notice where they would be dealt with through the normal channels.

"I will always act in what I see as the best interests of the Defence Force. I shall strive after preparedness. I shall try to see that all populations and all ethnic groups participate in defence. I see the threat against South Africa as aimed at us all."

He said he saw the threat in SWA Namibia as one of "communism-Marxism" pointing out that the South African Government had decided that the people of SWA Namibia must decide on their own form of government "which would of course result in a black-dominated government.

"I believe the population there overwhelmingly does not support communism/Marxism, and I think that such support as Swapo has is mostly the result of intimidation. I believe we in South Africa are honour-bound towards the population of SWA Namibia because we told them we would let them choose their own government.

"Finally, the security of SWA Namibia is very closely connected with that of South Africa".

General Viljoen said "external operations" would continue if they became necessary.

One of the correspondents said many of his readers had complained that the same people were being called up for long periods of service while others were not being called up at all.

General Viljoen said the Defence Force was investigating this matter, adding: "Full equal treatment is impossible. But we can improve on the situation."

He said a movement had started to remove excess national servicemen who had been "accumulating" in various headquarters, adding "this is one of the matters I will definitely take up".

On pay tangles, he said: "I am just as dissatisfied about it as you are". He added, however, that the SADF had encountered "great problems" resulting in part from the fact that pay was controlled by a central computer but had to have a decentralized administration.

He said his own son, who was a serving soldier, had also had to contend with problems caused largely by the fact that he had moved several times from one military area to another.

General Viljoen commented: "We are nomadic troops . . . I think the process is improving fast, and every month a report on the situation has to be made to the Supreme Command."

Asked about further racial integration in the Defence Force, he said: "As I said earlier, I have in mind greater involvement of all groups in the Defence Force and I am not satisfied at this stage, and we will certainly use other groups in the Defence Force."

SLABBERT PLEDGES PFP COOPERATION IF BOTHA NEGOTIATES

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 27 Oct 80 p 11

[Article by Jaap Theron]

[Text] THE Transvaal Progressive Federal Party congress unanimously accepted a resolution over the weekend in which the Transvaal branch of the party "refuse to accept the principle of a President's Council as proposed until such time as Blacks are properly represented on the Council", reports JAAP THERON.

But in a carefully worded speech, the Opposition leader, Dr F van Zyl Slabbert, made what he called "a sincere offer to the Prime Minister", saying that his Party would consider assisting with constitutional matters.

Dr Slabbert said: "If, on constitutional matters, he (the Prime Minister) demonstrates a clear desire to negotiate with the leaders of all the different groups in our country, I personally will go out of my way to see to it that my party assists in every possible manner to ensure that such negotiations are successfull."

PFP supporters who are of the opinion that the Party was making an ass of itself by refusing to take part in the President's Council, interpreted Dr Slabbert's offer to the Premier as "the opening of a back door, should the PFP's refusal to participate backfire."

Dr Slabbert said the role of an effective and relevant White opposition in South Africa was to tell the White what he has to know and not what he wants to hear.

"The minimum we must tell the voter is simply this: A just and peaceful future depends on a constitution negotiated and supported by representatives of all the groups in this land and that a constitution must allow for full citizenship, irrespective of race, with no domination of one group over another."

Boycotters

Dr Slabbert rejected Government members' "accusations" that the PFP was a Party of boycotters because it did not want to take part in a President's Council on which Blacks were not represented.

He said the intensity of the attack on the PFP by the Government was the best testimony that the PFP was doing its job. "Their aggression against us is out of all proportion to our numerical strength, which simply says one thing and that is that we raise issues and fight for causes which lie in the mainstream of South African politics and cut right across the Black-White divide," Dr Slabbert said.

Dr Slabbert strongly repudiated that "personalities in the PFP who enjoy great support and loyalty and who feel strongly for what they stand for," were waging personal vendettas against each other.

WRP DEBATES STAND ON PRESIDENT'S COUNCIL

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 6 Oct 80 p 10

[Text] Political Staff

DURBAN — An attempt to force the New Republic Party to withdraw from the President's Council if blacks were not appointed to the body within a reasonable time was defeated at the party's Natal congress at the weekend.

Even a watered-down amendment by the party's leader, Mr Vause Raw, to withdraw the NRP from the President's Council if blacks were not included in some way in negotiating the constitutional future of South Africa within a reasonable time was rejected by the congress.

Mr Cliff Matthee, MPC for Durban Central, made the initial attempt calling for an amendment to a resolution asking the congress to urge its members on the council to use every opportunity to bring about genuine negotiation among all population groups.

Mr Matthee asked the congress to accept an amendment stipulating that the NRP should withdraw its support of the council if blacks were not included within a reasonable time of "about a year or even 15 or 18 months."

The amendment met with immediate raction and condemnation from congress delegates at which stage Mr Raw intervened.

He told the congress that membership of the President's Council should not be seen as the only vehicle by which blacks could be involved in negotiations on a future constitution.

He asked Mr Matthee to accept a watered-down version that would not refer directly to the President's Council leaving the way open for blacks to be included in negotiations through other mechanisms.

Delegates, however, felt that the party should not be restricted in any manner and rejected Mr Raw's amendment by almost 200 votes to 16.

Later, in his final speech, Mr Raw said that the defeat of the motion could not be interpreted as being a difference in the party.

The party remained committed to involving blacks in negotiations.

"I felt the initial amendment would bind the party too far. The congress has gone further and said why bind it at all."

Earlier during the congress a resolution proposed by Mr Bill Sutton MP who has been appointed to the President's Council, asking the party to endorse the policy of the NRP to serve on the council was unanimously endorsed by delegates.

DE KLERK DISCUSSES POSSIBILITY OF NP SPLIT OVER POLITIES

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Oct 80 p 3

[Text]

JOHANNESBURG — Right-wingers would break with the National Party over the establishment of one parliament for whites, coloureds and Indians who would form a confederation with homeland and urban blacks, a Nationalist editor predicted yesterday.

But the editor, Dr Willem de Klerk, said he still believed that the overwhelming majority of Afrikaner Nationalists would follow Mr P W Botha and accept such a policy.

Assessing the possibilities of a split in Nationalist ranks, Dr de Klerk, editor of Die Transvaler, said in his weekly column for Rapport that future unity would depend on the degree of acceptability of four policy developments.

Joint decisions

- The establishment of one parliament for whites, coloureds and Indians who would sit in separate chambers but would take "joint decisions on virtually everything that affects the Republic."
- The linking of the various black homelands — including urban blacks who would also constitute a "state" — in a confederation together with the white-coloured-Indian Republic.

"There will have to be a confederal council in which certain joint decisions will be taken and referred for approval to each sovereign state," he said.

- Legislation enforcing separation will be reduced "to a few essentials."
- Joint local government management in decentralized areas will increase.

In his speculation on the future direction of Nationalist policy, Dr de Klerk followed the line taken by the Nasionale Pers group of newspapers which closely reflect the views of the Prime Minister.

Nasionale Pers newspapers, Beeld and the Burger, suggested recently that the President's Council could pave the way for the development of a white-coloured-Indian parliament linked with black "states" in a confederation.

Dr de Klerk said communities would still maintain their right to self-determination and certain brakes and counter-balances would be used to prevent domination by one group over another.

He argued that while it was desirable to maintain unity among Afrikaners, unity should not be regarded as a "sacred cow."

Afrikanerdom

On the other hand, decisions on alternatives facing Afrikanerdom could not be postponed for too long. Already, there were groups which would not be able to identify with the new policy direction.

"The HNP and the Mulder group — according to reports this week — are moving closer together and they will definitely draw further NP members," he said.

But Dr de Klerk argued that as the government introduced its new policy direction, "we will have to move heaven and earth to avoid a split," which would only serve to reduce Nationalist negotiating power.

Nationalists, he said, should debate their differences rather than shout at each other from the ranks of splinter parties.

He believed, however, that in the end the overwhelming majority of Nationalists would follow the NP.

MATANZIMA CHARGES COMMUNISTS DISRUPT EDUCATION

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 21 Oct 80 p 13

[Text] COFIMVABA — Black education in South Africa had been destroyed by the activities of the communists who had resolved to infiltrate among South African Blacks, the State President of Transkei, Paramount Chief Kaiser Matanzima, said at Cofimvaba at the weekend.

Chief Matanzima was the main speaker at the 21st anniversary celebrations of the Dalwonga High School.

The occasion was attended by a number of Cabinet Ministers and secretaries of departments. The Secretary of the Prime Minister's Department, Mr M Lujabe, gave a brief history of the school. Mr Lujabe was the first principal of the school from 1960 to 1967.

Chief Matanzima referred to an article in a Sunday newspaper which reported that South African draft-dodgers were recruited by agents of the South African Communist Party.

He said the report explained how young South African Blacks who arrived in Britain were lectured, drawn into the anti-South African organisations and made part of an international network that had embarked on undermining the morale of the people of South Africa.

"I am giving you this report in order that you should evaluate whatever teachings you receive from strangers purporting to be acting in your interests.

"Whoever comes forward to tell you to boycott classes is your potential enemy and my advice is, ostracise him, because his intention is to destroy your future career.

"All the people who leave this country with sinister intentions never return. You are advised to carry on with your studies, qualify in senior secondary education and proceed to university.

"It is only after university education that you can consider the socio-political life of our country as a free and independent nation.

Transkei is our country — we have nowhere to go to. We build its economy, education and its social institutions. We are looking forward to you young men and women to take over from where we shall leave and make your valuable contribution," Chief Matanzima said.

He congratulated the students in high schools in western Tembuland for taking it upon themselves to repulse the intruders who wanted to influence them to join the schools boycotts. — Sapa.

MATANZIMA ATTACKS INDEPENDENT CISKEI PLAN

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 27 Oct 80 p 7

[Text] BUTTERWORTH. — The question of independence for the Ciskei, as a separate entity from Transkei, was so absurd that it could not go unchallenged, the Transkei Prime Minister, Chief George Matanzima, said at Butterworth at the weekend.

Chief Matanzima said at the fourth anniversary independence celebrations if the Government of South Africa proceeded with Ciskei's independence it would be presumed that it had departed from the spirit of the Promotion of Self-government Act No 46 of 1959.

The Act set out clearly that "the Bantu population shall for the purpose of this Act consist of the following national units: the North Sotho unit, the South Sotho unit, the Swazi unit, the Tsonga unit, the Tswana unit, the Venda unit, the Xhosa unit and the Zulu unit."

He said the first Commissioner-General of the Xhosa unit, Mr Hans Abraham, had his jurisdiction extended over both Ciskei and Transkei.

Historical ties

"Transkei and Ciskei, by means of historical ties and cultural ties, share a common destiny. The two countries need to unite and fight the political-social-economic problems afflicting our part of the African continent," Chief Matanzima said.

He said he wished to advise the Chief Minister of the Ciskei, Chief Lennox Sebe, that there was only one type of independence. — Sapa.

SEBE EXPLAINS POSITION ON CISKEI INDEPENDENCE

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 16 Oct 80 p 8

[Text] POLITICIANS of many countries were ill informed about the policies of the national states within South Africa and leaders of these states were written off as puppets of the South African Government, the Chief Minister of the Ciskei, Chief Lennox Sebe, said yesterday.

Speaking to political and economic figures in Paris, Chief Sebe said it was believed alternatively that the power vested in These Black leaders was so rigidly controlled that they were not in a position to exercise any influence on overall policies.

Chief Sebe said the Ciskei's present constitutional status as a self-governing territory within the Repuolic of South Africa was similar to the status granted to former French and British colonies in Africa prior to independence.

"We have made no bones about the fact that we don't fully support the policies of apartheid of the South African Government, but that we are co-operating within those policies because they have created a platform in the South African political arena from which we can legally and fearlessly voice the feelings of our people in an effort to achieve more just political dispensation by peaceful means.

"Today, I and my colleagues in the other national states can claim that we have achieved significant success in our efforts to bring about change in White political attitudes in South Africa."

Change of attitude could be attributed directly to the national states' leaders or to the fact that they had highlighted certain inequalities in the system which had become the focus of world opinion and pressures.

The policy of the South African government was aimed ultimately at bringing the national states to the point of independence.

"My government has never been satisfied with the blueprint in terms of which such independence was being offered to us" Chief Sebe said.

In order to clarify certain areas of obscurity concerning independence, his government had appointed the Quail Commission. When the commission had tabled its report, the Ciskeian Cabinet had attempted to marry the contents of the report to what it saw as being the aspirations of the Ciskei nation.

The "marriage" had produced a document called "Ciskei's independence within the Republic of South Africa" and that had been presented to the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, on February 22 this year.

In the document the Ciskei Government had demanded that" all land which traditionally belongs to our forefathers be returned to our people".

He said the document had stated that the Ciskei would request independence provided the South African Government agreed to enter into a confederal agreement concomitantly with the attainment of independence.

"The Ciskei would not opt for independence if opting implies that the residents of a future independent Ciskei would lose all their rights to their country — South Africa.

"The South African Government has only committed itself on one important issue in this package so far. It has agreed to enter into a confederal agreement.

"The delay on others does not surprise me when one considers that the proposals are a substantial departure from that Government's current blueprint for independence. I am, however, optimistic that in the changing political climate in our country, the other issues will soon be settled." Chief Sebe said.

In the event of the SA Government sanctioning those changes, he would put the proposal to the Ciskeians for their acceptance or refusal in a nationwide referendum.

He did not have any objection to such a referendum being supervised by an international body.

"The means we have adopted to achieve this situation have been both democratic and constitutional, but such are the standards of the modern world that there already appears to be doubt as to whether recognition will be given to the new state of Ciskei if it comes into being.

CISKEI UNABLE TO COPE WITH VOLUME OF RESETTLED PERSONS

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 14 Oct 80 p 6

[Text]

KING WILLIAM'S TOWN — Hundreds of thousands of people in the Ciskei are facing insurmountable problems — and the public is either unaware of it or unconcerned.

The Ciskei Government is battling against huge odds to accommodate the massive influx of people in "resettlement" camps at Oxton, Thornhill, Zweledinga, Kama's Kraal and dozens of other Ciskei areas.

Ntabatemba for instance once accommodated 17 white farming families in reasonable comfort. The area was then planned for three chiefs and their people from the Herschel district after that region had been included into Transkei. Now it has to support 50 000 people from all over South Africa.

The Ciskei Government feels whites in the region should become more involved in assisting with the problem. It just does not have the finance to cope.

Irrigation and other agricultural schemes to bring fertility back to a barren land now also ravaged by drought, are exorbitantly expensive and benefit only a small portion of the population.

Industrial development has provided only few jobs limited to the growth points of Dimbaza, Middledrift and Whittlesea.

And everytime the Ciskei Government is able to accommodate some hundred people, thousands more follow from South Africa and Transkei.

It is this constant stream of people moving into the Ciskei, some voluntarily, some kicked off farms in South Africa or forced by law, that constitutes the vicious circle.

The Ciskei Secretary for Agriculture, Mr Gary Godden, discounts criticism that the Ciskei Government is not doing enough.

"The Ciskei is doing what it can within its limited means to create permanent settlements for these people.

"In both the Ntabatemba and Zweledinga communities, plans are being implemented for the construction of dams, reticulation of water, development of irrigation, layout of residential settlements and building of clinics and schools. Mobile clinics visit the areas and school feeding schemes have are underway.

"In fact, in the current financial year, some R3 700 000 will be spent on the Ntabatemba and Zweledinga rehabilitation schemes.

"It is totally incorrect to create the impression that the Ciskei Government is not concerned about the plight of these people."

Mr Godden says the white community in the region should become far more involved.

"The public, for example, has failed to show any appreciative concern for the difficulties now resulting from the drought."

"In all, some half a dozen donations have been received out of the entire community . . ."

Mr Godden says the resettlement camps are also South Africa's responsibility.

Says Chief L W Maqoma, Minister of the Interior: "Resettlements are really a South African exercise."

Chief Maqoma made it clear the Ciskei was not prepared to inherit this problem with independence.

"We have stated as a clear condition that South Africa must look after these people before independence," he said.

FARMERS CONTINUING TO ABANDON BORDER AREAS

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 4 Oct 80 p 3

[Text] Organised agriculture is extremely alarmed at the number of farmers abandoning their land in South Africa's crucial border areas.

Worst hit are those areas in the Transvaal bordering on Zimbabwe and Botswana where cattle ranching is the main activity.

With about 4 000 Transvaal bushveld farms vacated by white farmers, the Government has so far this year helped only 28 new farmers establish themselves in the bushveld.

While this is a step in the right direction, says South African Agricultural Union economist Servaas de Kock, much more needs to be done by the State to combat the problem.

"The problem will have to be given greater priority. Planning and co-ordination of practical steps will have to be taken on a multi-disciplinary basis and the State will have to take the lead in this process."

He said urgent attention should be given to the following:

- Restoration of profitability in agriculture.
- Ensuring continuation of production by making it easier for a father to hand over his enterprise to a son.
- Incentives to establish white managers on viable farming units where the owners are absent.
- Maintaining essential services in remote areas such as transport, schools and community services even if they are not economically justifiable.

COST OF LIVING INDEX STEADYING, EXCEPT FOR MEAT

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 15 Oct 80 p 10

[Article by Lynn Carlisle]

[Text] APART from soaring meat prices, the rate of inflation shown in the consumer price index dropped for the second consecutive month in August, the SA Federated Chamber of Industries disclosed yesterday.

The FCI's intelligence and research unit said food prices had firmed at 15,7 in real terms in August mainly as a result of the 25 percent incrase in the cost of meat, if compared with August last year.

Other commodities had gone up 12 percent if compared with the same month last year, but this had notably been below rises of 15 percent in both May and June this year.

A deceleration in the rate of increase in the cost of services had also been observed — from 12,3 percent in July to 10,5 percent in August.

"The levelling off of the inflation rate was particularly evident since mid-year, declining from 14,6 percent in June to 12,2 percent in July and further to 11,9 percent in August.

"If this tendency continues well into the second half of this year, inflationary fears propagated earlier will be kept in check," the FCI said.

While the cost of living index levelled off materially for the higher and middle-income groups, the lower-income group did not follow the same pattern as a result of the higher proportion of food in the "basket of commodities" noted for this group.

Meanwhile, the Government is expected to implement tighter control on consumer credit which will curtail the spending spree.

Dr Bob de Jong, outgoing Governor of the Reserve Bank, has hinted that spending will have to be reduced if demand inflation is to be avoided.

Dr Braam van Staden, the Reserve Bank's Deputy-Governor designate, reportedly said South Africa was getting closer to the stage where demand would exceed supply — in spite of the door for imports being left wide open to relieve the pressure.

The Government would also keep a tight grip on the money supply, he said.

KOORNHOF MEETS WITH HOMELAND LEADERS

Quality of Life Discussed

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 18 Oct 80 p 5

[Text]

PRETORIA. — The Minister of Co-operation and Development, Dr Piet Koornhof, met homeland leaders here yesterday to discuss steps towards improving the quality of life in the homelands.

The meeting, here yesterday morning, follows the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha's, initiative on the constellation of states earlier this year and the ensuing meetings.

Professor Hudson Ntsanwisi, Chief Minister of Gazankulu, who spoke on behalf of the homeland leaders, said they had had "creative talks", divorced from constitutional matters and discrimination, but which aimed at improving the quality of the people's life.

The issues discussed, he said, were aimed at:

- Organizing the black states into recognized economic units.
- Forming a development bank to help people to utilize their abilities in their effort towards improving their quality of life.
- Promoting small industries in which the private sector would be interested.

Professor Ntsanwisi said the main idea was to eradicate poverty, deprivation and disease and the discussions had been worth the effort.

"Things we discussed augur well for the future," he said.

He said the issues discussed would be discussed at the next parliamentary session.

Dr Koornhof said further discussions would follow in December. Consultations with the Prime Minister would also follow.

NEW AMMONIUM NITRATE PLANT PLANNED

Johannesburg SUNDAY TIMES-BUSINESS TIMES in English 5 Oct 80 p 32

[Article by Andrew McNulty]

[Text] NATIONAL Process Industries (NPI) is to build a new ammonium nitrate plant in South Africa at a capital cost of at least R25-million.

The plant will produce some 9 000 to 12 000 tons of ammonium nitrate a month, consuming an annual 30 000 to 40 000 tons of ammonia.

This was disclosed this week by Oliver Hill, managing director of NPI.

Detailed plans are still being evaluated, but a decision to build the plant has been taken.

If on stream within the next three to four years, this output will augment massive new production of ammonia and its by-products by major chemical producers including Sasol and, possibly, Fedmis.

Future developments in the ammonia industry are to be discussed by Mr Hill at a major conference on the chemical industry to be held in Johannesburg on October 21.

Mr Hill calculates annual supplies to the South African market from local sources currently total about 735 000 tons, comprising 500 000 tons from AECI, 80 000 tons from Sasol, 100 000 tons from Fedmis, about 20 000 tons produced indirectly by Iscor, and 35 000 manufactured from imported solid nitrogen.

Imports will total about 70 000 tons.

Much of this is derived from NPI's 100 000 ton/year plant in Swaziland, which also markets 30 000 tons to Zimbabwe.

At full output, Sasol 2 will nominally produce 110 000 tons of ammonia and a further similar amount will eventually be produced by Sasol 3.

Even if Fedmis commissions a major new ammonia plant it is evaluating, likely to cost at least R400-million, Mr Hill still sees no prospect of imports ever becoming unnecessary.

He forecasts annual growth in demand of no less than 10% compounded.

"Import demand may round off in 1981 and 1982 when Sasol 2 builds up but after that it will take off again."

The current value of the local ammonia market is estimated at R25-million and forecast to reach R45-million within a few years.

COMPUTER NETWORK FOR LABOR INFORMATION UNDER STUDY

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 11 Oct 80 p 8

[Article by Johan Kloppers]

[Text] THE Government is continually seeking improvement regarding Black labour and is considering the introduction of a computer network to control it although no definite decisions have been taken yet.

This was confirmed yesterday by a department spokesman who said the aim was to achieve greater efficiency in this regard.

Computers in all areas now controlled by the main administration boards, linked to each other and to a central computer in Pretoria will enable the Government to combat unemployment by providing instant information on where jobs are and where workers can do the jobs.

A report says this would enable the boards to have access to much personal information about any person within their areas of jurisdiction.

It says that such a system could benefit Blacks in a number of ways such as getting jobs anywhere with a minimum of delay.

Meanwhile, Mrs Helen Suzman, Progressive Federal Party spokesman on Black affairs said the introduction of such a system could lead to South Africa becoming a bureaucratic state "which will make the pass system seem like child's play".

But, she said, the system might have some important benefits for Black people, it could introduce a degree of labour control which she doubted existed anywhere.

VISITORS TO ISRAEL SEE LESSONS FOR NAMIBIA, BORDER DEFENSE

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 20 Oct 80 p 11

[Article by Marilyn Cohen]

[Excerpts] THE inability of the United Nations forces in Lebanon to control an armed terrorist presence in the area under their jurisdiction has serious implications for South Africa and South West Africa.

This is the view of Dr Harold Serebro, leader of the South African President's mission to Israel which returned to South Africa last week.

The mission, made up of leading business executives, professional men and farmers from all parts of the country, spent two weeks in Israel meeting with leading Israeli politicians and military personnel including Israeli President Yitzhak Navon, General Moshe Dayan and Mr Nathanael Lorch, the general secretary of the Knesset (Parliament).

The South African mission was taken on a visit into southern Lebanon through the "Good Fence" after signing indemnity forms releasing the Israeli Government from responsibility in the event of their being attacked.

Incapable

The South African party was told by a top Israeli military official that, despite UN forces in the area, they seem unable to maintain law and order and keep the peace.

'Good Fence'

The trip into Lebanon had made a deep impression on the South Africans, especially in the light of the fact that the Israelis manage to maintain the "Good Fence" at the border town of Metulla, despite the conflict.

Some 500 Lebanese cross the "Good Fence" every day to receive medical attention in Israel and to carry on trade. Large numbers also cross into Israel every day to work.

"The situation in southern Lebanon immediately made us think of our own situation in South West Africa," Dr Serebro said.

"The United Nations is proposing to set up a peacekeeping force in South West Africa, yet the Lebanese situation shows that they are unable to control large numbers of armed terrorists who operate from within their areas of control. There is no way they can guarantee that armed incursions into the surrounding areas, both those under their control and those adjacent to it, will not occur.

"What makes it worse is that the United Nations has recognised the PLO and allowed Arafat to address the UN — and the United Nations is also known to be pro-Swapo," he added.

The South Africans were also taken to a secret Israeli Air Force base and were given a demonstration of the F-16 fighter bombers.

The need to have highly sophisticated aircraft manned and maintained by highly trained personnel was evident from the fact that the air base was, in terms of modern warfare, only two minutes from both the Lebanese and Syrian borders and four minutes from the Egyptian border.

"The level of preparedness we saw at the base, and the calibre of the Israeli pilots — their commitment and understanding of their duty — indicates why the Israeli Air Force is probably one of the best in the world," Dr Serebro said.

A visit to a border settlement also impressed on the South Africans the need to establish similar settlements in this country.

"We visited a moshav made up entirely of South African immigrants. The area they live in is populated by 300 Jewish families and more than 45 000 Arabs," Dr Serebro said.

"The people who live in these vulnerable border areas provide a vital line of defence in the protection of their country. The same could be done here. It should be seen as an urgent priority to build towns, encourage agriculture and industry and financially assist people who are prepared to settle in our own border areas."

POLL OF TELEVISION VIEWERS CRITICIZED AS TARGETING JEWS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 25 Oct 80 p 9

[Article by Marilyn Cohen]

[Text] THE Human Sciences Research Council's survey into the impact television has made on the views different population groups have of each other was not a "views-on-Jews probe".

The acting director of the Institute for Communication Research at the HSRC, Dr D P van Vuuren, said yesterday that the 24-page questionnaire was intended to determine attitudes towards seven cultural groups in the country — English-speaking, Afrikaans-speaking, Black, Indian, Coloured, Jewish and Portuguese South Africans.

The current questionnaire has already been circulated among the Cape Coloureds, Zulus and South Sothos and was recently sent to 1 500 Afrikaans-speaking and 1 500 English-speaking South Africans selected at random throughout the country.

Asked why Jews and Portuguese were the only groups to be singled out, Dr Van Vuuren said it was probably because of the size of these communities in South Africa.

"The questionnaire is already very long and involved. We had to select some of the culture groups — we couldn't cover them all," he said.

He pointed out that the same questionnaire, with only a few variations in the questions, had been sent out to the different population groups twice before — the first in 1974 and the second in 1977.

"This questionnaire forms only part of a whole programme designed to monitor the effect of television on, for example, children, or time utilisation, or opinions," Dr Van Vuuren said.

The foreword to the questionnaire says it was planned in co-operation with the SABC.

However, a spokesman for the SABC, Mr Eric van der Merwe, said the corporation had no direct involvement with the survey in practice, but only received the results.

Mr Van der Merwe said the questionnaire — which is reported to have caused some concern among the Jewish and Portuguese communities — was a result of one of the recommendations made by the 1969 commission of inquiry into matters relating to television.

The recommendation, which was part of the commission's report tabled in Parliament in 1970, was as follows:

"A scientific study of the existing socio-cultural structure should be made well in advance of the introduction of television under the direction of the HSRC in collaboration with the SABC and university authorities.

"Such a study could define the abiding Christian and broad national system of values and the developing composition of the social structure of the community so that the effect of our own television service on our social structure can constantly be assessed."

The first such survey was completed in 1974, before the introduction of television. Another was completed in 1977, and this is the third, Mr Van der Merwe said. He added that the results of the two previous surveys were "strictly confidential".

"We are trying to find out if the views the different groups have of each other have changed due to the impact of television.

"It is hoped that television programmes could help them to get to know each other better," Dr Van Vuuren said.

However, the executive director of the South African Jewish Board of Deputies, Mr A Goldberg, said he was "surprised and disturbed about the entire exercise".

"I fail to understand why they have singled out Jews and Portuguese when there are so many other minority groups in the country — what about the Italians, Greeks, Germans, French and so on?" he asked.

'MUSLIM NEWS' SUPPORTS IRAN IN WAR WITH IRAQ

Capetown MUSLIM NEWS in English 3 Oct 80 p 20

[Editorial: "The Iran-Iraq Conflict]

[Text] 'O Apostle! rouse the believers to the fight. if there are twenty amongst you, patient and persevering, they will vanquish two hundred; if a hundred they will vanquish a thousand of the disbelievers; for those (the disbelievers) are a people without understanding.' (Al-Qur'an 8: 65)

The above verse gives clear encouragement to the people of Iran. The entire so-called leadership of the Muslim world and the forces of imperialism stand together to oppose the Islamic Revolution. But victory has been promised to those who fight in the way of Allah. Numbers and support from others does not matter.

However, all those who stand for truth and justice are duty-bound to support the Islamic struggle of the people of Iran.

This is not a struggle between two 'Muslim brothers fighting out of greed', as an Imam put it from the mimbar last Friday. It is a battle between the forces of the Momin (believer) against those of the Munafiq (hypocrite).

The trials that the Islamic Revolution is facing, in the form of the present conflict, and will face in the future, should also serve as a lesson to those seeking liberation from an oppressive system. Those with vested interests will try their utmost to halt the liberation process and force a compromise.

There can be no compromise with injustice. Ayatollah Khomeini is snidingly referred to as being belligerent. But the Ayatollah has recognised that a settlement of the conflict negotiated by a person such as Zia-ul-Haq, for instance, will be to restore the interests of all those who were dealt a severe blow by the Islamic Revolution. It's worth remembering that Zia paid the customary respect to the shah in 1978. It was not only Carter!

Ayatollah Khomeini's ultimatum to Iraq — portrayed as being fanatical and unreasonable by the Western media, and swallowed by some Muslims here — has its roots in the Qur'an:

'And fight them on until there is no more tumult or oppression, and there prevail justice and faith in Allah altogether and everywhere. But if they cease, verily Allah does see all that they do.' (8: 39)

The Iraqi nation suffers under oppression. So do Muslims in other countries. The message is clear. There can be no passive explanation of the Qur'anic command.

KOORNHOF VISITS SOWETO, PROMISES MORE JOB TRAINING

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 16 Oct 80 p 2

[Article by Keith Abendroth]

[Text] THE Minister of Co-operation and Development, Dr Piet Koornhof, yesterday promised the gazetting before the end of the month of wideranging planned legislation to "remove unnecessary irritating measures and hurtful discrimination."

Speaking in the wake of fresh sabotage and unrest in Soweto — and in the heart of Soweto itself — Dr Koornhof also spoke of state consideration of differential tariff increases for Black urban residents based more on their income levels.

Dr Koornhof told a crowd celebrating the 75th anniversary of Soweto — at a function at which he received the Freedom of Soweto — that he hopefully expected the publication before October 31 of three major Bills affecting Blacks.

- The first was one relating to the promotion of local government in urban Black townships.
- The second related to the community development of Black people outside the national states.
- The third was an omnibus Bill — which covered a number of subjects — particularly to repeal existing legislation.

"These three Bills are intended to give effect to the Government's decisions on the Riekert Report and deal with a wide spectrum of matters which it is hoped will contribute greatly towards improving the quality of life of Black people and removing unnecessary irritating measures and hurtful discrimination from the Statute Book," said Dr Koornhof.

He invited Soweto residents as well as the general public to submit comments to his Deaprtment as they could only be finalised and presented to Parliament after comments and amendments had been considered and made.

Soweto, he said, was part and parcel of the history of South Africa — and "you can't deny history."

Soweto was the counterpart of the often traumatic experience of other communities in becoming urbanised and moving from a subsistence to an industrial economy.

Growing pains

He sincerely hoped that Soweto, as had happened at other places and in other countries, would outgrow and overcome its growing pains.

"I am an optimist and an idealist and I say that we are moving forward, we are making headway."

Dr Koornhof spoke at length on Government plans to step up training facilities for Blacks and aims for increased Black participation in the country's free enterprise system, and said that manpower problems which were now formidable had to be overcome to prevent stultifying the present economic growth.

Private enterprise would have to help the State improve training facilities.

Imperative

"If we are to develop our economy to meet the needs of a changing world, it is imperative that we give attention to the vocational training of the Black man."

Specifically, the Government was smoothing the way to the development — in the free enterprise system — of an economically significant Black entrepreneural class.

While the state recongised the importance of the development of the Black national states, the advancement of Black residential areas in the Republic itself was no less essential.

"The acceleration of Black economic development in the Southern African context is not a question of mere desirability — it is a matter of urgent, demonstrable necessity."

In real terms, the average earnings of South African Whites had decreased by an average 0,3 percent a year while that of Black workers in Soweto was increasing by an annual average of 6,1 percent.

Fifty percent of the homes in Soweto now had an income of more than R3 100 a year, while 16,8 percent had an income of R1 850 or less.

Measured in world bank terms, 50 percent of Soweto homes could afford homes costing R6 200 or more, while 40 percent could afford homes in prices ranging between R3 700 and R6 600.

It appeared that increased tariffs could be accommodated without families dropping below the minimum existence level.

While there was considerable room for tariff increases, in some way account would have to be kept with the differences in income groups.

Because of the considerable gap between what was at present paid for housing and what was regarded economically and internationally as acceptable, together with the political implication and resistance, any increases would have to be introduced gradually.

KOORNHOF'S SOWETO RECEPTION SHOWS CHANGE IN ATTITUDES

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 18 Oct 80 p 5

[Article by Allister Sparks]

[Text] IN AUGUST last year Mr P W Botha paid his historic visit to Soweto. He was given quite a friendly welcome and was able to walk among the people and talk to them. Some people even wanted to touch him and shake his hand.

This week, 14 months later, Dr Koornhof paid a visit to Soweto. He was met by angry crowds of protesters who shouted and shook their fists at him and who had to be kept back by ropes, police dogs and tearsmoke.

Why the difference? After all we have a Government which is supposed to be committed to change and to improving the lot of urban blacks. Surely there should have been an improvement, not a dramatic deterioration, in Soweto's reception for a symbolic representative of this Government of change. Particularly since Dr Koornhof is the Government's foremost verligte, the good guy who is supposed to be in the vanguard of this reform.

In the difference between these two receptions, I believe, lies the whole story of what is happening in South Africa at the moment.

Whites — or at least pro-Government whites — believe it has been a year of stirring changes which has seen the worst of apartheid on its way out.

But blacks regard it as having been a year of disillusionment, in which things have grown worse for them rather than better.

It is all a matter of perspective. Change, like beauty, is in the eye of the beholder. In the context of Afrikaner Nationalist politics, the things Mr Botha and Dr Koornhof have said may seem bold. They have set up a President's Council which, though it excludes blacks and is only advisory, breaks the political colour bar: a dramatic step in Nationalist terms. They have recognised the permanence of urban blacks and aim to give them a measure of local self-government, which is another break with basic Nationalist ideology.

It may seem a big deal to whites. But what does it amount to when viewed from a black perspective?

Blacks hear all this talk about change, but the reality of their everyday lives remains as it always was. Their whole existence is still dominated by all the myriad regulations of apartheid, and the massive, omnipresent, hostile officialdom which administers them.

They are still arrested by the thousand under the pass laws; they are still endorsed out to remote dumping grounds under the influx control regulations; they still have to live in a racial ghetto with an appalling shortage of houses; ride in overcrowded segregated trains and go to overcrowded segregated schools with a separate and inferior educational system.

And they still have no citizenship rights in this place where they live and work, no proper security, no proper mobility, no right to sell their labour to best advantage in a free labour market, and above all no political rights to enable them to redress any of these disadvantages — nor any prospect of getting any.

Moreover, things have not merely remained the same for the black man in this white man's year of change. Some things have happened to make life even more trying — and infuriating.

While whites have been enjoying the fruits of a boom, blacks have been feeling the pinch of unprecedented inflation.

While white property values have doubled, Sowetans, who cannot own property, have been subjected to a 75% rent increase which began in August and will be completed in February.

And while they have been told that this painful rent increase is unavoidable because of a shortage of funds in administration board coffers, they have also discovered that the administration boards have been donating money to a white Nationalist study group which is largely responsible for devising the very system that oppresses them.

On top of all this there was a symbolic feature of Dr Koornhof's visit that even the most obtuse whites should have realised was provocative.

The people of Soweto are aliens in "white" South Africa. They have to carry passes wherever they go. Yet the white Minister can fly in in a helicopter to be given the freedom of their black city.

They cannot be citizens of South Africa. Yet Dr Koornhof can be made an honorary citizen of Soweto.

The bitter irony of this does not escape people who feel a deep sense of grievance anyway.

The really important thing about this whole story of the two Soweto visits, however, lies in the way it illustrates the difference between white and black perceptions of this so-called period of change.

It in fact reveals how the whites of this country are deluding themselves in exactly the same way the white Rhodesians did.

Because they are working through black nominee leaders, they are out of touch with the real feelings in the black community. They imagine they are making changes that are assuaging black grievances and winning their goodwill, whereas in fact black alienation is growing worse.

They listen to their nominee leaders who tell them what they want to hear, and conclude that the other spokesmen are just agitators with no real support — and that the protesters are merely responding to intimidation.

And so they don't change their course. They are complacent, believing that what they are doing is adequate.

But there inevitably comes a moment of truth for anyone who deceives himself. For the white Rhodesians it came with shattering force when the blacks voted overwhelmingly for Robert Mugabe and their own nominee was wiped out.

For white South Africans there should have been at least a glimpse of the truth, a fore-warning of it, in Wednesday's evidence of how Soweto really feels about PW and his reforms.

But unfortunately, down through the ages the capacity for self-deception and for misreading the signs of reality has shown itself to be quite enormous among elite groups who are in a position of power and privilege.

KOORNHOF DISCUSSES ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PLANS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 21 Oct 80 p 10

[Text] THE acceleration of Black economic development within the Southern Africa context was not a question of mere desirability, but a matter of urgent, demonstrable necessity, the Minister of Co-operation and Development, Dr Piet Koornhof, said at the weekend.

He was speaking at a dinner in Pretoria marking the 21st anniversary of the Corporation for Economic Development Ltd.

"I can assure you that the figures involved in terms of new job opportunities needed and the capital investment required to create those jobs, are nothing less than startling if one analyses them carefully," he said.

It was estimated that nearly six-million new job opportunities for Blacks alone would have to be created during the next 20 years — almost 1 500 jobs per working day of each year.

"In financial terms this means an investment of about R15-million per working day, calculated at a conservative figure of R10 000 per job opportunity in the industrial sector. You can imagine with what astronomical figures we are dealing if you calculate them for 20 years — namely about R60 000-million.

"The Government is aware of the problem and has appointed several commissions of investigation to undertake in-depth studies of the Southern African scene and to recommend possible solutions."

The development task was a huge one and it had already been demonstrated on several occasions that the development actions in the various regions of South Africa must complement one another rather than to try to "go it alone".

For this reason, Dr Koornhof said, the Prime Minister Mr P W Botha, had indicated that future development would concentrate on regional development projects and a development bank would have to be established.

"This development bank, which will incorporate the CED, will be the development arm of the Council of Ministers of the Constellation of States and will have the necessary manpower to undertake basic research and the implementation of projects.

"Furthermore, it is envisaged that all development activities will be carried over to the local national development corporations.

"The latter, however, will have to acquire funds for projects from the development bank and as long as the SA Government provides funds for development in the widest sense of the word, it will inevitably want to monitor the implementation of projects and the appropriation of funds.

"The projects will be designed to promote development and job creation on a regional basis and need not necessarily be located in the national states.

Dr Koornhof said he was convinced that today it was a question not only of development, but of survival from the communist onslaught against South Africa.

"We have the wealth and the abilities and we must work together to build a prosperous country.

"Let us understand and state unequivocally that the private business sector in South Africa has a vital function to perform in the development process and in promoting the principles and aims of the free-enterprise system, especially insofar as the Black and Coloured sections of the population are concerned.

"We, from the Government's side, can establish development banks, development bodies, etc, but if we do not have the backing and cooperation of the private sector, we will not be able to achieve our goals.

"Without the active assistance, support and participation of the private business sector, the attempt to accelerate development just cannot succeed. Let us join hands in the new development era and I am sure we will find after another 21 years that the results are truly phenomenal," Dr Koornhof said. — Sapa.

OFFICIAL REBUTS QOBOZA ARTICLES ON BLACK EDUCATION

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 16 Oct 80 p 11

[Article by Keith Abendroth]

[Text] GIANT steps to provide more education for Blacks were outlined in Pretoria yesterday by Mr G J Rousseau, director general of the Department of Education and Training.

He gave details of the Government's Black education plans in reply to statements in the Washington Star by Mr Percy Qoboza, editor of Post, who is in the United States.

Mr Rousseau deplored references by Mr Qoboza to a speech made by the late Dr Verwoerd 26 years ago and claimed that it had been misconstrued by Dr Qoboza who had "conveniently neglected to refer to subsequent statements" by other Cabinet Ministers.

Mr Rousseau quoted at length from later statements of intention by various Cabinet Ministers, and said it was important to remember that Dr Verwoerd's speech was made at a time of different labour patterns and was justified at that time.

Subservient

He said that subsequent statements could not be construed to support Mr Qoboza's claim that South Africa's Black education policy was "aimed at producing a subservient generation of Blacks."

He challenged other statements by Mr Qoboza and went on to give facts and figures for what was really being done for Black education in South Africa.

He said that the Black schoolgoing population had risen from 1-million in 1955 to 4,7-million this year and that a full programme to wipe out illiteracy was in operation.

The number of full-time matriculants had increased from 1,5 in 1955 to 43 700 in 1980 — an increase of 6 400 percent. Likewise, the pass rate had increased from 19 percent in 1955 to 76 percent last year.

Standards expected of matriculants were exactly the same as for any other population group.

Increase

Enrolment in secondary schools throughout the country was 35 000 in 1955, but last year it was 658 000 — an increase of 1 700 percent over 25 years.

Black students at university had increased from 481 in 1960 to 6 364 last year, not including 9 906 Black students enrolled at other universities and the University of South Africa.

The percentage of children of schoolgoing age actually at school had increased from 36,7 in 1961 to 75,2 in 1975.

But perhaps the most concrete evidence of the Government's intention to introduce equal education was found in the increase in the Department of Education's budget to R249,3-million this year, compared with R72-million in 1972.

In addition, the National States and independent states budgeted for their own educational needs, said Mr Rousseau.

Unesco

Mr Qoboza had also claimed that Blacks did not want to come to South Africa "because they know they can no longer get a first-rate education there".

Mr Rousseau said: "Education for Blacks in South Africa is the best, percentage wise, and far superior to any in the rest of Africa. This is borne out by figures published by Unesco and the Organisation for African Unity."

'DIE BURGER' COMMENT ON NP BYELECTION COMPROMISE

Capetown THE CAPE TIMES in English 18 Oct 80 p 5

[Translation of DIE BURGER editorial: "Democracy in NP" -- no date given]

[Text] NOMINATIONS in the Western Cape with a view to the coming parliamentary by-elections in which the Minister of Industry, Trade and Tourism, Dr Dawie de Villiers, was involved, ended satisfactorily for all concerned, thus reaffirming the democratic principles of the National Party.

Dr de Villiers — before he left last week for Taiwan on an official visit during which he had to ratify important treaties on behalf of the South African Government — allowed himself to be nominated as the aspirant-candidate in the Moorreesburg constituency as a result of requests by local Nationalists.

Support for another aspirant-candidate, Dr Wynand Malan, MPC, also came strongly to the fore — to such an extent that it could have caused dissension, as Dr de Villiers himself indicated in his statement.

With his return from Taiwan, Dr de Villiers received requests from other constituencies to be nominated there.

The NP branches of Cape Town-Gardens for example, made a unanimous request and he accepted the nomination in this constituency, which turned Nationalist in 1977.

The outcome was thus not merely a happy one for Moorreesburg and Cape Town-Gardens mutually, but also clear evidence of how the voters of the constituencies concerned exerted their wishes and will, and how strongly democratic principles are maintained within the National Party.

This process is in sharp contrast with the methods of the official Opposition as was once again revealed in Simon's Town only the other day.

There a sportsman-farmer was brought in as Prog candidate from outside — not at the request of the party's supporters, but by a secret candidates committee which made decisions behind closed doors. To this day the Progressive Federal Party has not dared to say who serves on that secret committee, in spite of insistence even in Prog-minded newspapers that they owe it to the voters.

The National Party allowes itself to be led by more than the mere realisation that it could be dangerously counter-productive to force a candidate on a constituency. The pure workings of democracy still remains one of the chief sources of its strength.

The voters would do well to take note of this now, in view of the by-elections.

TREURNICHT REAFFIRMS AFRIKANERS' RIGHTS TO NATIONHOOD

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 11 Oct 80 p 2

[Text] PAARL. — The recognition of other population groups' right to self-determination did not mean the Afrikaner should betray or abdicate from his own rights to nationhood, the Minister of State Administration and Statistics, Dr Andries Treurnicht, told a Kruger Day audience at the Afrikaanse Taalmonument here last night.

"It has come to our notice that others are mapping out their future at the cost of the Afrikaner. This is completely unacceptable," Dr Treurnicht said.

The continued existence of the Afrikaner was not only questioned from outside but also inside Afrikaner circles. It could not be denied that if Afrikaners themselves were thinking these thoughts it was dangerous.

The defence of South Africa and the maintenance of Afrikaner nationalism should not be played off against one another, the minister said.

"Other people should stop considering it as an unfriendly attitude when we discuss our nation's future."

Dr Treurnicht said the Afrikaner people were no longer fighting British imperialism as many people of British descent were identifying with the Afrikaner.

West can no longer command

At the same time the West had lost its domination of the world.

"The West can persuade but cannot command any longer," he said.

The Afrikaner was the only survivor in a liberated Africa from which European influences had disappeared.

The Afrikaner nation had come into conflict with a new world philosophy of equal human rights.

"We cannot accept the US President Mr Jimmy Carter's new world of human rights."

But, Dr Treurnicht said, he had to speak out against the thought that separate national identities were irreconcilable with Afrikaner nationhood.

"I do not believe that a conflict between Afrikaner nationalism and black nationalism is inevitable."

He believed South Africa was leading the West back to justice and enlightenment. — Sapa

HEUNIS URGES CLOSER WHITE-COLORED POLITICAL COOPERATION

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 25 Oct 80 p 6

[Article by Jaap Theron]

[Text] WHITE South Africans were warned yesterday that it would be "fatal" for them to allow the Coloured population to drift away from them politically.

The Minister of Internal Affairs, Mr Chris Heunis, told a relations committee meeting at Beaufort West that the 2,5-million Coloured people cannot be denied their political rights.

"As good South Africans they are entitled to political representation and to a political voice so that our country's affairs can be properly organised," he said.

Mr Heunis quoted the Prime Minister, who has said he would like to see reconciliation between Coloured and White and said more should be done than the creation of relations committees.

Consideration must be given to adaptations that were necessary "to give our Coloured people a form of political participation in the decision-making process".

Mr Heunis said: "Through the initiatives that were already launched adaptations could now be brought about without the necessity that the right of self-determination of anyone would be affected."

He stressed that he would like to give an "assurance that another dispensation that would be to the satisfaction of all would definitely come about.

"If we were really honest and sincere with regard to our approach against our Coloured peoples then we may no longer postpone their participation in the various power structures of our country," Mr Heunis said.

"It would be fatal if we allowed these people to drift away from us in a political sense," he said.

He was not prepared to say what form the Coloureds' "political rights" should take but added that "an acceptable political participation for our Coloured people must come about".

HEUNIS BECOMING TORCH-BEARER OF NP VERLIGTE FACTION

Johannesburg SUNDAY TIMES in English 5 Oct 80 p 10

[Article by Ivor Wilkins]

[Text] MR Chris Heunis, incoming Minister of Internal Affairs, emerged this week as the new torch-bearer of the verligte faction of the National Party.

In an interview with the Sunday Times, Mr Heunis said the National Party was in the process of adapting, and he predicted it would continue to do so at an accelerating pace.

Mr Heunis was this week drawn closer to the Prime Minister's initiatives when it was announced that he would next year take responsibility for all the planning functions in the Prime Minister's enlarged office.

As Minister of Internal Affairs, he will deal closely with constitutional developments, and in his new capacity will have a direct role in the Prime Minister's committees dealing with economic, financial, scientific, social affairs and physical planning.

The Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, announced Mr Heunis's new position at the National Party's Cape congress in Port Elizabeth this week. Shortly afterwards, Mr Heunis made a strong plea for change.

Taking the Prime Minister's much-quoted theme of adapt or die, Mr Heunis said: "The only constant factor in life is change. How is it possible that, without adaptation, people will survive?"

Mr Heunis went on to say that South Africa would have to succeed in giving to all groups and individuals the rights normally identified with a democracy.

If South Africa failed to do this, it would be added to the failures of the world.

Ally

But, in the same speech, he firmly shut the door on including blacks in the President's Council, despite a determined effort by a small group of delegates to leave the matter open for the council itself to decide.

Mr Heunis, who is identified as a close ally of the Prime Minister, was described by a senior Nationalist at the congress as one of the main performers in a campaign to "prepare the party for change".

He struck a similar, strongly reformist tone at a keynote speech during the National Party's Natal congress.

CONCERN EXPRESSED OVER INDEPENDENCE OF JUDICIARY

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 16 Oct 80 p 10

[Editorial: "Time for Judges To Speak Frankly"]

[Text] MR JUSTICE John Didcott's evidence to the Hoexter Commission, which we published yesterday, contains detail of profound significance to the health of our country. Never before, to the best of our knowledge, has a judge expressed himself so clearly and forcefully about the domain in which he exists.

The nature of the domain pushes a judge into being aloof and remote. That is added to by stern rules which, while having the worthy purpose of protecting the integrity and reputation of the courts, exert a powerful negative influence in effectively placing judges and the courts beyond probing examination and vigorous comment.

Through Mr Justice Didcott's memorandum the public is for once taken behind the scenes — and what emerges is startling and deeply worrying.

It is the proposal for the establishment of intermediate courts which led to Mr Justice Didcott putting down his views. In this sphere alone he sets alarm bells ringing. For his brilliantly argued case leaves no room for doubt that intermediate courts would be a waste of money, retrogressive and damaging to the status and functioning of the Supreme Court.

His assessment is fully shared by his colleague, Mr Justice A J Milne, also of the Natal Bench, whose views we published yesterday. And clearly, as both Judge Didcott and Judge Milne say, they are not alone in their thinking: Mr Justice Milne, for example, notes that the proposal to call personnel of intermediate courts "judges" was opposed by the Natal judiciary "to a man".

The Hoexter Commission has the task of assessing the intermediate courts' proposal, and no one will want to anticipate its findings. Obviously, however, eminent judicial opinion will weigh heavily in its deliberations.

That, it must be hoped, will be all the more so because of the suspicion voiced by Mr Justice Didcott that the intermediate courts' proposal is but the means to an end — which is no less than what he describes in blunt terms as a "deliberate and determined strategy" to harness and control the Supreme Court.

He speaks with obvious passion and anger about the circumstances surrounding this: judicial discontent and low morale; inadequate salaries paid to judges; the erosion of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court; the Government's failure over the years to appoint leading counsel to the bench; the growing influence of the Department of Justice in becoming the master, rather than the servant, of the Supreme Court.

As he points out, the distinction between the judiciary, the executive and the legislature is a constitutional requirement. It is also a fundamental safeguard of what personal liberties remain to us. If the "planners" have their way, the Supreme Court will be stripped of its independence, leaving only the final myth of judicial integrity.

What now, however? Mr Justice Didcott having spoken out, what action will follow to halt the rot?

The first official reaction is hardly reassuring. Mr H J Coetsee, the new Minister of Justice, has issued a statement giving assurance that the Department of Justice "denies that it is set on undermining the Supreme Court". If the department is indeed undermining the court, as Judge Didcott says it is, it is hardly going to own up to it.

More serious, however, is Mr Coetsee's criticism of this newspaper for having dared to publish the judge's memorandum. If publication of material, as clearly important to the public interest as this, is not considered "proper", then what is?

That is a view which we hope others will equally subscribe to — and act upon. Mr Justice Didcott has displayed courage all too rare in South Africa these days in setting out his views on paper. Those fellow-judges of his who agree with his dire warnings, as well as those advocates and attorneys who also know what is going on, must come into the open.

This is the time to stand up and be counted. Too much is at stake for silence to prevail.

BRIEFS

BUTHELEZI COMMISSION ON NATAL--Durban--Six more prominent Natalians, including Archbishop Denis Hurley and a former Supreme Court judge, Mr D G Fannin, have agreed to serve on the Buthelezi Commission of Inquiry to probe the future of Natal and Kwazulu. This information was released yesterday by Miss Gail Newman, assistant secretary to the commission. Miss Newman said the other four members of the commission were: Mr Carter H Ebrahim, representing the Labour Party; Dr Bruce Dobie, president of the Natal Teachers Society; Professor Absolom Vilakazi, director of the Kwazulu Documentation and Research Centre at the University of Zululand; and Mr A P E Mkwanazi, representing the Kwazulu planning, coordinating and advisory committee. CISKEI DELEGATION IN FRANCE--Paris.--A five-member delegation from the Ciskei led by Chief Minister Lennox Sebe arrived in France yesterday for a 10-day visit aimed partly at securing eventual French recognition of the territory as an independent nation. The delegation is due to have talks at the French Foreign Ministry--though probably not at ministerial level--and also to meet parliamentary deputies, senators and members of employers' organizations. Their visit is the first of a number being made to Western democracies both to learn from their political structures and tell them about Ciskei plans for the future. Delegation sources said the political independence of the Ciskei must be based on its economic progress and to this end the delegation wanted to meet partners interested in taking part in its agricultural and industrial development. TRANSKEI FORMER CHIEF DALINDYEBO--Maseru.--The deposed chief of the Tembus, Paramount Chief Sabata Dalindyebo, left Lesotho at the weekend for Maputo on the first leg of a trip to West Germany. Chief Sabata, who appeared in Maseru last Friday after his disappearance from Transkei early this year, said he was going to West Germany for specialist medical treatment. He was travelling with his wife. He was leader of the opposition Transkei Democratic Progressive Party until his conviction on a charge of injuring the dignity of Transkei's President, Paramount Chief Kaiser Matanzima. It is understood from reliable sources in Maseru that Chief Sabata will return to Lesotho.--Sapa. [Text][Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 14 Oct 80 p 5]

TAIWAN AID TO HOMELANDS--Taipei.--The possible cooperation between the South African homelands and Taiwan, which the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, hinted at last night, has already existed to some degree. The President of BophutaTswana,

Chief Lucas Mangope, has already visited Taiwan, as has the Chief Minister of the Ciskei, Chief Lennox Sebe, who recently announced that he would seek independence provided the terms were right. In 1977 the then Minister of Foreign Affairs in Transkei, Chief Jerry Moshesh, visited Taiwan. There is, at present, a small agricultural team from Taiwan working on a rice-growing project at the previously disastrous Qamata irrigation scheme in Transkei. Clearly, Mr Botha hopes that one of the products of his visit to Taiwan will be an extension of these links to the homelands. MULTIRACIAL COMMUNITY COMMITTEES--Bloemfontein.--Multiracial community committees are to be formed in every town in the Free State to see to the needs and aspirations of Whites, Coloureds and Blacks in the province. Brigadier M J du Plessis, commanding officer of the Free State Command said yesterday the committees would be formed in conjunction with various State departments and other bodies through out the Free State. Officers of his command had already held meetings in various towns where local sub-committees had been established. The project was aimed at promoting better racial relationships, better living standards for all and to identify, co-ordinate and try to solve problems between the different race groups. "The onslaught against the Republic is a total onslaught," Brig Du Plessis said. "It is not aimed at the Whites only, but against all race groups in South Africa." To meet this onslaught head on, it was imperative for all ethnic groups in South Africa to work together," Brig Du Plessis said.--Sapa. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 23 Oct 80 p 8]

SENTENCES FOR TERRORISM--Durban.--Two young men were each jailed for five years yesterday after a year-long Terrorism Act trial in the Durban Regional Court. Mr X Odendaal found Mandla James Sibisi, 20 and a 16-year-old youth conspired to leave or attempted to leave South Africa for military training with the aim of the violent overthrow of the Government. Five others--Mr Njengabantu Sithole, 21, Mr Ramatlotlo Moses, 21, Mr Christopher Sitembiso Nzuza, 20, a 17-year-old youth and a 16-year-old youth--were acquitted. Mr Sithole was acquitted on a second charge of contravening the Act by inciting four youths to leave the country for military training. Nzuza received a suspended two-year sentence for dealing in dagga. Sentencing Sibisi and the youth on the Terrorism Act charge, Mr Odendaal said the Act laid down a minimum of five years' jail.--Sapa. [Text] [Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 15 Oct 80 p 4]

EXPLOSIONS ON RAIL LINE--Two explosions occurred on the Soweto-Johannesburg railway line near Dube station yesterday morning. Confirming the incidents, a spokesman for the Police Directorate of Public Relations said police suspected that two charges, each containing 400 g of TNT, had been responsible for the blasts. A further eight TNT charges of 400 g each had been rendered harmless and removed. The spokesman said a preliminary investigation had established that the charges had been detonated electrically from a distance. Slight damage had been caused to the railway line and switching mechanism. Railway workers had repaired the line at about 7 am, which allowed a resumption of train traffic. The spokesman said pamphlets of the banned African National Congress, as well as communistic literature, had been found near the scene of the explosions. Shortly after the blasts, police had to use tearsmoke to disperse about 500 Black youths. After being warned to disperse, they began throwing stones at five buses. One of the buses was set alight and burned out. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 16 Oct 80 p 3]

URBAN COUNCIL ASSOCIATION PRESIDENT--Bloemfontein.--President and founder member of the Urban Council Association of South Africa, (UCASA) Mr Steve Kgame, was re-elected president at the organization's second annual conference held at the weekend at the community hall, Batho township, Bloemfontein. NEW OFS ADMINISTRATOR--A former prominent Free State youth leader, who was also the chairman of the federal council of the Nasionale Jeungbond, and presently MP for Bethlehem, Mr Louis Botha (40), was yesterday appointed the new Administrator of the Free State. The Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, announced after yesterdays Cabinet meeting that Mr Botha's appointment as Administrator had been approved by the Cabinet. Mr Botha succeeds Dr Nak van der Merwe, who was promoted to the Cabinet recently. Mr Botha became leader of the Free State Jeungbond in 1965 at the age of 25 and was elected MP for Bethlehem in 1968. He studied for his BSc agriculture degree at Stellenbosch University whereafter he married Miss Aletta Louisa Spangenberg. The couple have three children. Mr Botha was elected Free State whip of the NP in 1978 and he is also a curator of the National Parks Board, where he represents the Free State. OFFSHORE GAS EXPLORATION--Cape Town.--Soekor has found gas in a borehole about 90 miles south-west of Mossel Bay and tests are currently being carried out, the Minister of Mineral and Energy Affairs, Mr F W de Klerk, said in a news release yesterday. He added that this was the ninth time that signs of gas had been found within Soekor's prospecting area. Because it was important that the public should be well informed on Soekor's activities, he and the Soekor Board had decided that the news media should be kept abreast of developments in tests at the boreholes. He said that if the international energy situation was taken into account, it was natural that any developments in the field of energy were newsworthy. He warned the public, however, that it was too early to think that the gas in this new borehole was economically expolitable.--Sapa. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 22 Oct 80 p 3]

IMMIGRATION FIGURES--South Africa had a net gain of some 1 649 immigrants in July, bringing the running total for this year to an impressive 7 691. Obviously attracted by the comparatively good economic conditions prevalent in this country, 2 589 people left their homelands to settle in South Africa in July, with only 940 people emigrating. Thus in the first seven months of 1980, 15 219 immigrants entered South Africa, while less than half this number (7 528 to be exact) emigrated abroad. The gains for the country's skilled labour force are even more emphasised by the corresponding numbers for the same period last year. In July 1979, South Africa experienced a net loss of 93 people (1 365 immigrants and 1 458 emigrants), while at this time last year, the running gain was only 269 people (10 804 immigrants and 10 535 emigrants). According to figures released by the Department of Statistics yesterday, of the total immigrants which entered the country this year, some 1 956 are professional people (including 444 engineers and 130 accountants.) Immigrants employed in production industry totalled 1 606 clerical workers 1 215 and administrative and managerial workers 465. In the first seven months however, the drain was also large, with 1 160 professional people leaving South Africa, while 677 production and 593 clerical workers also emigrated. In July alone, 1 223 people immigrated to South Africa from Europe (including 937 from the UK), while 1 212 people left Zimbabwe to take up permanent residence in South Africa. POSSIBLE WHEAT EXPORTS--South African wheat in limited quantities is likely to be exported to neighbouring countries to alleviate severe shortages during the next 12 months, it was learnt in Pretoria yesterday. Reserve wheat stocks in Zimbabwe are expected, to reached their lowest level next year for many years, and there is a possibility of a severe bread shortage. However, according to the general manager of the Wheat Board, Mr J van Aarde, South Africa's own wheat resources have been severely cut this year by drought. The crop is expected to yield about 1 560 000 tons against a national need of 1 800 000 tons. A carry-over of 600 000 tons, however, gives the country a two-and-a-half month buffer reserve. The Government has just authorised a shipment of wheat to Malawi. Any further exports would mean a reduction in the reserve carry-over, and would raise the possibility of South Africa having to import wheat. GOLD PRODUCTION ESTIMATE--South African 1980 gold output will probably total 675 to 685 tonnes, about three percent off last year's level, Dennis Etheredge, chairman of the gold and uranium division of Anglo American Corp of South Africa said. He told the American Metal Market forum in London the average grade of ore mined has fallen to 7,45 grams a tonne from 8,22 in 1979, compared with a 140 percent rise in the average gold price received by the mines in the first six months, compared with first half 1979 to $589,58 per ounce. Mr Etheredge said, using as a base price $350, $650 and $1 200 an ounce respectively, South African gold production is projected to remain in a relatively close range around current levels until about 1987, then fall gradually to about 350 tonnes at the turn of the century. However, at the lower base price, production peaks at a much higher level in about 1987 and then falls off more sharply than in the case of the other two base prices. The trends are based on output from existing producers and mines in the process of opening up and relate to the position at the start of last August.--Reuter. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 14 Oct 80 p 19]

SUGAR CROP ESTIMATE--The latest estimate of South Africa's 1980/81 May to April sugar crop has been cut by 10 000 tons to 1,61-million tons tel quel from 1,62-million tons forecast last month, Sugar Association general manager Peter Sale said. He said from Durban this compares with actual output of 2,08-million tons tel quel in 1979/80. The lower estimate reflects the continuing effects of the severe drought which has been hitting sugar producers for many months, he added. Mr Sale said there have been no rains in sugar growing regions for about three weeks, although September rainfall was above average. South African producers need a lot more rain to help offset the effects of the protracted drought, he added. Mr Sale said, however, he believes the 1980/81 crop is unlikely to drop below 1,6-million tons tel quel, a 23 percent fall from last season.--Reuter. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 16 Oct 80 p 26]

IMPROVED WHEAT CROP PROSPECTS--The second official estimate of South Africa's 1980-81 wheat crop has been revised upwards by 90 000 tons to 1,56-million from an initial estimate of 1,47-million tons, the Agriculture Department said. This is, however, sharply below actual 1979-80 output of 2,09-million tons following a severe drought in main growing areas, it said. The higher second estimate, based on conditions at the end of September, reflects the beneficial effects of rain in the Orange Free State, which provides over 60 percent of the South African crop, it added. The department said rains during the last month in the Free State enabled producers to plant spring wheat and helped improve wheat already planted. The South African wheat season runs officially from October 1 to September 30, but it is complicated by different growing seasons in various regions. In August Wheat Board manager Denis van Aarde said South Africa may need to import wheat for the first time in 10 years if a crop of about 1,4-million tons materialised this season.--Reuter. SECONDARY, HIGHER TEACHERS STRIKE DECLARED ILLEGAL

AB300705 Ouagadougou Domestic Service in French 2000 GMT 29 Oct 80

[Communique from the Ministry of Civil Service and Labor--read by announcer]

[Text] By letter No D.N.S.G. [expansion unknown] of 26 October 1980 to the president of the republic through the Ministry of Civil Service and Labor, the SUVESS [Sole Voltan Union of Teachers of Secondary and Higher Education] gave warning of a strike scheduled to take place at 0000 hours on 29 October 1980.

By letter No 281 FPT [Civil Service and Labor] of 28 October 1980, the minister of civil service and labor drew the attention of the SUVESS to the provisions of Article 4 of Law 45/60 A.N. [expansion unknown] of 23 July 1960 regarding the regulations governing the right of strike which civil servants and state employees enjoy.

Under the terms of these regulations, the strike planned by the SUVESS as notified on 27 October by the letter of 26 October 1980 and embarked upon at 0000 hours on 29 October is a blatant violation of the provisions of Law 45/60 A.N. of 25 July 1960.

As a matter of fact, the strike threats issued by the SUVESS in its letters No's 13 and 15/80 DN-SG of 13 and 15 October 1980 cannot be considered as strike warnings as provided for under Article 3 of the above-mentioned Law 45/60. Article 7 of the same Law 45/60 states that in case of violation of these provisions, the civil servants and state employees can be subject to disciplinary punishment provided for in the general regulations of the civil service.

Even though the right to strike is guaranteed to civil servants and state employees, it must, however, be carried out within the framework of the laws providing for that right. Given this fact, the SUVESS strike is declared illegal. As the law applies for everyone, the SUVESS and its militants are earnestly requested to abide rigorously by it.

Signed by the minister of the civil service and labor.

NKOMA PROPOSED POSTPONEMENT OF LOCAL ELECTIONS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 20 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

BULAWAYO.

THE Home Affairs Minister, Dr Joshua Nkomo, yesterday called for the postponement of the forthcoming local government elections until after well-established Government machinery had prepared the whole country for fair and free polling.

Addressing a Patriotic Front youth rally at Bulawayo's White City Stadium, Dr Nkomo said:

"I don't think the way our local government elections are being conducted is in the country's best interests.

"On several occasions we have been informed about results of polling that is said to have been conducted in one or another part of our country after some shooting has occurred there.

"People are lined up in other areas and ordered to vote by men carrying arms, and then results are announced."

Dr Nkomo added: "What is going on is disaster, and we cannot stand idly and let it destroy what we fought for for years.

ORDERED

"I say this is questionable even further when voters are registered in the streets where they are ordered to fill in forms and declare themselves as lodgers of unspecified houses.

"We don't want to create or see divisions in our country, but this type of thing is not helpful to create the peaceful and united nation we are still trying to mould."

He told more than 15 000 cheering youths that his statement did not mean that PF members or any other Zimbabwe national should take the law into his or her own hands, because the situation should be rectified by responsible authorities.

"I don't want to hear of beatings of people anywhere in the country, and I want everybody to know that they are free to exercise their right of self-defence," he said.

The PF president strongly advised "the young generation to behave decently, avoid drunkenness, laziness, having children out of wedlock, prostitution, stealing, because we cannot make a nation out of such people".

From the stadium, Dr Nkomo went to the Castle Arms Motel where members of the Malawian and Zambian communities in Bulawayo had organised a social function in his and his wife's honour.

After he was presented with a spear, shield, and a copper lion by the hosts, Dr Nkomo said: "The alliance between us, Zambians and Malawians, dates back to Federation days, and continues to exist in a free Zimbabwe where Malawians, Zambians, Mozambicans, Batswana, Algerians and others can now live as full and free citizens."

He said it was nonsense to call an African a foreigner on the African continent.

"In Zimbabwe we accept anybody who chooses to live here, be he or she from Britain, Tunisia or elsewhere. We welcome them as part of our nation regardless of their race or tribe," he said.

"There are some people who boarded the liberation bus after it had started moving and then tried to stop it before it had reached its destination who want to divide the nation according to tribes, regions, or races.

"These ambitious people don't seem to see that one cannot create a nation out of one's brother alone, but only through treating everybody as a free, equal, and fellow-countryman."

Addressing another meeting of ZIPRA ex-guerillas at Entumbane Housing Estate Dr Nkomo said they should help consolidate national peace, unity, and show respect towards their elders, women, and among themselves.

"You have behaved properly in spite of open provocation against you through the radio and television," he said.

"You have never accused ZANLA comrades of having not fought, but they have said you did not fight.

"You should remember that a true hero does not praise himself but is praised by the people for whom he had sacrificed. Those who praise themselves are fakes and not genuine national heroes."

He told the ex-guerillas to co-operate with the people all over the country in defending the country against what he termed noise-makers.

"If the Moon were to stop in its course to howl back at hyenas and jackals, the universe would lose its equilibrium.

"You too are responsible for the stability of our country, but if you were to worry yourselves about howling jackals and hyenas, the country would be thrown into instability."

He said those who wished to get married must do it properly through either known and respected traditional channels or through the church.

FINANCE MINISTER DISCUSSES PARTICIPATION IN IMF, WORLD BANK

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 23 Oct 80 p 5

[Finance Minister Nkala interviewed by David Linsell]

[Text]

ZIMBABWE recently joined the world's two top financial clubs, the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank when the Minister of Finance, Senator Enos Nkala, visited Bermuda and Washington.

After his return home last week the minister spoke about the implications of Zimbabwe's membership of the IMF and the World Bank, and his views on the future of the economy.

QUESTION: Did ministers and officials in Bermuda and Washington suggest or give any advice on how our economy should develop?

ANSWER: Definitely not. But I do know the system of conditionality. They didn't mention anything as regards what they will do if finally they decide to give us any loan or financial assistance, but we have to take into account the roles of the two organisations.

The IMF finances short-term balance of payments problems. The World Bank is a developmental/loan institution. Therefore, I am sure you are aware that the two rarely finance a budgetary deficit.

We explained our position and I believe they will help to finance those budgetary programmes that are of a developmental nature rather than financing a budgetary deficit as such.

They appreciated our argument and the fact that we emphasised the question that time was of the essence particularly in our case, and said they would deal with us having that regard in mind.

What do the IMF and WB consider to be Zimbabwe's economic priorities, and did they fall in line with the Government's?

Of course, as you know we have a programme of reconstruction and development. They didn't want us to discuss what our priorities were.

It was just our programmes as regards the structural adjustment of the economy without specific discussion on the priorities as such.

You said the IMF and WB would not finance a deficit budget, but you indicated funds may come in for other areas.

You see, the deficit in the budget has implications for certain developmental programmes. We discussed this and they seemed to indicate to us, without saying "Yes", that they would examine financing some of those projects which the Government has undertaken to work on.

Would this be on the basis of soft loans?

Yes, from the World Bank.

IMF membership allows Zimbabwe to use U.S.$133 million in Special Drawing Rights. Can we draw the first quarter of that sum immediately if necessary?

We could be due for about Z$100 million or U.S.$133 million now. The IMF team is coming in at the end of the month to discuss that with us.

The first tranche is no problem. The concept of conditionality hardly applies.

The second has few conditions, but it is on the third and fourth that they get tough.

But I don't think we will get that far, though we may use our first allocation.

Will an increasing inflow of foreign funds lead to any relaxation of our foreign exchange controls?

The exchange control operates in terms of the Exchange Control Act of 1964. This was a UDI measure and we are continuing to use it because of the foreign exchange implications that if we removed it we would have absolutely nothing of our foreign exchange earnings remaining.

We would have so many obligations to meet at one and the same time which would run us dry.

You are aware that in my Budget statement of July I made major relaxations which were not there during UDI and I will continue to review the situation as and when there is a need to do so.

The feeling in financial circles is that if funds do come in there will have to be some relaxation. Do you agree?

That is a speculative feeling. We still have a lot of problems. Our need for foreign exchange seems to grow with the expansion of the economy. It is just beginning to take off and in the process will continue to require imports of spare parts, machinery and raw materials and many other requirements.

So the import bill will continue to be a strain upon our foreign exchange earnings. Whatever loans we get, and so on, we will still have a shortfall.

How do you reconcile our highly liquid banking system with the need for foreign loans?

The excess liquidity in our banking system has nothing to do with the inflow of foreign loans which help us to meet our international obligations.

Some of the development and reconstruction programmes, such as the Wankie project and various others which the Government has in mind, all have a high degree of foreign currency content.

So internal liquidity and external illiquidity, if you want to put it that way, are two different things although in a way they are compatible.

Are you considering trying to tap our liquid banking system as a source of funds to finance Government projects?

Only this morning I was speaking to the Minister of Economic Planning and Development and we were discussing this and how to finance some of our development projects.

So we are talking about how best we could tap this excess liquidity in the economy so that it can be used rather than lying idle in the banks.

So we are thinking about that and not sitting back and saying let the money lie there.

The Treasury has been doing a lot of borrowing to finance some of the Government's projects so we may have to increase the tempo of tapping these excess funds.

Would you agree that inflation could get it's teeth into the economy.

Yes, but we are watching this very carefully. Our inflation rate is among the lowest in the world, between 7 and 9 per cent, so you can see that our financial management has been better than many.

Of course, since the economy is picking up we are bound to have pressures so we must try and balance inflationary tendencies in the economy as a whole.

So, by attracting funds from the commercial sector into government projects you can keep a grip on inflation?

Yes, in a way. This may be a wrong view, but that is my feeling and I am discussing it with others to how best we can do it.

The money supply has expanded by 34 percent. What plans do you have for curbing this trend?

Well, at the moment we haven't any, but my own feeling is that although there is an overhanging demand in the economy as a whole it will soon be absorbed as production picks up.

So you are going to let it find its own level?

Yes, but if it shows a dangerous movement then we'll move in and halt it.

Have you received any suggestions that the Zimbabwe dollar be devalued?

I think people should be thinking about the exchange rate. The question of devaluation is one of speculation and of course you get a lot of high-blown comments about this.

The value of our currency in terms of imports and exports is an internal issue. It would be presumptuous for anyone from abroad to come to me and indulge in such a discussion.

Has it actually been discussed?

No. We haven't even thought about it.

What is the purpose of the visit by experts from the IMF?

The IMF team is coming to continue the discussion I and my officials had in Washington. We want them to see for themselves what we have and perhaps to talk about our needs.

There is nothing really to cause people to raise their eyebrows.

But we are going to talk to them about perhaps our first tranche of the U.S.$133 million which you mentioned earlier. However, before they can say "Here you are" they will want to know why we want to use it.

Moving away from high finance, what will be the role of the new commercial bank, which you announced recently is to be set up in Zimbabwe?

Its function will be no different from the established commercial banks, although there may be a varying here and there in the way it grants its funds.

There is over-conservatism in the banks which have been in existence in this country, in particular applying to black businessmen.

I have had many coming here saying the extension of credit by the existing banks is so restricted. So much so that these businessmen have been excluded from exploiting these avenues.

The new bank will be flexible, but not so far as being reckless. The question of security for loans will not be thrown overboard, but you can overemphasise the question of security.

The element of risk is always present in business, however, you can always try to minimise it with a series of safety mechanisms.

The present banks have tended to extend credit to old customers. It has become a habit and habits, I grant you, die hard.

Representatives from our partner, the Bank of Credit and Commerce International, are coming this week for finalisation of everything and I believe if all goes well they will begin their operations in January in Salisbury and Bulawayo simultaneously.

Finally Minister, do you consider that Zimbabwe should regard its future progress and economic development as matters it should control completely upon its ability to pay its own way in the world?

That is an important question, like any business organisation, however vast or small, Zimbabwe must be able to pay its own way for its own existence.

Once it is able to pay for its own existence and has established good connections and has earned a name for itself then all other people will be able to deal in business with that organisation.

I believe a country is no different from any other business organisation. Zimbabwe must maintain, and I repeat maintain, its credit worthiness. In other words pay its own way in the world.

VISITING WORLD BANK OFFICIAL DISCUSSES ECONOMY

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 23 Oct 80 p 5

[Text]

THE first seeds of Zimbabwe's membership of the World Bank bore fruit last week with the visit to Salisbury of its vice-president Mr Willie Wapenhans.

Now that a picture of Zimbabwe's economy and the needs of the country has emerged Mr Wapenhans said an indepth view was needed.

"I have come following talks with your Minister of Finance, Senator Nkala, in Washington to see whether we can sketch out a programme of co-operation between the Government of Zimbabwe and ourselves

"This is likely to be for the short, medium and long terms since the offers of support for reconstruction and rehabilitation in your country may be insufficient," said the World Bank's vice-president.

Mr Wapenhans thought that the economy had been "remarkably successful in sustaining itself during the long period of isolation and conflict.

"There are lessons for the rest of the world to be learnt from that experience."

But now, he added, a great deal of infrastructure rebuilding was necessary. No timescale had been discussed, that was for the Government to decide particularly regarding the intensity and form of settlement areas to be used.

"We view agriculture and rural development as prominent and crucial sectors.

"Also there is the need to give great attention to manpower development and education.

"The overwhelming impression one receives is of a great shortage of skills and the need to eradicate dualism in the economy," said Mr Wapenhans.

COMMENTARY ON FOREIGN PRESS CURBS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 20 Oct 80 p 6

[Editorial: "Reluctant Curbs"]

[Text] THE Government's decision to curb the activities of "undesirable and irresponsible" foreign journalists is not unexpected, although the Minister of Information, Dr Shamuyarira, must have taken the step with some reluctance.

The restatement of the policy of the freedom of the Press is welcomed but we go along with his attempts to curb a small section who have been indulging in malicious representation of events here in overseas newspapers and magazines.

Too little account is often taken by ill-informed observers of the evolving nature of the country from a state of civil war.

The fact that foreign journalists will now be "licensed" by having to obtain temporary employment permits will make the fringe element think twice before committing wild allegations to print and presenting them as a matter of fact.

At the same time the Government partly has the answer to the problem in its own hands.

The best counter to bad propaganda is to open up better channels of communication to enable the more positive side of Zimbabwe's development to be made known.

Swifter responses to Press inquiries on a wide variety of subjects would immediately stifle rumourmongering. A period of uncertainty in Dr Shamuyarira's own Ministry is now over with the appointment of a new Director of Information and already some benefits are beginning to follow.

CHANGING ROLE OF POLICE DISCUSSED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 23 Oct 80 p 12

[Editorial]

[Text]

THE Prime Minister yesterday outlined the code of conduct which he expects the police to observe.

There was nothing revolutionary, or even unusual, about the principles he enunciated. They demand only the development of good human relationships, without which no police force can operate effectively.

So far as most senior members of the force are concerned, Mr Mugabe must have been preaching to the converted. But he was speaking to a passing out parade of recruits and with the force in a state of transition it would do no harm to make the point strongly to the newcomers.

Unfortunately, because of the unsettled state of the country, the return to traditional police work cannot be achieved overnight. In the meantime the police must be given all the help possible to restore their good relations with the public.

The politicians have an important role to play here, particularly in the rural areas. They must not encourage people to try to pay off old scores by baiting the police. Nor must they encourage people to make frivolous and mischievous complaints against them. To indulge in such tactics is to risk a complete breakdown in law and order.

But the police themselves must do more to promote their new image by publicising the changes that they are already making.

Why, for instance, is the force so reluctant to speak about the black officers who have recently been promoted to senior rank?

Mr Justice Dumbutshena put the situation rather well when he said at an earlier passing out parade: "Winning the trust and co-operation of the public is one of the fundamental duties of a modern police force. I hope therefore that the authorities will increase and redouble the duties and activities of the force's public relations section."

KANGAI ORDERS TRADE UNIONS TO REGISTER, UNITE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 23 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

THE Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, has ordered all trade unions in the country to register, and form a central umbrella body.

The move follows a series of meetings he held with trade unionists.

In an interview this week, Mr Kangai said he had invited 25 labour leaders to his office and told them the conditions.

"We would like to conform to international standards because we are now a member of the International Labour Organisation."

The Minister said the unions had been asked to register so that they could easily be identified. "We have so many unions being formed nearly every day and it is increasingly becoming difficult to deal with each of them."

All unions would be given a chance to register, after which a convention would be held under the auspices of the Ministry to elect a national executive of the central body.

After the elections the new body would be required to find a place for its head office from which it would co-ordinate the activities of the affiliated member unions.

The move would ease communication between the labour movements and the Ministry. "We will deal directly with the central body instead of several unions as has been the case at the moment."

Mr Kangai yesterday declined to comment on the resignation of Mr Phineas Sithole as vice-chairman of the six-week-old Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions.

Mr Kangai said in Bulawayo that he had not yet received Mr Sithole's resignation letter. He would have thought Mr Sithole would have been "polite enough" to discuss the matter with him in the Ministry before telling the Press.

Mr Sithole resigned on Tuesday in protest against the ZCTU's "un-trade union policies, practices and principles", as well as "Government and ZANU (PF) attempts to usurp the role and rights of established trade unions . . ."

He accused ZANU (PF) of "consciously and openly trying to take over workers' organisations through ZANU (PF)-created workers' committees responsible for confusing both the workers and managements about which labour movement is actually responsible for promoting and protecting workers' rights".

Asked to clarify the role of workers' committees in relation to trade unions, Mr Kangai said: "Workers' committees deal with domestic issues at their respective work places while trade unions handle matters affecting their individual membership in each particular industry.

"Trade unions should not involve themselves in enterprise matters but in those of the entire industry.

"Trade union and workers' committees' activities are complementary and not opposed to one another in that the existence of committees facilitates and accelerates communication between management and trade unions on the one hand with workers on the other."

Mr Kangai said there was "nothing to stop workers' committee members from becoming trade union members because the two were not rivals".

On food for refugees and people returning to Zimbabwe, the Minister said this was under control.

"The situation is relatively quiet. Most people are getting supplies except where we have transport problems."

The Ministry would employ more personnel to help in the distribution of food. Mr Kangai said the Government needed more relief food supplies until the next harvest.

NEW CZI CHIEF TONY READ PROFILED

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 23 Oct 80 p 7

[Text]

MR Tony Read, new chief executive of the Confederation of Zimbabwe Industries, runs to keep fit.

Professionally he has also had to do a lot of running lately.

Apart from settling in to his job, which entails, among other things, renewing contacts with leading figures in government and the private sector in the country, he is also having to find time to welcome and talk to members of the numerous international trade delegations who are currently flocking to Zimbabwe.

Thus, after a hectic day at the CZI offices in Salisbury, he is frequently obliged to rush off to cocktail parties and meetings.

"It's hard work, but fascinating," said this embullient former policeman during a brief interview fitted in between appointments.

"Provided we can get the security situation in this country under control, government appreciates the value of private enterprise, and we can retain skilled people here, I firmly believe Zimbabwe has a great future.

"I genuinely think we can become the industrial centre of central Africa and don't see any problems which cannot be resolved.

"This is one of the reasons why we are anxious to establish good relations again with the international business community after being cut off for so many years.

"But as well as meeting delegations and international businessmen here at home, I am looking forward to the time when we in CZI at least start sending official delegations abroad.

"Obviously, by travelling abroad, our businessmen can pick up many valuable ideas. Many have already done so, of course."

Although he spent his early three years in the police since emigrating to this country from London in 1952, Tony Read (46) has spent much of his working life in business.

He spent six years working for a wholesale company in what was then Northern Rhodesia returned to Bulawayo in 1964 to run a garage, and then joined the regional office of the Ministry of Commerce and Industry for some years.

Ten years ago he was appointed secretary of the Bulawayo Chamber of Commerce, a post he held until his appointment to CZI on October 1 in succession to Mr Chris McCullagh.

A member of the Zimbabwe Institute of Management, Mr Read is married with three children.

REFORM OF LABOR LAWS IN PROGRESS

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 23 Oct 80 p 1

[Article by Tim Chigodo]

[Text]

THE Government is working on legislation to remove some anomalies in the existing labour laws and provide better working conditions for all, the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai said this week.

In an interview, he said the Industrial Conciliation Act would be repealed in order to effect far-reaching changes and abolish certain practices which were not conducive to the present society.

The move was also aimed at speeding up African advancement and to protect the indegenous worker.

"We are actually going to see that the Act, which is the bible of this Ministry, is changed," he said.

The changes would include the removal of the present practice of forcing female workers to resign when they are pregnant and abolition of racial salary scales; identification of foreign workers; discourage migrant labour to South Africa and to study the existing private employment agencies to determine their activities and effectiveness.

Mr Kangai said that in future, female workers would be granted maternity leave without losing their seniority or benefits.

"The issue of pregnant workers has been of great concern to us," he said.

The Minister said blacks taking over from whites were entitled to the same salary scales and conditions of service. He noted that racial scales had been a source of labour unrest in some places.

"At one place I visited, I was surprised to hear an African accountant telling me that he was getting half of what his white predecessor was getting. This practice must stop."

The Ministry was employing more industrial relations officers who were more orientated to the present society in a bid to protect the indigenous workers and speed up African advancement.

The officers would be empowered to visit various industries in the country and demand employees' registers and their salary scales.

They would ensure that no company flouted the Government policy of giving priority to indigenous workers in employment.

REGISTER

All private employment agencies would be required to register with the Ministry and their activities would be studied.

"We shall employ inspectors to examine their books and determine their activities and effectiveness," Mr Kangai said.

On Zimbabweans working in South Africa under the Wenela labour recruitment programme, he said the practice would be discouraged and the existing contracts made between the South African and the former Rhodesian governments would not be renewed when they expired.

The minister said individuals who wanted to continue working in South Africa were free to do so because there was no law barring people from getting jobs in other countries.

On aliens, Mr Kangai said there would be a control on foreigners coming to seek for jobs in Zimbabwe, adding that those already working, had nothing to fear.

There would, however, be a process to identify them wherever they were employed.

They would gradually be asked to make a choice, either to be citizens or to continue being aliens.

"Those who want to stay here will have to identify themselves like any sovereign state, we will have to identify them," the minister said.

"Those who have been here for a long time and want to stay here are free to do so. We feel they have made a contribution to this nation. I mean whites and blacks."

The minister appealed to various industries to give more jobs to indigenous job seekers in order to alleviate the existing unemployment problem in the country.

He said although it was difficult to give the exact figures, unemployment was high in the rural areas compared to the urban centres where there had been job opportunities because of economic development.

On workers' committees, Mr Kangai said they had made a notable achievement in improving communications between the workers and managements.

There had been letters congratulating the Ministry on the new development.

The minister noted that most of the strikes in the country, were a result of poor communication between the workers and managements.

EXCHANGE OF MINERAL WATER FOR ARAB OIL CONSIDERED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 22 Oct 80 p 6

[Article by Charles Rukuni]

[Text]

A ZIMBABWEAN businessman plans to launch an industrial project that might end up in Arab states exchanging their oil for what the Arab need most: Water.

Nick Malachias, a Salisbury engineering company and nightclub owner, is to manufacture and export mineral water to the Middle East.

Negotiations are under way with British and Arab bankers for the finance to set up a factory in Zimbabwe and wholesalers in the Arab states.

Malachias is having various types of mineral water analysed in government laboratories.

He is looking for mineral water to duplicate as near as possible the French mineral water, Perrier. Or even better.

At his central-Salisbury nightclub, Malachias said: "Our mineral water has got to be 100 per cent pure. It should be of a higher quality than that currently being supplied by European countries if we are to get a market.

"And it should be at a reasonably cheaper price than European water."

Zimbabwe water tended to have too high copper and fluoride levels. But this could be filtered.

Among the problems Malachias expects to face — and which would mean getting government help are transport and containerisation.

The water has to be exported in its pure form so it cannot be transported in steel containers. It would lose its purity. Only glass containers can be used.

Again, to retain the purity factories have to be built where the water is. Rail sidings have to be established within reasonable distance and enough wagons made available to transport the water to the ports.

Talk big

Malachias said: "This is where government help is needed. If government really sees that the project is profitable, they could arrange an adequate supply of wagons and railage and also the shipping.

"Arabs don't talk small. They talk big. If you make a deal, they want you to keep up to it. Otherwise they drop you and look for better suppliers".

Water is free in Zimbabwe, Malachias said. Transport costs are much lower through Mozambican ports. Labour costs are reasonable so, it all looks feasible.

"This could be one of the biggest money-makers for the country and one of our biggest foreign exchange-earners. Even higher than tobacco.

"And so if government is involved, we might end up swopping their oil for our water.

We need the oil and they need the water. This is why government and the people should benefit from this project. It should not be a private enterprise."

Malachias got the idea of exporting water to Arab countries about four years ago when he visited Europe and the Middle East.

He said France, Spain and Greece were supplying the Middle East with mineral water at about K4 a litre.

"The Arabs have no water. They need it. It is not really a luxury. After all most Arab workers get a lot of money and K4 is not much to them.

Malachias said he had not launched the project earlier because of the war.

The areas where he could get the water he wanted were in war zones and generally things were not favourable to launch such a project then.

Malachias would not, however, disclose where he was getting the water. —GEMINI

OVER $10 MILLION NEEDED FOR OIL REFINERY

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 23 Oct 80 p 1

[Article by David Linsell]

[Text]

THE Feruka oil refinery at Umtali is unlikely to be back in operation until June 1982, and millions of dollars will have to be spent on reconditioning before it comes on stream, Mr Ian Yeoman, acting general manager of CAPREF, said this week.

The shareholders of CAPREF, the operating company, are awaiting the results of an in-depth investigation before they decide to recommission the plant.

Taking a cautious view Mr Yeoman said: "No decision has yet been made on the future of the refinery, It must and will depend upon the final report. This matter has to be taken step by step.

"We are dealing with seven shareholders and the governments of Zimbabwe and Mozambique. Bearing in mind the sums of money which will have to be spent this will require major policy decisions at boardroom level by our shareholders."

Asked what the estimated cost of bringing the refinery out of mothballs and back into operation would be Mr Yeoman said: "It is bound to cost considerably more than Z$10 millions taking into account the rehabilitation, the training of new staff, the provision of housing, supplies of crude oil and running costs.

OBJECTIVE

"But I must stress that our objective is to get agreement from all the parties involved to bring Feruka back on stream in its present form. It is a very complex exercise."

Ascertaining what state the whole plant is in today is being carried out by Netherlands-based Shell Internationale Petroleum Maatschappij B.V., Capraf's technical adviser which has brought in under contract a team of experts from Fluor Engineers and Constructors Inc of the United States.

"We have had authority to spend in excess of Z$1 million on the investigation and that should adequately cover the cost," added Mr Yeoman.

Also present at the meeting was Mr Carel Den Broeder, SIPM's Feruka project leader who said that the investigation would define in terms of work and money what was needed to get the refinery working again.

"On the basis of the final report to be made and assuming one moves onto the second step, the rehabilitation, Feruka will be operating in the second half of 1982," Mr Den Broeder said.

Assuming that Feruka is to be given a new life there are many other considerations that CAPREF will have to take into account in planning for the future.

For instance, the refinery will not need to produce premium petrol, only regular to be mixed with the ethanol from the Lowveld plant at Triangle.

Mr Yeoman said that the electrification of Zimbabwe's railways, although some years ahead, and the supply of coal for steam locomotives would reduce demand for diesel from the refinery.

"These facts have to be taken into account for the future. On the other hand, demand for aviation fuel is likely to increase dramatically as is the call for liquified petroleum gas.

TRAINING

"One of the other major factors in time is the recruitment and training of staff which will be carried out during the rehabilitation and clearly some expatriates will be needed in the initial stages when the refinery is re-opened."

CAPREF is thinking in terms of employing 300 people when Feruka is recommissioned, roughly the same number as in 1965.

"Due to the technical complexity of the operations and the consequent high level of expertise required of the personnel involved, the recruitment and training of suitable staff is likely to represent a significant element in the resumption of refining operations," said Mr Yeoman.

A draft of the Fluor report should be ready at the end of the year, but meanwhile lawyers are redrawing all the original agreements between CAPREF's shareholders, suppliers including the Lonrho-controlled CPMR pipeline company, and the Government.

Built in the early 1960s at a cost of less than R$10 million Feruka processed just over 900 000 tonnes of light Iranian crude oil a year, which was broken down after refining into gasoline, aviation fuel, diesel, kerosene, paraffin and liquified petroleum gas, to name some of its products.

Construction was financed by its shareholders Shell, BP, Mobil, Caltex, the American Independent Oil Co., Total and Kuwait National Petroleum Company.

BRIEFS

UNITY ASSOCIATION FORMED--A solidarity association, the Zimbabwe Progress Legal Association of Friendship of the People in the World, was formed in Salisbury this week, its acting director, Mr Andrew Mazawara, said yesterday. Mr Mazawara said his organisation was not affiliated to any political party in Zimbabwe, although it would be helped financially by the Government. "We would like everybody to get involved because we are strongly against racialism, regionalism and tribalism," he said. The association would discuss international problems with other similar associations throughout the world "to try to establish a common working ground." He holds a bachelor's degree in international relations from the Sorbonne and a masters degree in philosophy from Holland University. He spent about four years in Mozambique as a guerilla during the war. He said his organisation would help in the rehabilitation programme. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 23 Oct 80 p 4]

BEEF DEMAND INCREASES--There was a strong demand for breeding cows and fattening steers when 410 head of Sussex and Brahman cattle came under the hammer at the Salisbury South cattle sale yesterday. About 50 buyers attended the auction at the immaculate sale pens, on the Trivoli outspan area near the Hunyani river. The high prices reflected the continued demand for slaughter stock, with the top price of $215 being paid for a cull bull. Seven cull Friesland cows were sold for $200 each. There was also a steady demand for fattening steers. A pen of 12 steers sold for $138 each. There was little demand for young breeding heifers, while breeding cows sold from $134 to $166. This was an indication that farmers were beginning to look to the long term in beef production and that a measure of confidence is returning to the industry. The cattle came from Umvukwes, Glendale and the Mtepatepa area. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 23 Oct 80 p 4]

NO DRUGS SHORTAGE--Zimbabwe had adequate supplies of drugs to cope with increased demand since the free health service for people earning less than $150 a month was started, the Deputy Minister of Health, Dr Simon Mazorodze, said in an interview on Tuesday. The Deputy Minister was commenting on reports that some rural council clinics were having difficulty replacing drugs. He admitted there were some bottlenecks but these were being solved. A new medical stores depot was being planned for Metabeleland which would help in this direction. Dr Mazorodze said some clinics that had been reopened were the only ones for kilometres around, and these had been "swamped" by patients. Since the inauguration of the new health service in September there had been a sharp rise in patients treated, but this was already showing signs of dropping, he said. A spokesman for a major national drug manufacturing firm said there had been an increased demand for certain drugs, but the suppliers were coping. A Ministry of Health official said: "Some areas might get a bit pushed at times, but if they get stuck we do what we can and get some stock moving to them." [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 23 Oct 80 p 1]

EEC SUPPORT--Brussels--President Masire of Botswana yesterday won Common Market support for a long-term goal by Southern African countries to coordinate development and reduce dependence on South Africa. Mr Masire told a news conference he had won assurances from Common Market development officials and members of the European Parliament that the EEC would participate in a regional development conference in Maputo from November 27-28, reports Iana-AP. "Independence from economic dependency on South Africa is necessary to better stabilise the region," he said. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 23 Oct 80 p 1]

WITCHCRAFT IN AFRICA STUDIED

Brussels SPECIAL L'EVENTAIL in French 26 Sep - 2 Oct 80 pp 21-23

[Article by Bernard Henry, president of the Flemish Explorers Club: "Sorcerers in Africa"]

[Text] Traveling in Zaire, Angola, Mozambique, Zimbabwe or South Africa, on numerous occasions I have come across sorcerers who claim to be prophets, exorcists, or philosophers. Some of them were even doctors of medicine. The latter simply practiced by treating their patients in an atmosphere surrounded by magic.

Special People

Thanks to their mysterious rituals, formulas and psychological knowledge of human weaknesses, these healers or sorcerers represent a special class in their villages. Possessing feared powers, they are frequently more powerful than the tribal chiefs and richer than well-established businessmen. Most of the time they closely relate their "sacramental" abilities with a deep knowledge of herbs. However, their individual techniques vary from region to region or from tribe to tribe. One does not become a sorcerer at will. Quite frequently it is a question of a hereditary vocation whose rites are learned from most tender childhood among males or females. Should the sorcerer have no children or should he find his children unworthy, he may either call upon a stranger or take with him to his grave the "sangoma secrets." No pure and simple legacy is possible. One either does or does not have the ability subsequently to become a sorcerer. This is quickly realized by the novices. They must zealously study the properties of various plants and roots and human behavior, illnesses and reactions, and those of wild and domestic animals. This also includes the operation of casting and, subsequently, interpreting bones which are used as omens. All these rites take place in a magic environment: Each gesture and word has its context loaded with a hidden meaning.

Schooling

The exorcism practiced by a "nganga" or healer is surrounded by a supernatural ritual. He begins by evoking his father or his oldest known ancestor in order to establish contact, through this link, with the God or the Original Spirit. It is thus that a very old exorcist in Ituri confided to me that this experience creates a very impressive feeling among the profane whose presence, actually, is virtually always forbidden. For this step the sorcerer or sorceress wears the "Knowledge String" of multicolored pearls, bits of ribbons, and various fetishes in which the "memory" lives. That same old exorcist had shown me his rich wardrobe: hides, scarfs, and raffia clothing which he wore whenever he "conversed" with the spirits. Furthermore, the place of the exorcism is quite important. Some choose a remote part of the forest, a rock or a ravine. Others prefer a suitably furnished hut. The effect is frightening. It impresses their "customers" and further enhances the prestige of the exorcist. The sorcerer's apprenticeship takes about 5 years. It is then as a sorcerer's apprentice that he will be given the opportunity to take his first steps after having passed very difficult tests in the course of an impressive ceremony. The examination which the sorcerer who spoke to me had to pass was administered by five reputed sorcerers. They had locked him up in a hut and one of the five examiners had taken a goat to the bush and hidden it at a great distance. The candidate sorcerer was to find the hidden goat through the intervention of the spirits. He succeeded, he told me. The goat was sacrificed and a feast was organized in his honor while his "colleagues" were donning on him the still warm hide of the animal. He showed me the goatskin, hardened by time, which had remained the symbol of his power and social position.

Beginning Practice

After mumbling his wishes, the new sorcerer places his first "dolosse," the sacred knuckle bones, in a big container filled with water and slugs. He drinks deeply to the point where he begins to vomit in the magic pot which is thus filled. The "nganga" (old sorcerer) places the pot containing the soul of his new colleague on an altar consisting of the cranium of an animal in which a small fire has been lit. The elder sorcerer then hides the plate, the pot, and the altar in a spot known to him alone. In the future, should the new sorcerer fail his obligations taken that day, these objects would become immediately cursed: They would be stricken by an ill fate and become inoperative. The new healer can now begin to receive "clients." Years of training, a good knowledge of people, and subtle steps would unquestionably help him to develop a specialty f[illegible] his part of the world, the future remains very promising. However, [illegible] that such sorcerers can frequently play a nefarious, if not diabolical, role is a fact. They have specialized and have been trained in triggering human anguish or rage. Their undeniable success is based on belief in the spirits of the person's relatives.

Multiple Categories

However, these "sorcerers," as they are generally known, could be classified into multiple categories: The "kimbandas," who practice the art of healing with remedies ("milongos") whose taste is frequently horrible and which frequently present a real social danger, for they combine their lack of scruples with payments by their patients; the "nganga" (mon-ganga in the plural), who is rather the official seer of the tribe or the political oracle who, enjoying great prestige as well, is a member of the local nobility. We then have the "chingango" who could be truly dangerous, for it is they who make and sell various "medicines:" They could also supply intoxicating drugs or poisons as requested by the "client" and may even administer them themselves. In Central Africa we also come across the "chilombolas" who have extrasensory or supernatural gifts. Traditionally, they are in charge of the circumcision ceremonies. Equally widespread are the "mulogi," who are real fetish experts who specialize in invoking the powers of evil. Finally, there is the "quinbanda," a more general category: They treat the sick, provide diagnosis, conjure the evil spirits, restore family harmony, or could trigger death. They are the interpreters of the spirits of the waters which they have learned to contact, which makes them the masters of the waters, droughts, and wild animals.

White or Black Magic?

Actually, the entire magic process may be divided into two parts: black magic and white magic, the bad and the helping, the magic of evil or of fear. White magic could be useful. In the middle of the forest, away from a physician, a pharmacist, or a hospital, the sorcerer is frequently the only savior, the only person with experience, knowing plants and human diseases, and able to heal and, sometimes, even successfully operate. However, he remains surrounded by a thick layer of mystery which, certainly, has its reasons. The sorcerer is far from always evil. In the course of his practice he acquires an astonishing knowledge of the human psyche, of savage life, and of natural phenomena. Furthermore, his intelligence and his sense of psychology enable him virtually always to explain the positive or negative results of his interventions. Yet, many villagers have thus found themselves totally in the power of the local sorcerer. It is not frequent for all these sorcery categories to be combined within a single person who, in such a case, could enjoy incalculable prestige which, in itself, could trigger real panic or horror: Let us mention here the historical examples of the Mau-Mau or Simbas who were convinced that they were impervious to bullets and who fell under the fire regardless of the many amulets they wore and who, that same morning, had been "made powerful" by the sorcerer. As to black magic, its roots reach deep into the human past. Actually, it is unscrupulous systems which have noted this and have exploited the fears which black magic triggers occasionally in a refined and radical way.

In the course of my latest trip I met a young man from Brazzaville who had spent 2 years at Patrice Lumumba University in Moscow. In addition to proper scientific courses, he had also taken a course which explained how to exploit good luck charms and "ndoki:" According to the instructor, such amulets could prove to be an effective guerrilla weapon. Despite all this, as admitted a professor of medicine in one of the most famous African medical centers, "Some 20 percent of our patients suffer from psychosomatic difficulties, compared with about 2 percent in Europe, according to recent statistics. As honest academicians, we are powerless against such phenomena. The local patient frequently requires spectacular settings filled with mysticism and mystery. Yet, is there a better master of hypnosis than an African sorcerer? He alone could achieve spectacular and disconcerting results through means which, scientifically speaking, are nothing but artifices. However, he is successful where we remain powerless.

"He is successful...given the goodwill of the 'nganga' and his client."

MAGISTRATES' ASSOCIATIONS MEETING HELD

Cotonou EHUZU in French 13 Oct 80 pp 3, 4

[Article by R Mansourou: "For a Completely Modernized Court System"]

[Text] The constituent congress of the Magistrates' Association was held in Cotonou on 10 and 11 October 1980. The opening session was presided over by Comrade Martin Dohou Azonhiho, the minister of Information and Propaganda, substituting for the minister of Popular Justice; he was accompanied by Comrades Leandre Amlon, the presiding judge of the Central People's Court, and Tidjani Serpos Ismael, the public prosecutor of the Central People's Public Prosecutor Department. The event, as Comrade Alexandre Durand, chairman of the organizing committee, commented in his speech, is an important one and is a new experience for our Democratic and Popular Revolution.

The idea of forming such an association has often haunted our magistrates; however, the statutory discretion obligation, which in the final analysis is a political neutrality obligation, has always stood in the way of this wish.

The neutrality that is so brandished enables the dominant class to have its will enforced, since in his neutrality--which is only apparent--the judge is making use of a law that is full of political significance. "There is no neutral law if there are no neutral judges," observed Comrade Alexandre Durand, who continued, "The difficulty for a young revolutionary state like ours is that even while taking on the legacy of certain colonial and neocolonial laws, that state's basic political choices are not always translated into legal form. The magistrate who is well disposed to orient his decision in the direction of those choices finds himself facing a disarming legislative void. The judge is obliged to confine himself to the laws and regulations then in effect, which serve him as reference standards." The basic mission of the court system that is being questioned within the magistrates' association is to contribute, with the other state institutions, to liberating the productive forces. At a time when our court system is becoming popular the magistrates will be expected to create a framework for reflection and action likely to engender--through the combined effects of a better assimilation of the principles of Marxism-Leninism and an accurate appraisal of our country's realities, the indispensable harmony between the various institutions of the Beninese state.

Comrade Alexandre Durand then expressed the desire of the entire Beninese magistracy to make our country's court system and avant-garde system of justice that takes as its own the interests of the broad popular masses of our cities and rural areas, a justice system of participation and responsibility that participates actively in the Beninese people's struggle for liberation.

The public prosecutor of the Central Popular Public Prosecutor's Department, Comrade Tidjani Serpos, for his part, pointed out the place that the justice system must occupy in the life and organization of the state. He pointed out that this place is closely linked with the credibility the popular masses attach to the courts. Political neutrality must certainly not prevent the magistrates from patriotically engaging in the ongoing process here--a process whose final goal is to establish social justice and human dignity. "It would also be desirable for the people to recognize its justice system, understand it, feel it, exercise it and assume it," Comrade Tidjani Serpos continued. He vowed to see our various codes adapted to national realities and our country's socialist orientation.

In fact, the public prosecutor of the Central Popular Public Prosecutor's Department emphasized, sorcery, a crime whose component elements are difficult to delimit, is a no less patent reality in our cities and rural areas. Our jurisprudence must also be gradually oriented toward affirming and strengthening the rights of the Beninese woman. Similarly, our procedures must be simplified; their requirements and formalism still strike out at the person on trial and may distort the unfolding of the process.

Unionism in the magistracy marks the radical break with colonial and neocolonial justice in favor of the advent of a truly revolutionary justice.

Mentioning, for his part, the statutory discretion obligation that weighs heavily on the magistrate, the presiding judge of the Central Popular Court, Leandre Amlon commented that the Beninese people's major interests are in no way different from the interests of the magistracy. Then, referring to Lenin, he recalled the principal new role and the content of the activity of unions in a state that has embarked on the socialist path to development. "The unions," he said, "are an organization whose goal is to educate, to train, to instruct, a school of leadership, a management school." The presiding judge of the Central Popular Court asked the magistrates to work resolutely for the advent of a popular court system truly at the service of the broad laboring masses.

Speaking in his turn, the minister of Information and Propaganda, Comrade Martin Dohou Azonhiho, substituting for the Minister of Popular Justice, observed that this union which is being formed is a crucible in which must be merged all the magistrates' efforts to break radically with the past and thus bring order to the great body that is the magistracy. The accomplishing of so noble and exalted a mission calls for a proletarian class consciousness that will enable our magistrates to better understand the real interests of the oppressed and exploited classes among us. Comrade Martin Dohou Azonhiho also asked everyone to develop the spirit of mutual aid, unity and collaboration, to safeguard the interests of the entire judicial body. Then, defining the mission of the magistrates' association, the minister of Information and Propaganda observed that it consists of working for a total break with the old system of justice by fighting exploitation by the forces of evil, wherever they may be found.

A change of attitude, he continued, is the condition sine qua non for rendering the new judicial organs stipulated by the Fundamental Law operational and genuinely popular, and at the service of our laboring masses. Comrade Martin Dohou Azonhiho recommended to the magistrates the Marxist-Leninist method of criticism and self-criticism to correct faults and surmount inadequacies. For, he concluded, "No reform is accomplished without obstacles. Sniggerers will only agree to it when they see that it will succeed."

The basic unions and the other judicial bodies then expressed their support and their wishes for complete success for the work of the congress.

IMPORTANCE OF PETROLEUM PRODUCTION TO ECONOMY NOTED

Paris EUROPE OUTREMER in French No 604,May 80 pp 19-21

[Text] Today crude oil is the Congo's primary export product. Production began in 1960 when the small Pointe-Indienne underground deposit went into operation, and it was very appreciably increased when exploitation was begun in the Emeraude offshore deposit in 1972. Since 1973 it has fluctuated around 2,000,000 tons; in 1978 it was 2,400,000 and in 1979 it was 2,700,000. Recent discoveries will make it possible to increase production considerably, and the country's economic situation should be transformed.

Four deposits are currently in production, one on land and three offshore.

The smallest, Pointe-Indienne, the only one on land, north of Pointe-Noire, which has been exploited since 1960, is nearly exhausted; in 1979 it furnished only 11,000 tons.

Emeraude, on the Pointe-Noire Grands Fonds permit 30 km south of Pointe-Noire and 17 km from the coast, which has been exploited since 1972, has reserves of approximately 500,000,000 tons, but the recoverable quantities would be only 20,000,000 tons, chiefly because of the very complex configuration of the reservoirs and the viscosity of the oil. In 1979 it produced 1,417,000 tons, which brought the total for production since the beginning to some 13,000,000 tons. The Emeraude petroleum is removed by way of the Djeno terminal.

Loango, 30 km from the coast, exploitation of which began in 1977, in 1979 furnished 1,300,000 tons; this production should be maintained in 1980.

Finally, Likouala Marine did not enter into production until April 1980; 500,000 tons are anticipated this year.

Hydro-Congo, a national petroleum exploration and exploitation company founded in 1973 (capital: 710,000,000 CFA francs), represents the state in the hydrocarbons field, including refining and distribution. Two foreign companies incorporated in the Congo are producers: Elf Congo (capital 1,000,000,000 CFA francs), a subsidiary of Elf Aquitaine, whose investments at the end of 1979 amount to approximately 160,000,000,000 CFA francs, and Agip Recherches Congo (capital 600,000,000 CFA francs), a subsidiary of the Italian Agip Group. The state, through Hydro-Congo, holds 20 percent of the capital in return for granting exploration permits; the agreements provide for increasing this participation according to production levels, by means of free transfers of shares. Both producing companies have overlapping interests in the three large deposits under exploitation: Elf Congo is the operator on Emeraude and Likouala, Agip Recherches Congo on Loango.

Likouala Offshore: 1,500,000 Tons in 1981

The production installations of the Likouala Offshore were inaugurated last 21 April by Col Denis Sassou-Nguesso, the president of the Republic. The deposit was discovered in August 1972 by Elf Congo, the holder of the Pointe-Noire Grands Fonds permit; its participation in the deposit is 65 percent and Agip's is 35 percent. It is situated 22 km west of Emeraude. The depth of the water straight down varies from 91 to 97 meters. The oil permeates three sandstone-like levels several tens of meters thick and between 1,270 and 1,365 meters deep. The surface of the petroleum structure is some 30 square km. The reserves in place are about 40,000,000 tons, of which 7,000,000 to 10,000,000 will be recoverable. The 1980 production is expected to be about 500,000 tons. After that, in a full year, it should reach 1,500,000 tons. The cost of developing Likouala is estimated at approximately 33,000,000,000 CFA francs.

In the beginning the production will be maintained, preprocessed and removed from two platforms: a drilling platform, LAF 1, including a minimum of eight producing wells and providing production of the crude, separation of the associated gas and its flaring and the transfer of the crude to the LAFP; a drilling-production platform (LAFP), also including a minimum of eight wells and providing in addition to the production, separation and flaring, processing, metering and shipping all of the crude to Emeraude. First of all, if the pressure from the bottom is adequate, the exploitation is to operate by making use of the natural productivity of the wells with--if it later proves necessary--an activation by means of the gas produced by the deposit. In a second period production will be stimulated by injection of water; there will be room on the LAFP for some of the wells, and for the remainder a third platform, LAF 2, will be installed.

The Likouala production is removed by means of a 16-inch (41 cm) pipe to the Emeraude production control platform, and then by means of the pipe connecting Emeraude with the Djeno terminal. Since the Likouala crude contains a small quantity of gas, degassing installations have been built at the terminal.

The 1979 Successes

Exploration is being actively carried on. Unfruitful since the Loango discovery, in 1979 the explorations were marked by several successes. Elf Congo made two discoveries on the Pointe-Noire Grands Fonds permit: the one at Sendji, 38 km from the coast off Pointe Indienne; the one at Yanga, 8 km northwest of Sendji; and signs of oil have been detected at Tchendo. Exploitation will begin with Yanga, which presents more favorable characteristics than Sendji, and development will be undertaken in mid-1980. These two deposits, Sendji-Yanga, could furnish higher production than that of Likouala. On land, on the Loeme permit, indications of oil have been discovered at Mengo and drilling has confirmed the possibility of a marketable production. It should be noted that the French company, Bouygues-Offshore has just created a company incorporated in the Congo, BOS-Congo, which in early 1981 will begin manufacturing drilling platforms and petroleum installations.

The plans of Elf Congo--whose investments since its founding in 1969 amount to a total of 160,000,000,000 CFA francs--are for the pursuit of the exploration of Pointe-Noire Grands Fonds, the development of the discovered structures and the search for methods to increase the recovery rate: long-stroke pumps, water injection, vapor injection, etc. Research is also being conducted on the other permits: on land on the Loeme permit, and offshore, farther out, on the Haute Mer permit; both these permits were granted in 1973 to a partnership consisting of Elf Congo as operator (85 percent) and Hydro-Congo (15 percent).

The International Development Association (IDA), a branch of the World Bank, in December 1979 granted the Congo a $5,000,000 credit to finance the services of several petroleum experts, training programs for Hydro-Congo, an aeromagnetometric survey of the Congolese Basin, to collect indications of the region's petroleum capacity, and a study of the technical data and programs of Elf Congo, in order to improve the recovery of petroleum on Emeraude.

In its concern for diversifying its petroleum partners, the Congo in June 1979 signed an offshore exploration agreement with a group of three companies: Congo Superior Oil, the operator (25 percent), Canadian Superior Oil (25 percent) and Cities Service Congo Petroleum Corporation (50 percent). Then, early in 1980, with a group of three American companies: Coastal Corporation (houston), Agri-Petco International Inc. (Tulsa, Oklahoma) and Ladd Petroleum Corporation (Denver, Colorado), an agreement on a 4,000-square-km permit belonging to Hydro-Congo. By the terms of the agreements, if a discovery is made the exploration costs are paid by priority out of the resulting production of petroleum or gas, and afterwards it will be shared in the following proportion: 50 percent for Hydro-Congo and 22.5 percent, 12.5 percent and 15 percent respectively for the three American companies.

The total expected production for 1980 is approximately 3,000,000 tons and production in the two years after that should reach 4,000,000 and over 5,000,000 tons; this prediction was made in July by Albin Chalandon, president and general manager of Elf Congo, who stated on the other hand that the Congo "could in a short time become one of the principal producers of the Gulf of Guinea."

Petroleum: in 1980, 62 Percent of the Operating Budget

The increased petroleum production in 1978 and 1979 and the successive rises in the price of petroleum are reflected in the government's budget. The 1980 adjusted budget figures the petroleum resources at 58,700,000,000 CFA francs in license fees and taxes on the petroleum companies, which would represent 62 percent of the operating budget. These revenues have already made it possible to resume regular payment of the salaries of civil service agents and to accelerate the settlement of arrears and debts owed to government suppliers. They will be able to contribute to starting up production again, to ameliorating the deficit in the balance of trade and to resuming equipment programs.

Oil exports constitute the largest share of Congolese exports: in 1978 they were 19,406,000 CFA francs. However, this total seems underestimated, since the figures provided by the petroleum companies total 44,300,000.

GREATER ROLE OF YOUNG PEOPLE IN PARTY AFFAIRS REPORTED

Young People Get Posts

Abidjan FRATERNITE-MATIN in French 2 Oct 80 p 11

[Article by Jean-Pierre Aye]

[Text] The Seventh Congress of the PDCI-RDA [Democratic Party of the Ivory Coast-African Democratic Rally] promised change. That change has taken place. It is far-reaching and significant. Nor is it a distorsion of the facts to write that there has been an upheaval amidst stability. Actually, it was anticipated that the sessions of the congress would give rise to strong decisions that would help the party forge a new image with which every Ivorian could identify. The challenge has been met. Results have even exceeded the expectations of nearly all delegates to the congress. The party has changed profoundly, in both form and substance.

The new determination affirmed by the chief of state and reaffirmed by the congress is to give the PDCI the means to become a people's party once again, the crucible of national unity and guarantee of development bringing all social classes together in the same surge of true brotherhood backed by the efforts of all age categories. The senior members, whose meritorious service to the Ivory Coast is known to all, therefore had to pass the torch to the younger generation in order that their action might be continued with new ardor in the service of millions of other young people. They have now done so and young members have entered the Political Bureau, even occupying seats on the Executive Committee. Others have become members of the board. In setting up new structures for new and dynamic action, the party wants to be able to count on the contributions of its young people, the certain future of an Ivory Coast that owed it to itself to avoid political stagnation with all its paralyzing effects on leadership bodies and members.

The Seventh Congress of the PDCI-RDA is now history, as are the expectations it fostered. Hopes have not been disappointed. Men and women have been entrusted with the political leadership of the Ivory Coast for the 1980's, a period that will be difficult because of the many crises threatening the fragile equilibrium of our world, crises that will demand of developing countries -- our own in particular -- constructive imagination, unity in action and sustained sacrifice in order to safeguard and further our accomplishments. A new leadership team was therefore necessary. We now have it in the person of Houphouet-Boigny. The congress warmly and affectionately renewed the confidence of all Ivorians in him and expressed their gratitude to him. It was right for it to do so for President Houphouet-Boigny has sacrificed everything for the Ivory Coast. He has waged an all-points struggle to ensure its development. While today's record is rich in great achievements, backed by statistics that speak for themselves, it nevertheless reveals that the task yet to be completed is gigantic. Houphouet-Boigny must therefore remain at the helm; it is the urgent appeal of the Congress in this period of stormy seas. Moved by this new mark of confidence, the president rose, and the delegates rose with him, to respond to their long ovation and to answer their request in the affirmative. The applause was even greater.

After that moment of intense emotion shared, the head of the new Political Bureau, Dr Alphonse Djedje Mady, delivered the closing address, following the tradition set by Konan Lambert in 1970 and Paul Yao Akoto in 1975.

Djedje Mady first of all expressed his gratitude: to the foreign delegations that had come to give their support to our party during its historic congress; to delegates to the congress, "who with order and discipline made the success of the work of the congress possible, thereby guaranteeing a transition amidst stability"; and finally, to the chief of state, "expressing the thanks of the young people for the salutary act he has just taken with this decisive step down the path of democracy."

The speaker then traced the history of the MEECI [Movement of Students and Pupils of the Ivory Coast], of which he is a founding member, noting that "following the student protests of 1968, which sometimes caused solidly established regimes to tremble, high school and university students have decided freely, very freely, to channel their action through a political party, the PDCI-RDA." After recalling the controversies marking the movement at that time and the determination of its leaders to achieve better integration of young people into the party, the speaker paid homage -- the homage of a young, sympathetic and committed young person -- to the chief of state: "We have but one ambition: that of learning in the school of President Houphouet-Boigny -- that is, the school of wisdom, self-sacrifice and love. It would be unfortunate if, while living so close to that inexhaustible source of wisdom which General de Gaulle himself called a 'political mind of the first order,' a source to which the entire world comes to quench its thirst, we should die of thirst without once having the idea of drinking from it." After emphasizing the actions of the president on behalf of young people from all social classes, the speaker made an appeal to young people: "Young people from the north, south, east, west or central region, no matter what youth movement you chose in which to begin your work: the UGECI [General Union of Students of the Ivory Coast], UNECI [National Union of Ivory Coast Students], MEECI, USEECI [expansion unknown], the National Federation of Youth Movements and Associations, other movements or church groups. Whatever your sphere of activity: management personnel, workers, farmers, our time has come. Yes, the time has come for us to go beyond our quarrels and misunderstandings as young people and rally around a common ideal: the construction of a united, fine, and prosperous Ivory Coast for all."

Djedje Mady closed his address with the following words: "As a single man, the young people of the Ivory Coast, your young people for whom no sacrifice has been too great for you, thank you, through my modest voice, for having had confidence in them.

"President Houphouet, thank you for being you!"

Following Djedje Mady's speech, which we shall publish in its entirety tomorrow, the delegates to the congress left the hall, exchanging impressions, congratulating the newly elected officers, convinced that they had lived through historic moments which, because they bring hope, must not fail to be projected into our daily lives. It is in practice that the Seventh Congress must become historic!

Young and Responsible

There has been a profound change in the Ivorian political cast. The Seventh Congress of the PDCI-RDA, inspired by the chief of state and guided by his general policy report, had its epilogue yesterday. Naturally, the reorganization of the party is an outstanding event, but what would the best thought-out structures be worth if the men in charge of heading them were not up to the level of their responsibilities? There can be no doubt: The dominant feature of these sessions, besides the report by the chief of state, is assuredly this massive entry of young people into the Political Bureau and the board. It was a necessity dictated by the law of succession in order to avoid any break, any opposition of age classes, any abrupt -- because ill-prepared -- change. What happened yesterday at the Palace of Congresses was positive. New blood among the party leaders had been promised and the promise was kept, but what a heavy responsibility for those elected! What a noble and overwhelming burden for all those their age! What a challenge to young people in general!

The helping hand which senior members extended to young people -- definitely not always with a smile on their faces -- is an invitation to a permanent commitment to actions serving the entire Ivory Coast, through the new objectives defined by the congress. After 20 years of development, our country naturally needed to redefine itself and reorient itself, but the "spoiled children" -- which most of us are -- of an Ivory Coast that gives without keeping track, that pardons when it should punish, that absolves when penitence is done, must now forge a new way of thinking in order to win the great confidence, the very great confidence placed in young people by their "elders." The opening up of the party to young people, with the near certainty of creating a new youth thrust aimed at a mass following and more active participation in the task of building the nation, is an unexpected opportunity to be seized. It must not be compromised, no matter what level of the pyramid we young people might occupy. Together, we have a moral contract that must not be betrayed. Shall we fulfill it, individually and collectively?

Politbureau Head Addresses Congress

Abidjan FRATERNITE-MATIN in French 3 Oct 80 pp 12-13

[Speech by Dr Alfonse Djedje Mady, head of new Political Bureau, to Seventh Congress of the PDCI-RDA]

[Text] Among the most important decisions made by the Seventh Congress of the PDCI-RDA was to open up the party to young people, as proposed by the president of the party, Felix Houphouet-Boigny. Dr Djedje Mady, who is one of those named to a high post within the party, delivered the closing address, the entire text of which follows.

Mr President of the Republic of the Ivory Coast, president and founder of the African Democratic Rally, president of the Democratic Party of the Ivory Coast; honorable members of the Political Bureau and the board; ambassadors, honored guests, officials, ladies and gentlemen, comrade delegates to the congress:

Mr President, it is a very great honor, but a formidable duty as well, to address this august assembly from this platform.

I therefore ask your forgiveness in advance for any sins of omission and the imperfect nature of my remarks.

Mr President, I should like first of all to thank all the delegations from our brother countries and friendly nations which agreed to participate in the sessions of the Seventh Congress of our great party. I wish to thank also all our guests for the support they have given us at such an important time in the life of our party. Your participation in our congress will strengthen the friendship and brotherhood linking the Ivory Coast to your different countries. Once again, thank you.

I should also like to thank all the delegates to the congress who, in an atmosphere of order and discipline, made the success of the work of this congress possible, ensuring change amidst stability.

Mr President, at the close of the work of the Seventh Congress of our party, the PDCI-RDA, I wish to express to you, with very great emotion, the gratitude of our young people.

First of all, we thank you for the more than salutary act which you have just completed with your decisive step down the path of democracy. Thanks to your charisma and to the countless sacrifices that you have made for your people, you are building, on the foundation of a mosaic of ethnic groups, a solid, proud and prosperous nation whose unity and hope you embody. That unity and hope could only be guaranteed by giving a voice to the people, but with discipline and under your sole authority. By putting the "train of democracy" on the right track, you are preparing the Ivory Coast for the challenges of the future, Mr President. By this democratization of the regime, you have just given us the surest guarantee of the future and all your young people thank you infinitely.

Mr President, those young people have never been and are not now for a blind upheaval of the action you have ceaselessly taken for the good of all Ivorians, action which everyone without exception agrees is largely positive. Young people simply want to be included. They want to be the spearhead of the tireless and perspicacious action which you are waging for the development of our beloved Ivory Coast. They want to be the great guarantee for the future. They want to continue your action.

But one can only ensure the continuity of an undertaking such as yours, provide it with renewed strength, if one is profoundly imbued with it. That, Mr President, is what has justified and still justifies the will to militate on the part of your young high school and university students and cadres, for while Montaigne may have preferred a "well-made head" to a "full head," we personally prefer a head that is both well-made and full! That is why, after a long period of evasiveness, a congress of high school and university students was held in Abidjan on 3, 4 and 5 March 1969 that was different from any other. Actually, for the first time in the Ivory Coast and perhaps in the world, following the student dissent of 1968 that sometimes caused solidly established regimes to tremble, high school and university students decided freely, very freely, to commit themselves to a political party: the PDCI-RDA. As a result, a movement, the MEECI (Movement of Students and Pupils of the Ivory Coast), emerged from the meeting of students in congress at the party headquarters in Treichville. The response reserved for it was not at all surprising because as in the case of anything out of the ordinary, the creation of the MEECI gave rise to surprise, astonishment and even indignation.

Our Credo

But these diverse reactions rapidly disappeared because the magnitude of the choice and the realism surrounding it forced the admiration of former detractors. The vast majority of the high school and university students understood that the MEECI was a life raft they had to seize in order to reach the other shore, the shore where better tomorrows were possible.

If that majority finally understood, it was because it realized that we are Ivorians aware of the sacrifices made by our country for our training and that we are convinced of the principles underlying the policy of President Felix Houphouet-Boigny.

From this platform, we claim to have coined the term "Houphouetism," publicly pronounced for the first time by our constituent congress of March 1969. Yes, our credo is Houphouetism. It is a policy made by man for man. It is a policy based on peace, harmony, justice, solidarity, tolerance and brotherhood thanks to a constructive dialog. It is a policy based on work amidst discipline. It is a unifying policy that slowly but surely seeks to make of an ethnic mosaic a united and prosperous nation: Houphouetism is our credo.

We have sought to turn our backs on facility, for what could be easier than to go against what is done by the established authority and become mired in attitudes as negative as they are ridiculous? What could be easier than to engage in sterile dissent based at the outset on bad faith? What we want is to participate in the grand task of nationbuilding, which is assuredly more thrilling and much more difficult than destroying.

That is why we have said no to systematic criticism and to facile demagogy, for if the young people in developed countries seek to destroy, it is because they have something to destroy. We have everything to build! We say no because if the young people in industrialized nations desperately seek to learn what their consumer society will do with them, we, on the contrary, have too many alternatives: Our problem is deciding where we can best serve our country. Finally, we have said no because in Africa, quarrels within a family are not aired in the market place. We say yes to participation, to the collective destiny, to true solidarity: fundamental principles of African philosophy and soul. And in the matter of wisdom, Africa needs no teacher.

As far as we are concerned, we have never claimed to know everything. We have but one ambition, that of learning in the right school, the school of President Houphouet-Boigny, the school of wisdom, self-sacrifice and love. It would be unfortunate if, while living so close to that inexhaustible source of wisdom which General de Gaulle himself called a "political mind of the first order," a source to which the entire world comes to quench its thirst, we should die of thirst without once having the idea of drinking from it.

Despite all the incomprehension and difficulties of all sorts, we have served that apprenticeship and continue to do so and we are happy that we have. We young people number in the thousands. We are mobilized and ready to respond to any appeal of the party and communicate the fervor and generosity of our youth. Our youthful enthusiasm would gain in wisdom from contact with our elders, whose positive action does not need to be demonstrated. But that action needs to be imbued with new vigor and sustained from generation to generation. That is why our generation goes to you with deference, dear elders, to gradually receive the historic torch that we in turn will pass on to the next generation.

"Speak, oh Lord, thy servant heareth," say the Holy Scriptures. We say: "Speak, President Houphouet-Boigny, your young militants are listening."

It is in that spirit that we conceive "education in the service of development," for a diploma is but a means, a reference whose optimum potential can be attained only in a well-known field. Every young cadre must know the development strategy of his country and that knowledge of the terrain does not exist in any book, in any institution, in any university. One can objectively learn the real problems of one's country only by helping those in charge of leading it and who face those problems. I would like to return to that African wisdom which would have the father transmit his secrets and his wisdom to the son closest to him, the one who accompanies him to the fields, to the palm plantation, everywhere. It is to that son that he would gradually but surely transmit the ancestral secrets he keeps in his great heart. That apprenticeship of the concrete, of what is real, the political education of your youth, Mr President, can and must only come from you and your party. Let the West instruct us, but please give us our civic and political education yourself. You have the means to do so, Mr President. When you summon us, we shall always be present, willing to serve our nation.

It is in that spirit that we conceive your policy of openness to young people, the only means of ensuring change amidst stability and avoiding generational conflicts. That policy of a hand extended to the young has been a constant in your policy, Mr President. As early as 1946, you allowed young Ivorians go to France to study so that the Ivory Coast, whose independence you already foresaw, would have solidly trained, competent cadres to lead it to its full development. Thus, on the dawn of independence, at the 1959 congress, young people were already on the scene. After the 1965 congress, young people entered the party structures and different government institutions in force, because of your will. Before me speaking from this platform were my elders Konan Lambert in 1970 and Paul Akoto Yao in 1975.

Prestige Abroad

I could not find a more eloquent illustration than this quote from President Felix Houphouet-Boigny himself when he told the Fourth Congress of our party: "We believe that we have always acted in keeping with the interests and aspirations of the Ivorian people. That is why the continuity of our action will be assured. We say this because we sometimes hear the question asked: The Ivory Coast under the leadership of President Houphouet-Boigny is following a policy assuring it of stability and credit, but after he disappears, will that policy be followed by the young? Let those who ask that question be reassured. Let them know, in fact, that no matter how great a role I might play at the head of this country because of the heavy responsibilities I bear, the policy of the Ivory Coast is not that of a single man! It is first of all -- and this can never be emphasized enough -- the policy of our country, of the PDCI-RDA, whose courageous members are determined to ensure the well-being of all Ivorians in freedom. It is also the fruit of continuing cooperation and dialog with the young people who -- let us not forget it -- occupy over half of all the posts in government and nearly all board posts in the administration. They occupy nearly all of our embassies abroad and are strongly represented in the National Assembly, the Economic Council and in the party leadership. Would they find any advantage in reversing their judgment? Will they feel a need to change for the sake of change? Would they stand to gain by going back on a policy that has given the people of this country a standard of living that could be the envy of many African nations, earning the Ivory Coast great respect and prestige abroad?

"Those who doubt the continuity of our policy after we are gone truly judge lightly the good sense and realism of the young people in whom we have complete confidence."

This proves once again that even your great innovations are always marked by the seal of continuity and stability, for in the spirit of the father of the Ivorian nation, ill-conceived improvisation has little place. And yet, the rejuvenation brought by this congress has its specificity and particular joy. Imagine the pleasure of a young planter who holds in his hands the income from his first sale, or the young worker who receives his first paycheck! Up to that time, he had been aided by relatives and friends and for the first time, he harvests the fruits of his own labor. It is that feeling which you are experiencing now, Mr President. Actually, while you have always opened the regime's doors to young people, those young people were for the most part trained abroad by friendly countries that we must warmly thank. Today, you are harvesting the fruits of the labor of your own hands: the cadres wholly trained in the Ivory Coast by your university, your professional schools, your lycees and high schools. They are cadres "made in the Ivory Coast"! These young people acquired their scientific, technical and technological knowledge without losing contact with the Ivorian reality of every day and they are completely imbued with it.

Mr President, may those fruits conceived in the heart of the Ivorian land that you love so much be as sweet and give you the pleasure and satisfaction that you have the right to expect! May those cadres imbued with Ivorian reality bend to the grand task of developing our country!

But can we conceive of any real development of the Ivory Coast without effective aid to the farmers who make up the vast majority of the Ivorian population and the driving force of our development? We therefore feel more mobilized and hope that this theme will not simply remain a theme of the congress, but rather, become ever more real and one day help reduce the disparity between the cities and rural areas. Can it be otherwise when we know, Mr President, that despite your very high office, you remain attached to the land, and when one remembers that the PDCI itself was born of the African Agricultural Trade Union? This will then be but a happy return to our roots, which can only give new vigor to the party and the Ivory Coast.

Mr President, you once told the West: "By helping us, you help yourselves." Allow me to paraphrase that remark by saying: Ivorian cadres, by helping the farmers, you help yourselves.

That is why I turn to you, young Ivorians. Whether you are from the north, south, east, west or central region, no matter what youth movement you chose in which to begin your work: the UGECI, UNECI, MEECI, USEECI, the National Federation of Youth Movements and Associations, other movements or church groups. Whatever your sphere of activity: management personnel, workers, farmers. It is to all the young people of the Ivory Coast that I am speaking. Our time has come. Yes, the time has come for us to go beyond our youthful quarrels and misunderstandings and rally around a common ideal: the construction of a fine, united, prosperous Ivory Coast for all.

Let Us Unite

We are all the sons of the same country that must triumph alone. Let us remember that no one is completely right or completely wrong. Every person is partly right and partly wrong. Let us therefore close ranks in order to join our truths and reject our errors. The Ivory Coast and our elders expect a great deal of us. We have the duty of fulfilling their hopes by building, thanks to their secular wisdom and our youthful enthusiasm, an Ivory Coast where it is good to live. Young people from all corners of the Ivory Coast, of all religions and all walks of life, let us unite behind the Ivorian leader, the enlightened guide Felix Houphouet-Boigny!

Let our hearts beat as one to bring about the triumph of the ideals and watchwords of the father of the nation!

Let our spirits be in perfect harmony in order to overcome any obstacles that might be erected in the path of success on which Felix Houphouet-Boigny guides us!

Mr President, as a single man, the young people of the Ivory Coast, your young people for whom no sacrifice has been too great for you, thank you, through my humble voice, for having had confidence in them.

President Houphouet, thank you for being you!

Long live Ivorian youth so that the PDCI-RDA may live under the enlightened leadership of President Felix Houphouet-Boigny, to whom we wish continuing good health as he serves a ever finer, more united and more brotherly Ivory Coast!

Long live the Ivory Coast!

MOI ADDRESSES NATION, STRESSING UNITY

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 21 Oct 80 pp 1, 4

[Text]

PRESIDENT Moi yesterday freed 7,004 prisoners convicted of minor offences.

He announced the decision to a mammoth crowd at Uhuru Park, Nairobi, to celebrate the 28th anniversary of Kenyatta Day.

The President was applauded loudly by the crowd and guests on the Presidential dais.

He said he wanted the freed prisoners to obey the law and "participate fully in nation building".

It was President Moi's second clemency action. On Jamhuri Day, 1978, he released all political detainees.

On Jamhuri Day, 1975 the late President Jomo Kenyatta released 10,000 prisoners.

The highlights of President Moi's speech yesterday included:

- Assessment of the country's economic and development strategies.
- Assertion that development is a joint venture between the Government and the people.
- Need for absolute loyalty to the Government and for unity.
- Concern for the preservation of natural resources.
- Realisation of the spirit of the KIA leaders' conference in proposing a restructuring and reorganisation of State institutions.
- Call for a concerted effort by the people and leaders to produce enough food to feed the nation.

In his concluding remarks, President Moi said: "We must go on now, working together for the future, and for our children's future, in the knowledge that national integrity and social justice must always rest upon the foundation of peace, love and unity."

The following is the full text of the President's speech:

First of all I send my warmest greetings to all Kenyans, here and abroad, as we celebrate this year's Kenyatta Day. Kenyatta Day will always remain an important national day in our Republic. This is because Kenyatta Day reminds us of our determined struggle for an independent Kenya.

This national day was named in honour of a fearless and dedicated freedom fighter, a patriot and statesman who will always be remembered and respected as the founder of the Kenya nation. Throughout his long political and public life, Mzee Jomo Kenyatta always stressed that national unity is both strength and a fundamental requirement in solving problems that might confront us. Moreover, he invariably pointed to national unity as the means of achieving human dignity in freedom, and as the best means of freely pursuing country-wide economic and social development.

Today I want to refer to some of these ideas as they relate to the future development of our people and nation. In particular, I want to highlight some of the meanings of the term "independence", and some of the realities which bear upon the safeguarding of that independence.

In doing this, it is proper and rewarding to think back and take pride in events and accomplishments of the past. However, we must also bear in mind that the nourishment of the spirit of a nation requires translation of the past and its events into the language of the present and the future.

As we now know, in any developing country, the first two decades or so following political independence are always extremely difficult and demanding. It is necessary first to establish the kind of constitution that is both acceptable and understandable to the citizens of the country. Then there are a number of political institutions that have to be changed, new ones established and arrangements made for a new order and priorities which can then lead to new traditions. In addition, processes of localisation must extend throughout all the public services and structures of the country.

By all these means, a different kind of social fabric is essentially and necessarily created. In order ensure that all these efforts are effective and reinforce each other towards the set objectives, it is necessary to embark upon comprehensive planning — a process which must, clearly, cover all political, economic and social dimensions.

What I have just said might sound theoretical. In actual fact this, in summary, is what has been happening in our country since independence.

Today I want to stress that the kind of planning needed is not something which is mechanical. Furthermore, it is certainly not something which should be left to the Government alone.

I realise that sometimes it is easy to think that the Government is a kind of machine — something which is remote from the lives of ordinary people. Such an attitude can lead to the false notion that the Government just has to watch day-to-day happenings in world affairs, while somehow providing endless sums of money and other forms of support required for economic and social progress.

Such false thinking may make people lose the spirit of enterprise, and create a mentality in which there is a tendency to blame the Government whenever difficulties or setbacks occur.

Harmony

The whole truth is very different. As we all remember, Mzee Jomo Kenyatta repeatedly emphasised that in Kenya the Government is the people. Today I want to tell you that I firmly hold the same view, namely that the Government is the people, and that the two must work together in harmony and full understanding of each other.

In this connexion, my Government fully appreciates that there has to be a systematic approach, through planning, to most of the fundamental questions and needs facing us. In particular, we must give systematic attention to those questions which have a direct bearing upon the development of services and creation of opportunities and outlets for the people in every part of the Republic.

Moreover, and towards that general objective, I fully appreciate that one of the important tasks of the Government machinery is to assemble the necessary information on which to base decisions on development policies and programmes. Collection of such information, and its dissemination, is absolutely necessary in maintaining close understanding between Government and the people, and in ensuring that the two work together in harmony.

As I said earlier, one of the main subjects I would like to discuss with you today is the meaning of independence. I am sure you will remember that when we were celebrating the 10th anniversary of our independence, one of the main points which was stressed time and time again was that we must consolidate our independence through greater efforts to achieve economic independence.

Several years have now gone by since those celebrations, and today we are still in this same vital phase of our struggle for national independence. We have actually taken many significant steps along the road towards economic independence.

However, the challenge has been made, at times, very difficult by surrounding world pressures and international economic problems. But we must not allow such challenges and economic problems to discourage us in our struggle.

Therefore, as we move into the 1980s, I urge all Kenyans, each one of us, to be prepared to even greater dedication. Here I must stress that I am not calling for dedication only on the part of leaders who are prominent in political or public affairs. Kenya needs the dedication of every man and woman in the pattern and example of their daily lives.

I know that it is easy to forget the real meaning of such words as dedication because they are referred to frequently on occasions like this one. I would, therefore, now like to say something about the meaning of this important word.

First, and foremost, dedication must mean a deep love for our country. Further, this love should always be openly reflected in absolute loyalty to the nation and its institutions. Leaders who are dedicated must be positive in their outlook, ready to initiate services and programmes, and constantly looking out for improved ways of tackling various tasks.

The country draws no benefit from those who sit on the sidelines, willing only to observe and then to criticise. Leaders who are dedicated must be prepared to work hard, realising that efficient management of national affairs demands from them far less "talk" and much more "action". The country needs "doers" and not more "talkers". Moreover, all of us must also be willing to make sacrifices, both for others here and now, as well as in the cause of coming generations.

All this is of great importance. Ten years hence, when we shall have to think about the closing decade of this century, our Republic will be whatever all of us have made it. And I sometimes wonder while we may be grappling with the problems of today, whether we think enough about this future. With this in mind, let me put to you some questions, and which I urge you all to consider, in the context of national interest.

Do we, the people of Kenya, really understand, and care enough about the erosion and destruction of natural resources on which the coming generations must depend? Are we ready to think about conserving natural assets, instead of always exploiting them for whatever immediate gain?

Then, in another field, are we saving enough from our current incomes to support an expanding economy, and to help reach the national objective of economic independence? How can this aim be secured without higher levels of saving and re-investment on a countrywide scale?

And, as a third and vital point, are we preparing our children adequately enough to meet the challenge of the future" We are glad to provide for them networks and systems of formal education. But can a strength of character be built without the restraints of discipline and effective teaching of morality? Furthermore, are we setting in the various aspects of our life, a good example to our children?

There are many such questions, and difficulties, which must be confronted and answered. I we the Government and people of this country, are to continue being honest with each other. But one thing is certain. Unless we go on, constantly and consciously, promoting and defending our national unity, there will be no victories. Moreover, we must realise that beneath the increasingly complex umbrella of nation building, we must never take this unity for granted.

I want all leaders especially in our Parliament and in the ruling party, to realise that their most critical duty, always, is to preserve and defend the national unity — for national unity is the single most important element in the future of our country.

But national unity should not be regarded solely as a political idea, or as a state of mind. What it must really imply and involve, throughout the Republic, is full awareness of shared interests and mutual dependence.

The man who sees public money being spent, say on education in Garissa or West Pokoto, should realise that the money may have come from tea production in Kericho, or coffee production in Murang'a, or customs duty paid by businessmen in Kisumu.

The man who has well paid employment in Nairobi, looking after and repairing tourist vehicles, would not have such a job unless facilities were maintained and well operated in places like Samburu or Narok. The craftsman building up his business in an industrial estate in Mombasa must vitally depend on demand for his products in Machakos or Meru.

I can give more examples. The man who was trained in Nairobi, for some particular industrial task, may find an outlet for his talent when some new processing plant is opened in Homa Bay or Kilifi. A doctor who was born in Embu or Eldoret may come to give devoted service to the people in Voi or in Bungoma. Productivity of mixed farming in Nakuru must have a vital impact, on supplies and prices, affecting families in all areas of our Republic.

What I am attempting to show you through these examples is that national unity is also a sense of family. We must all take an interest, and a pride, in what every member of the Kenya family is doing, since it is upon the sum total of all contributions that progress depends.

At this point I want to stress that in all our affairs we must always be realistic. In this connexion, we must know that in the years to come, many stresses will arise, to threaten the solid edifice of our national unity. Some of these may have roots in political ambition or personal greed. Some may spring from impatience with hardship or challenge. Yet others may be built around an imported political dogma or doctrine. And so I warn you all, and urge you all, that we must together be continuously vigilant. In our beloved Republic there is still much to be planned, started and accomplished. But we can do it all so long as you can say that the man standing alongside, or the man in a neighbouring district, or the man in whichever other province, is your brother. If our vigilance is ever relaxed, allowing unity to be destroyed by hatreds or suspicions or intrigues, then our nationhood will be no more. And if this is gone, nothing of worth and of strength will remain.

During the recent Leaders' Conference at Kenya Institute of Administration there was a fresh and unanimous commitment to national unity. At that meeting it was freely and clearly recognised that political triumphs leading into a modern era of political stability had all evolved upon the solid rock of unity.

Moreover, all the points about shared interets and mutual dependence, throughout the Republic, were fully understood. And it was agreed, in addition, that our main shield against external challenge, be it from regional hostilities or international economic pressures, was national unity, underlying trust between the Government and people.

Freedom

In such a context, I will now make a brief reference to the question of closing down institutions which, in the past, have had some tribal origin or flavour.

Over recent weeks, this matter has been hotly debated in our Parliament and Press. I have no criticism of this fact. Indeed, it is enormously encouraging to see the extent to which people recognise and value freedom of speech and of comment in our nation. All of this is a symbol of political maturity. It says much as well for the kind of democracy we wish to preserve, in which human rights and individual interests are not simply ground into dust by the bulldozer of the State.

In the event, therefore, and with regard to tribal institutions, I am happy that the air has been cleared through public debate and that decisions publicly announced will ensure that the objectives of the recent Leaders' Conference at KIA are fully realised.

Finally I wish now to mention one other important aspect of relationship between Government and people. For this purpose, we might take national food policy as an appropriate example.

Ministers and officials are sometimes quoted in newspapers as saying that the Government is determined to feed the people. But of course, in its literal meaning, any such statement does not make much sense. The Government cannot itself carry out of such tasks as ploughing, weeding and harvesting which are involved in food production. It is really the people who must work hard to feed themselves.

Here I am not saying that the Government will stand aside merely watching. The Government's role is to support people's efforts as vigorously and as comprehensively as possible through such measures as agricultural credit, construction of access roads and storage facilities, research, extension services, setting appropriate prices, and so on.

My Government will continue to provide that kind of support and, in addition, continuously create new opportunities for farmers. But the actual production of the food, for home consumption and for the market, must be done by the people themselves.

Indeed it is important to realise that Government programmes are basically aimed at mobilising human resources and equipping the people to carry out, increasingly more efficiently, all practical tasks for their development and in this connection we must also realise that development of the people is the development of the nation.

I therefore urge all our people to respond whole heartedly and make maximum use of opportunities which exist, and those which will arise as we continue our struggle for national development.

Summing up what I have been saying so far, I believe there are two most critical functions of a Government: one is connected with the provision of opportunities and means, and the other is an obligation to tell people the truth.

Adapting

Then, on the other side of the coin, the people must respond creatively to all the services and incentives provided, while adapting their approaches and activities to the realities that are before them. Both Government and people have an equally vital task, and as I said earlier, there is no point in blaming the Government for such difficulties as might arise or worsen, if warnings and advice are simply ignored by the people themselves.

The whole relationship is a constantly evolving process. Economic and social circumstances which existed at the time of Uhuru, in the context of world affairs, cannot be compared with the circumstances of today. We had to start building on some modest and often weak foundation, but now, Kenya has become a modern state in world society. The scale and the nature of all problems, and of all policy requirements, have vastly changed.

Whether in agriculture, or in the commercial and industrial sectors, there should never be too great a dependence on Government. As a feature of our national maturity, the people themselves must always seek and work to improve their own welfare, and it is within this principle that we shall find the key which finally unlocks the door to economic independence.

United

I want to end this address by reminding you of the burning faith which Mzee Jomo Kenyatta had in the people of Kenya. Long before our independence, and even during those difficult days of imprisonment and detention, Mzee Kenyatta maintained his strong belief that as long as people were united and dedicated, independence would surely come. Further, he was convinced that economic reforms, underlying social justice, would then be like strong shoots springing from the inspiring soil of nationhood.

Today, as we confront the challenges and needs of this coming decade, it is fitting that we should recall such faith. In many ways, life has now become more complex, factors, possibilities and constraints have all changed, both in pace and in proportion. But other things have remained the same: faith in our nation and dedication to its purposes.

We must go on now, working together for the future, and for our children's future, in the knowledge that national integrity, and social justice, must always rest upon the foundation of peace, love and unity.

KIBAKI TRIES TO DISMISS GOSSIP

Nairobi THE WEEKLY REVIEW in English 17 Oct 80 p 7

[Text] HE was out of the country when the great controversy over the winding up of tribal organisations erupted, but when Vice-president Mwai Kibaki returned after attending the joint annual meetings of the World Bank and International Monetary Fund in Washington last week he was confronted with reports that there were rumours to the effect that he did not support the resolution passed at the Kenya Institute of Administration July Kenya leaders conference which called for an end to tribal organisations and that in fact he had absented himself from the heated parliamentary debate on the subject so as to avoid tipping his hand on the matter. The insinuation was that he was under pressure from the most powerful of the tribal organisations, the Gikuyu, Embu and Meru Association, not to support the call for its demise. Kibaki was livid about the reports and he called a press conference to protest the gossip.

"The Kenyans to whom some of this gossip has been spread may not, of course, have known the reason that I was not at parliament, when the discussion was taking place, was not that I was absent from parliament," the vice-president said. "I was in fact away from Kenya in Washington attending the annual conference of the IMF-World Bank representing our country as our country's finance minister. Now that was a national duty and therefore my not being there to make a statement (about tribal organisations) was not a matter which was unknown to any politicians, but naturally some people thrive on mischief so they are trying to spread some mischief." Kibaki stressed his total opposition to tribalism and tribal organisations asked Kenyans to ignore such gossip. "Kenyans know infinitely better," he said. "In fact, they know those who are truly committed from the very beginning to total nationalism." Kibaki advised Kenyan leaders to work and unite under President Daniel arap Moi. "Let us settle to work because we have all been given very important jobs," he added. "The president wants everybody to work hard in the job he has been given and not to waste any time gossiping about other people. Gossip cannot do anything. Politicians should be judged not by what they say but by what they do."

Throughout the press conference the vice-president avoided giving pressmen any inkling as to who he thought might be behind the gossip he had in mind. In the past six months however there have been reports that some leading politicians were not very happy with the vice-president. When the then attorney general, Mr. Charles Njonjo, retired from his powerful civil service job to enter active politics and was elected an MP, some observers thought this move was part of a strategy to challenge Kibaki in his Number Two position in the country. Neither man has, however, made any public statement against the other, and it was not clear where the gossip Kibaki was talking about may have emanated.

Kibaki, in some ways, finds himself facing the same kinds of pressures which his predecessor in the job, President Daniel arap Moi, faced when he was vice president under the late President Jomo Kenyatta. Close associates of Kenyatta were known to scrutinise everything Moi did or said for any signs of lack of total support by the vice-president for the president. Some Kalenjin leaders reportedly accused Moi of having "sold out" Kalenjin interests to the Kikuyu through his unswerving loyalty to Kenyatta. Kibaki is just beginning to feel the same kinds of enormous pressures under which Moi worked for twelve years. Close associates of Moi expect from the vice-president 101 per cent commitment to the president and may not be averse to spreading gossip where they think might embarrass Kibaki. Staunch Kikuyu leaders may already be accusing Kibaki of having "sold out" to the Kalenjin. His main consolation is that Moi put up with that kind of gossip for twelve years. Kibaki too should be able to do the same. ■

MINISTER URGES NATIONAL UNITY

Nairobi THE WEEKLY REVIEW in English 17 Oct 80 p 11

[Article by Eddah Gachukia: "A Unified Nation Is the Objective"]

[Text] In the last few weeks a great deal has been said on tribalism and the necessity to wind up all tribal organisations. The strong statements issued by leaders right across the country emphasise the need to end tribalism and create a unified nation.

In a country like Kenya with its many tribes, the creation of a unified nation, free from tribal self-interests, is perhaps the most important political objective after the attainment of uhuru. All leaders of tribal organisations should therefore move ahead and comply with the decision taken earlier this year at the leaders' conference at Kabete. As leaders we owe it to the wananchi to provide honest leadership, not to sit on the fence waiting to see what the other groups will do. As leaders, too, we must abide by our own decisions if we are to avoid confusing the very people we lead. The time to debate the winding up of the tribal organisations was at Kabete; not after, and if there was need for further discussion on any decisions reached at Kabete, this should have been brought up at Kabete and agreed upon at the conference. Otherwise after Kabete, what one expects from leaders is action on implementation of the decisions taken, not further debate outside the conference room.

However, with the winding up of tribal organisations now imminent, it is the right time for leaders to look ahead beyond the mere dissolution of tribal organisations. Because of the strength of the statements issued on this subject and the feelings aroused, there is a real danger that we will all come to regard the winding up of tribal organisations not as a means to an end but as an end in itself. Leaders must be careful not to lose sight of the real objective which must always remain the creation of a harmonious and truly unified nation--a nation where all citizens have equal opportunities according to their abilities and regardless of where they come from.

In a very real sense, the winding up of tribal organisations must be seen by leaders, not as the end of tribalism, but rather as the beginning of a long march towards this goal. The fact is: tribes existed long before tribal organisations came into being and tribes will continue to exist long after tribal organisations have ceased to exist. The essential question is, what are we as leaders going to do to make sure that a Kenyan interacts with his fellow citizen on the basis of what he is as a person, not on the basis of what tribe he is? The great challenge before us all as individuals is whether we can move fast enough, and move those around us, to a point where we can all begin to evaluate, rate, accept or reject our fellow Kenyans for what they are worth as individuals, not on the basis of whether they belong to this or that tribe.

If we are to move in this direction at the right speed we, as a nation, will need to reconsider a number of factors in our social life:

(a) Our school system: Nothing is more effective in breaking down tribal barriers and creating respect for the individual as a person than the act of spending years of schooling together. There was a time when students in all our secondary schools were drawn from all over the country. Then came a time when each province had its own secondary schools and, therefore, there was no need for students to leave their province to attend school in other provinces. From the point of view of breaking down tribal suspicions and creating mutual confidence between people of different tribes, this was a step backwards. In spite of the costs involved in boarding facilities, etc., we should seriously consider going back to the old system whereby children in any secondary school were drawn from many different tribes.

(b) Common African language: No nation has ever achieved unity without a common indigenous language. It is imperative if we are to create a common identity that we should have a common African language which must be the national language of Kenya. In Kenya we are lucky in having Swahili as a common African language accepted by all tribes. But again, there was a time when Swahili was given its rightful place in our school, both primary and secondary, and then came a point at which the emphasis was switched to English. For the sake of national unity we must reposition the teaching of Swahili where it belongs--at the centre--and give it all the support and encouragement which a national language deserves.

Finally, and most important, we should recognise the fact that tribal groupings are a self-protective device--intended to protect the interests of individual members and promote the welfare of the group. The government can do a lot to make this device unnecessary and redundant. The more the government shows its determination and ability to defend, protect, and promote the legitimate interests of individual citizens without distinction; the more the government institutions demonstrate that in dealing with the individual they are guided by the principle of fairplay and justice; the less the individual will feel the need to seek the doubtful protection of a tribal grouping. Our president, His Excellency Daniel T. arap Moi, has already laid a firm foundation for this through his declared philosophy of peace, love and unity. It remains for us all to join our president and build a united Kenya on these sound foundations.

GOVERNMENT PLANS TO REDUCE DEPENDENCE ON FOREIGN ENERGY

Nairobi THE WEEKLY REVIEW in English 17 Oct 80 pp 45-46

[Text]

BEFORE the aftermath of the 1973-74 energy crisis, which caught many countries, including Kenya, unprepared for astronomical prices of oil that followed, Kenya had not come to recognise the need for a comprehensive national energy development plan. The rising costs of oil and declining supply of the same have had annual cumulative adverse effects on Kenya's balance of trade and raised costs of production. In 1979, Kenya had to spend close to 35 per cent of its foreign exchange earnings from exports to finance the importation of the country's oil needs. This high dependence on imported petroleum-based fuels and the role energy plays in economic activities necessitates high priority being accorded to the comprehensive planning of the development of the energy sector.

The rural population and the urban poor face an equally severe problem due to their almost exclusive reliance on firewood and charcoal for cooking and heating. This dependency is now assuming alarming dimensions with far-reaching effects of soil erosion and deforestation. Arresting this problem will require afforestation strategies which call for the planting of fast growing trees that are suitable for firewood and that can even grow in marginal lands.

In the petroleum sector, the government policy is:

- to discourage wasteful and conspicuous consumption of petrol through the introduction of vigorous fiscal and pricing instruments that will make consumers of petrol feel that heavy consumption hurts in financial terms;
- to ensure continued supply so as to meet the needs of the economy. As the demand for oil may outstrip our ability to provide the requisite foreign exchange from local sources to purchase the oil, the situation may from time to time call for external borrowing of funds by the government to finance oil importation in sufficient quantities;
- to set up its own oil company which will be involved in direct importation of oil;
- to mount a conservation campaign on the radio, TV and daily newspapers on the need to conserve energy and in particular petroleum-based fuels. There are indications that through such campaigns we can save up to 10 per cent of the present annual oil consumption;
- to develop and implement a strategic oil storage policy so as to ensure adequate supply to the economy for a reasonable period during times of crisis;

• to develop a long term policy on oil pricing, distribution and marketing;
• to encourage exploration of oil by foreign multi-national oil companies by giving them appropriate incentives. The government will also play a major role in prospecting for oil by investing heavily in exploratory activities as well as by providing appropriate manpower training, locally and overseas; and
• to undertake feasibility studies on suitable technological options leading to appropriate measures for upgrading the EA oil refinery, so as to enhance the recovery of finished petroleum products

In the electricity sector, the government will continue to develop hydro and geothermal resources for electricity generation to the extent possible. This calls for stepping-up feasibility studies on mini, small, medium and large-scale possible hydro-electric sites throughout the country. In the geothermal area, exploration activities have been going on for a number of years now and these will be continued until the country's potential for geothermal power is fully realised.

Preliminary estimates indicate that the country's geothermal potential is 500 megawatts and hydro 750 megawatts. Already construction work for two geothermal electric power plants, each of 15 megawatts, is in progress and these are expected to be commissioned in 1982 and 1983 respectively. Over one third of the total estimated hydro potential has already been developed. Construction work for a multi-purpose dam with an estimated hydro-electric power out-put of 50 mw is under construction at Masinga. Feasibility studies on the Turkwell gorge and Kiambere hydro sites are expected to commence in due course.

Seen in the perspective of the growth of the electricity demand in the country, which is 8 per cent per annum, the combined, estimated geothermal and hydro potentials are expected to meet the country's requirements up to 1983. After this year, electricity will have to be generated from alternative sources such as oil, solar, wind, nuclear, etc. in order to meet the country's requirements.

In order to alleviate pressure on the demand for conventional sources, the ministry of energy will encourage, promote and undertake development of non-conventional sources of energy including:
• solar energy for electricity generation, water pumping and water heating;
• wind power for water pumping, grain grinding and electricity generation;
• power alcohol. The ministry will provide the necessary information and, if necessary, credit, in collaboration with other government agencies which are better equipped in the administration of credit schemes to support the growing of energy crops such as fuel wood, cassava, sugarcane, etc.;
• firewood. Energy plantations will be developed by the ministry specifically for production of fuel wood. As indicated above serious consideration will be given to provision of credit to farmers and others interested in growing wood strictly for firewood on a commercial basis;
• development of bio-gas and brickets from organic materials such as cowdung agricultural waste residual. To this end, the ministry will provide essential information on appropriate technologies in form of extensions service and documentation;
• development of efficient charcoal making devices (kilns), and efficient wood and charcoal stoves. Developmental work will be undertaken to ensure availability of these devices at prices that the rural and urban poor can afford.

The ministry of energy is planning to set up an energy development fund to provide credit facilities for development of appropriate energy technology hardware and energy commodities as indicated above. The fund will be used as a source of credit to entrepreneurs, farmers and others interested and willing to develop alternative sources of energy on commercial scale. ■

GOVERNMENT IS URGED TO ESTABLISH NATIONAL SHIPPING OPERATION

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 11 Oct 80 pp 11, 14

[Article by Capt O. P. Mehta: "Hints Given on Maritime Policy"]

[Text]

A WELL-FORMULATED national maritime policy, and Government legislation, cannot only encourage the acquisition of vessels for the development of the national fleet, but can ensure that the national flag vessels are profitably utilised.

The lending institutions for shipping finance for the developing countries increasingly demand political stability and the right maritime laws and policies before pouring funds. There is, therefore, a need to design, adopt and apply a shipping policy which would encourage investments in shipping and facilitate financing of these investments from overseas investors. In many instances, it is apparent that lack of finance for national fleet development could be attributed to the inability of a developing country to meet some of the essential preconditions, like lack of legislation to enable registration of a ship subject to mortgage.

The Government assistance in developing national shipping is by no means a new development as many countries have enacted favourable legislation to promote the shipping industry whether State or privately owned. Many nations allow freedom of action in shipping operations to safeguard investments and encourage external financing. It has been seen that strict controls on foreign exchange receipts normally hamper or delay shipping development in a country.

Kenya possesses a potential export market and geo-politically has a strategic value. Therefore there is reason to believe that any favourable legislation to promote national shipping will have a positive impact on national fleet development. The recent announcement by the Government regarding the formulation of a maritime policy to promote fishing, shipping and commercial activities, appears to be a right step towards this direction.

The financial constraints are the major factors in the development of a national fleet. In some countries, joint participation with a traditional shipowner has been of help to overcome the payments required in foreign exchange. In other cases, like India, the government has established "Shipping Development Funds" to advance loan even up to 95 per cent of the cost of a vessel at a concessional rate of interest of about 4½ per cent per annum.

In the past few years, numerous Indian shipowners have been able to take full advantage of this scheme. The Indian Government has even stood guarantees in the case of foreign bank loans negotiated by private shipowners. In addition to the above, there are various tax concessions in the form of a development rebate. Kenya tax laws also stipulate a 40 per cent investment deduction in capital expenditure in shipping. The UK Government at one time allowed a 20 per cent grant in the purchase of a new ship and a 100 per cent first year tax allowance. Besides, many countries have a generous depreciation allowance. Kenyan taxation laws permit 12 per cent per year depreciation allowance on ships.

Legislation can also favour that a certain portion of exports/imports be carried on national flag carriers. Although the Kenya Government allows free enterprise, it may be possible that certain goods and commodities directly connected with Government projects be carried on Kenya flag ships. In some cases, it may be possible to work out a favourable rate of exchange for importers/exporters using national carriers. In addition, import/export licences could be issued without delay to those using national ships.

In certain cases, a part of import duty could be refunded on goods brought by national flag vessels. The banks may be directed to endorse on the Letter of Credit that the goods are to be shipped by the national line. The government can also indulge in buying FOB and selling CF. This can be of great advantage where carriage of crude oil is concerned.

There are various means whereby the Government can assist in allocating priorities to national flag vessels in home ports. It could be in the form of berthing priority during congestion, allocating efficient berths to facilitate quick loading/discharging of cargo, thus encouraging faster turnround of ships. National ships may be exempted from pilotage expenses, harbour dues, navigational fees, and so on. The national flag vessels can also be exempted from the compulsory pilotage requirements in the home ports. This can result in saving time and cost. In addition, the disbursement for national flag vessels to be in the local currency as compared to foreign flags, which is in US dollars.

In this case, two countries can mutually agree to have bilateral trade agreements. The trade is normally split on a straight arrangement of 50/50 basis to be carried on board the vessels of the contracting nations. The percentage of export and import can be fixed as per the agreement. Bilateral trading arrangements are quite common. India has signed this agreement with Iran, Poland, USSR and UAR, and is also operating an "Indo-Iranian" Shipping Company. Similarly, Brazil, the USSR, Argentina and Cuba have 50/50 cargo-sharing contracts. There are various examples in which many developing countries of Asia and Latin America are in the process of developing their national fleet on the basis of this bilateral agreement. There is, therefore, no reason why Kenya cannot make such contracts and, thus, establish her national fleet of vessels.

A number of South American States have made legislations that up to 50 per cent of their bulk export cargoes are to be shipped by the national flag vessels. There is evidence that in the near future similar legislation may be emanating from the Middle East oil-exporting nations for the export of crude oil in their national carriers. Thus, these cargo reservation laws are rapidly becoming an accepted part of the maritime policies, even of many developed countries like Australia, New Zealand and so on.

The cargo reservation can act as the starting point for the establishment of a national fleet for Kenya. Cargo sharing is another practical way for Kenya to make some headway in promoting the shipping industry. The UK Merchant Shipping Act of 1974 enables the UK to take action against measures by other governments harming, or threatening to harm, British shipping or trading interests. Therefore, it may be necessary for the Kenya Government to introduce certain protective legislation for shipping.

It may be fair to comment that, to encourage the promotion of national shipping in Kenya, there is need to form a favourable maritime policy and enact legislation such as financing schemes, cargo allocations, operational subsidies, bilateral arrangements and cargo reservations. The tax incentives and freedom of action in shipping operations may encourage the Kenyan private enterprise to invest in shipping.Thus, any investment in this industry will in turn, prove beneficial for the economic health of Kenya.

OFFICIAL EQUATES STANDARDS WITH TECHNOLOGY TRANSFER

Nairobi THE WEEKLY REVIEW in English 17 Oct 80 p 57

[Article by N. K. Njugi: "Promoting Exchange"]

[Text] AS we celebrate the World Standard's Day, I would like to congratulate the International Organisation for Standardisation (ISO) for its efforts and commitment for the last three decades to promote the application of international standards. International standards facilitate the smooth exchange of goods and services and have become a strong weapon in the fight against technical barriers to trade.

For developing countries, the application of international standards in production and marketing has the added advantage of enabling them to determine a greater say in the fixing of prices and ensuring that their goods can compete effectively in terms of quality and price in the international export markets.

The transfer of technology from the developed to the developing countries is proving to be an unattainable goal in the time required because of the enormous costs involved. Standards have proved to be a cheap and easily available source of non-patented technology. In the world today, there are more than 50,000 standard-type documents representing man's achievements in science and technology. The only price to be paid is the cost of the documents and adaptation to suit each users needs.

At the local level, adherence to acceptable standards means better quality at a price the consumer can afford.

It means self-reliance because adoption of standards to suit our needs, requires innovation and better utilisation of our raw materials.

The Kenya Bureau of Standards is working in co-operation with industry, consumers and research organisations to ensure that the benefits of standardisation result in greater achievements in our efforts to industrialise. We, at the KBS are particularly interested in encouraging the local industries to formulate their own company standards on raw materials and products, to enable the formulation of national standards to become more meaningful. It is also important for the local industry to know that when Kenya standards are formulated with their assistance, it is legally binding for each manufacturer to comply, in order to ensure an acceptable quality to the consumer. The bureau is working hard to ensure that there are no defaulters and those who do will be prosecuted or have their manufacturing units closed.

ELECTRICITY MAY BE RATIONED

Nairobi THE WEEKLY REVIEW in English 17 Oct 80 pp 48-49

[Text]

Short rains necessary for adequate supply

IT all depends on whether the short rains will have set in by the end of this month. If not, the East African Power and Lighting Company (EAPL) will be hard pressed trying to maintain electricity supplies to consumers. But, warns EAPL chairman, Mr. Julius Gecau, the power company has no intention of rationing electricity. The reassurance was given to a gathering of leading business executives, civil servants and a few pressmen, but it nevertheless left little doubt that the EAPL would probably be forced to ration electricity supplies if the rains do not come on time. For now, Gecau appeared to be more concerned about "unnecessary" wastage which he said arose due to consumers switching on lights and other appliances they did not require. He did not think, for instance, that it was good business sense to keep neon advertising signs lit right through the small hours of the morning when they are unlikely to have any impact.

For about a fortnight, EAPL notices have been appearing in the press appealing to consumers to conserve electricity by switching off power to appliances they do not immediately need. The notices were apparently giving rise to speculation that EAPL was finding it hard to maintain supplies to consumers and might resort to rationing electricity, speculation which was bound to rekindle the unpleasant memories of the electricity shortages and the ensuing rationing of earlier this year. There was a possibility too, that major consumers especially industrial concerns, might react to the suspected on-coming power shortage by operating extra shifts which would possibly lead to strains in the power distribution network.

EAPL would apparently not be worried by this were not water levels falling at the intakes to the dams on the Seven-Forks scheme. The company is still convinced that in spite of the fall in water levels, generating capacity is still within the required target. At Kamburu, for instance, a recent record of the water intake corresponded to a generating capacity of 11 megawatts rather than the normal capacity of 14 mega watts expected at this time of the year. For the moment, says Gecau, that should not be alarming, but adds that if the same situation continues, there should be every reason to worry by the first week of November.

A shortfall in the generating capacity of the dams, could be adequately obviated by, Gecau feels, switching on the company's diesel-fired generating plants which are all operational with the exception of one undergoing a normal maintenance overhaul. The cost of running the diesel-operated plants, however, is likely to exceed the entire expense of operating all the hydro-electric complexes, power industry sources maintain. Imports from Uganda's Owen Falls Dam are unlikely to be significantly increased beyond the contractual 30 mega watts. Uganda is already supplying a little bit more than the contractual figure at a higher price than the original contract price, but is reportedly not in a position to supply more. Gecau maintains that even with the full supply from Uganda, which is usually needed during the dry spells, power from the Owen Falls complex accounts for only about 12.5 per cent of Kenya's total consumption.

A long-term problem facing EAPL's ability to generate power on the Tana River, presently the major source of hydro-electric power in the country, is the conflict between different interests all competing for the use of Tana River's water. ■

FOREIGN TRAWLERS ARE REPORTEDLY DEPLETING FISH SUPPLY

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 15 Oct 80 p 8

[Text] Foreign trawlers are poaching in Kenya's territorial waters, depleting fish stocks from breeding grounds.

Coast PC Luka Galgalo said yesterday foreign trawlers were fishing indiscriminately, taking advantage of inconsistent patrols in Kenya waters.

The PC, who was welcoming the Greek Ambassador to Kenya, Mr. Alexander Aten-Iuli, said Kenya would like help to develop her fishing industry and more patrol boats to curb poaching in her waters.

The ambassador had asked the PC to specify how the Greek Government could assist Kenya.

He had told the PC that his government was considering ways of aiding Kenya.

The PC told the ambassador that Kenya had so far not entered into commercial deep sea fishing on a large scale. Technical expertise and equipment were needed to develop the industry, he added.

He also said help to tap underground water in arid parts of Coast Province was needed to make the area productive through ranching and irrigation.

He told the envoy that Coast Province had a high potential for ranching but that water for the cattle was lacking.

Meanwhile, in South Nyanza District, fishing industry revenue dropped drastically due to lack of capital, outdated fishing methods, low productivity and the lack of a market.

According to the district annual report for 1979, the revenue collected from fishing totalled about 65,000/- with the Kendu Bay and Lwanda/Gembe fishing centres leading. Both realised a total catch of 85,000 kilogrammes assorted fish.

Bad weather conditions with long periods of drought and occasional rough winds also had adverse effects on fishing, said the report.

Fishermen have been assured that the Government is carrying out feasibility studies with a view to rehabilitating and improving the industry. The establishment of the Lake Basin Development Authority will also help improve the industry.

In the report, it was suggested the only way to improve the welfare of the fishermen and their societies was to let co-operative societies purchase fish direct from fishermen and then dispose of it to fishmongers and other middle men. It says this would make tax collection easier.

On the fishermen's loan scheme the report noted that no loan was issued because of several loopholes which made recovery of the previous years loans very tedious.--KNA

FOOD CROPS MUST BE GIVEN PRIORITY

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 17 Oct 80 p 6

[Editorial: "Food Crops Must Be Given Priority"]

[Text] It seems strange that at a time when the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organisation is sounding a "Global alert" on a possible famine facing nearly 200 million people in Africa and South-East Asia, some of our people are arguing that we need to increase the acreage under cash crops, which, in turn, will lead to fewer acres under food crops. While it is commendable that the Kenya Tea Board chairman, Mr. Mahihu, feels tea is an important cash crop for the country's economy, we hope projected plans to revise tea zones to enable farmers to grow tea at lower altitudes will be turned down unconditionally.

The country needs to grow more food to feed itself, much more so than it needs to earn foreign exchange which, given today's worsening terms of trade, is buying fewer imported goods every year. High as tea prices may be at present, it must be borne in mind that they will not last. And, given the nature of the plant, it cannot be grown quickly enough to capitalise on the periodic glut-shortage cycle. Attempts to expand production when there is a shortage in the world market, and therefore high prices, leads short-sighted countries into the trap of depressing the market even further. Experience in the coffee industry amply demonstrates this.

Spurred on by changing tastes, which now favour tea instead of coffee, tea producers in Africa expect to increase production by about 34 per cent from the 1977 figure of 194,000 to 260,000 tonnes by 1986. Kenya alone expects to produce 120,000 tonnes by that date. If the increase results from more efficient production methods, it can be defended. But it is indefensible because it will stem from an increase in the land under tea cultivation, mainly among smallholders. Yet it is this group of people which is first hit by any food shortage for it has little money to buy and store surplus foods and relies heavily on the Government's storage facilities.

The future awaiting tea growers who heard stories of fortunes to be made by covering all their land with this one cash crop is already a nightmare from which some single-crop farmers are struggling to awaken. Although coffee farmers are already caught in this trap, the latest victims are in sugar-growing areas. Planting sugar-cane on every available piece of land has turned these areas--which were at one time net "exporters" of maize and other foods--into "importers" who depend on other areas to feed them. This has adversely affected the whole country's ability to feed itself, as was demonstrated this year when a minor drought led to serious food shortages.

What is more worrying is that no lesson seems to have been learned. It will come as no surprise, therefore, if farmers are encouraged to take advantage of the predicted global sugar shortage which is expected to provide spectacular windfall gains for some sugar exporters. The expected sugar hikes will price the commodity out of the reach of some of the world's poorer importing countries and some consumers in these and even rich countries which will then reduce the consumption of tea and coffee. We hope this lesson will be learned before farmers are advised to sacrifice food crops at the alter of elusive foreign exchange earners.

The simple truth, and it must be faced, is that even if the prices of these commodities were to continue to rise, with a consequent rise in foreign exchange earnings, there will be no food to buy from the world markets. This is due to several factors. First, there was a devastating drought recently in the United States, which provides most of the grains traded on the international market. This will mean that America will also have little grain to give to the poor, starving millions in Africa and elsewhere. Second, the Soviet Union also expects another bad harvest which will lead to its cornering the grains market at the expense of the poor countries. The continuing regional wars in the Gulf region, the Horn of Africa, South-East Asia--the list is endless--also compound regional droughts in such areas as the Sahel.

It is our considered opinion that, important as the expansion of our exports--mainly agricultural--is, it must result from more efficient usage of the land under cultivation. This will ensure that we export more while we regain our ability to feed ourselves.

INADEQUATE TRANSPORT CAUSES CEMENT BACKLOG

Nairobi THE WEEKLY REVIEW in English 17 Oct 80 p 47

[Excerpt]

TOO much cement lying around is no good for anybody's health, including that of the Bamburi Portland Cement Company. The Bamburi company was until Wednesday afternoon apparently in danger of getting choked by its own stockpile of cement. The managing director of Bamburi Portland Cement, Mr. I.L. Roberts, had on Monday said that the Bamburi cement factory may soon close if cement stocks, on that day amounting to more than 100 000 tons, continued to pile up uncollected. Roberts had on that occasion, as on several other occasions in the past, laid the blame on Kenya Railways which he said was not sending enough wagons to [words illegible]

According to Roberts, the factory was making more cement than they could sell, and that storage space at the factory and at the English Point loading facility and the Mbaraki packing plant was becoming critically congested such that the factory would have to close down for sheer lack of space to store additional output.

The factory may probably not close down following an agreement reached between Bamburi Portland Cement Company and Kenya Railways on Wednesday afternoon, after a day-long meeting presided over by the permanent secretary in the ministry of commerce, Mr J G Shamala. The outcome of the meeting, attended by, among others, Roberts of Bamburi Cement, Mr. Solomon Karanja, managing director of East African Portland Cement Company, and Mr. B? Waweru, chief traffic manager of Kenya Railways, was a promise by Kenya Railways to provide 60 wagons per day starting from Thursday 16 October 1980, to Bamburi Cement for the purpose of hauling the cement to Nairobi and other parts of the country.

Agreement had been expected to be reached in the morning and a press conference had been scheduled to take place in Mr. Eliud Mwamunga, the minister of commerce's office, at 11.30 in the morning, but apparently the parties seemed to have had a hard time reaching agreement. It took more than an hour for the parties who had resumed their talks at 2 p.m., to iron out their differences. Making the announcement of the agreement soon after the meeting, Shamala went to considerable length to avoid laying blame on any of the parties. Instead, he exonerated Kenya Railways by saying that their reported failure to send enough wagons to Bamburi was a result of heavy demands made on the railways in the transportation of imported foodstuffs and fertilisers. Waweru's explanation did not differ from that of Shamala.

Kenya Railways is reported to have been sending 40 wagons daily to collect cement from Bamburi. At this rate, not more than 20.000 tons of cement could be transported per month. Consequently, a backlog of about 12.000 tons has been piling up every month at Bamburi which produces 32,000 tons of cement out of Kenya's monthly consumption of 62,000 tons. The remaining 30,000 tons is supplied by the East African Portland Cement Company based at Athi River. According to Karanja of the Athi River-based company East African Portland has not suffered from the problems which beset Bamburi mainly due to its closeness to Nairobi, enabling consumers to collect cement directly from the company's premises.

With a new allocation of 60 wagons per day, both Kenya Railways and Bamburi Portland Cement Company expect to see the dispatches from Bamburi rise to 36,000 tons per month until the backlog is cleared. After that, the traffic should revert to Bamburi's normal sales level of 32,000 tons.

Shamala estimated that within a week, the increased railings of cement from Bamburi should ensure, in the absence of hoarding and smuggling, that all parts of the country will be having their fair share of cement.

BRIEFS

TEA EARNINGS--Kenya expects to export about Sh. 180 million worth of tea this year. The forecast was made by the chairman of the Kenya Tea Board, Mr. Eliud Mahihu, in Mombasa after attending a tea auction yesterday. The auction, conducted every Monday, was attended by buyers from various parts of the country. The highest bid was at 20/20 per kilo for the best tea produced by Mungania Tea Factory, Embu. Mr. Mahihu, however, said Kenyan tea farmers were currently operating at a loss because the tea consumed in the country was greatly subsidised by farmers. "We would like the farmers to operate at a higher level of profit margin to make them bring more land under tea cultivation. "This will be important, especially when one takes into account the role played by tea in the country's economy," Mr. Mahihu added, noting that his board was presently engaged in studying the industry with a view to making recommendations to the Ministry of Agriculture. Mr. Mahihu also called for the revision of the present tea zone so farmers could grow the plant at lower altitudes. He said the revision would bring several thousand acres of land under tea cultivation. Mr. Mahihu estimated that more than one million people were engaged in the tea industry. This, he noted, posed a great challenge to the board in improving the lot of those engaged in the industry. Responding to a question, Mr. Mahihu stressed the need by Kenyan tea growers to improve the quality of their tea which, he said, has earned high reputation in international tea markets. "We must constantly keep watch on the quality of our tea to be able to maintain our traditional market in the Western world and also to capture new markets in Africa and the Middle East," Mr. Mahihu said. [Text] [Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 15 Oct 80 p 9]

TEA INDUSTRY UNION--A new trade union to cater for the tea industry has been formed at Kericho. It is called the Kenya Tea Plantation Workers' Union. Acting secretary-general Mark Amos Ochieng told the NATION in Kisumu that the union had already enrolled 5,000 members in Kericho and Nandi districts. The union is a breakway group of the Kenya Agricultural Plantation Workers' Union, Mr. Ochieng said; it has already been registered by the Registrar of Societies. Mr. Ochieng said the agricultural union had failed to cope with the expanded population in the tea industry, which had doubled since independence. Claiming that the split was warranted, he said the new body was an automatic affiliate of Cotu and had pledged its support to the Government and complete loyalty to President Moi. VISIT OF IRAQI ECONOMIC MISSION REPORTED

[Text] An Iraqi economic delegation led by Mr Rafik Jamil Abid, advisor to the Iraqi minister of commerce, has been in our country since Saturday. The delegation's mission is to strengthen the economic cooperation ties which unite the two countries and, consequently, try to find with the appropriate Malagasy officials the means to improve further the cooperation between RDM [Democratic Republic of Malagasy] and Iraq within the framework of the socioeconomic agreement signed in Baghdad 2 years ago.

Upon his arrival at Ivato, the head of the delegation announced that this visit should have been made beforehand, but the situation prevailing in the Gulf had prevented it. But, better late than never, the Iraqi delegation will hold working sessions with Malagasy officials to define as much as possible the problems of trade exchanges and look at other possibilities for improving Malagasy-Iraqi cooperation.

By the way, we must recall that President Didier Ratsiraka had already met with his Iraqi counterpart in Baghdad and that after that official visit an economic agreement was concluded in the Iraqi capital.

Even though Iraqi-Malagasy cooperation is quite recent, it nevertheless represents advantages which will reinforce and activate the fraternal bonds that unite the two countries, all the more so because the likeness of views between Antananarivo and Baghdad seems effective since they both belong to the large Nonaligned and Progressive family.

The Iraqi mission will also take a close look with Malagasy commerce officials at Malagasy products which can be imported in Iraq and vice-versa, with the aim of activating our economic relations. On this occasion, posssible problems of the commercial and economic exchanges will also be examined in order to find adequate solutions.

UNDP ECONOMIC AID AGREEMENT SIGNED

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 7 Oct 80 pp 1, 2

[Text] Last week's national economic event took place in the capital of Boina. It was in fact at Mahajanga where the RDM [Democratic Republic of Madagascar] and the UNDP signed agreements concerning feasibility studies of the Haut-Mangoro forestry industrial complex, the development of maritime fishing and, finally, an operation financed by resources from FAO's Technical Cooperation Program concerning an educational program in the field of production of select seeds for the following main crops: rice, peanuts and corn.

Planning the most reasonable technical, financial and economic utilisation of the industrial planting at Mangoro (started in 1968 and planned to encompass 110,000 hectares, of which 66,000 hectares have already been planted at this date), the Malagasy Government has requested the UNDP to finance the feasibility study of a project for the industrial forestry development of said forestry resources. The industry to be developed shall insure the continuity of on-going forest planting operations, guarantee a maximum of jobs in the rural area for workers of current projects and create several thousand new jobs. The complex will be oriented toward meeting local demand for manufactured products, but above all to the production of export products. This will permit Madagascar to achieve significant gains in foreign currency.

The objective of this project is to carry out a complete feasibility study according to recommendations prepared following government discussions with representatives of the UNDP, the World Bank and FAO.

Definitive Decision

These studies will be undertaken by a firm of consultant engineers experienced in the field which will be called upon to use local capabilities and subcontract certain jobs to national companies and businesses. In addition, national specialists and engineers will be named to participate in the study with the consulting firm in the field as well as at the central office. The results of this research will be the basis for a definitive decision on the part of the Malagasy Government and potential financing sources for the creation of the proposed industrial complex as to the type of development of the chosen industry.

The study will last 16 months (1980-82). The UNDP will contribute $900,000 (187 million Malagasy francs), and the Malagasy Government 10 million Malagasy francs. The FAO will be in charge of the operation, while the MDRRA [Ministry of Rural Development and Agrarian Reform] will be the government's cooperating organization.

By the President's Request

As for the feasibility study of the development of maritime fishing industries, it is one of six projects for which President Ratsiraka has requested, financing to Mr Doo Kingue, UNDP Assistant Administrator and Regional Director for Africa. This study will update and synthesize all the existing papers in the field, as well as reactualize them with the aim, on the one hand, of elaborating a guiding plan that defines a coherent development program for craft and industrial maritime fishing, and on the other hand, of emphasizing the proposal of concrete actions for the revitalization of industrial tuna fishing. This study will cover technical, social and economic aspects of the development of maritime fishing industries. Three high-level consultants from FAO are now ready to take part in this study, starting in November.

The UNDP contribution which amounts to $150,000 will consist mainly of providing export services and education scholarships. The project is expected to get underway during the month of October 1980.

Select Seeds

The other project is an operation financed by resources from FAO's Cooperation Program. This document has already been signed by the FAO director general. It is an action preliminary to another important project which will try to implement a program of personnel education in the field of production of select seeds in the following main crops; rice, peanuts and corn.

This preliminary action will have to do with the education of national personnel, which will be called upon to participate in the broad implementation program to be partly financed by the UNDP and for which FAO sent last month one of its most experienced officials in the matter.

These are the three agreements signed last Friday at Mahajanga by Minister Simon Pierre and UNDP interim resident representative, Mr Boulares, before many members of the revolutionary government including CSR [Supreme Revolutionary Council] Jean de Dieu Randriantanany, the president of the Supreme Constitutional Court, Mr Tilahy Robert and the Presicomex of Faritany, [chairman of the executive committee] Mr Rajaofera. These are the fruits of an international cooperation which results from the opening up of Malagasy diplomacy in all directions.

PRIME MINISTER'S SPEECH TO UN ASSEMBLY REPORTED

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 14 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

PRIME MINISTER, Prince Mabandla has restated in the United Nations General Assembly Swaziland's unswerving commitment to the principle of non-racial democracy, non-alignment and complete respect for human dignity.

Prince Mabandla said it was in this context that Swaziland felt deeply concerned about the deplorable persistance of inhuman practices of racial injustice in southern Africa which he stated were still based purely upon the grounds of colour.

Swaziland, he said, regarded it to be a great pity that the people of Namibia were still being denied their birthright to self-determination, independence and full national sovereignty by frivolous wrangles that derive mainly from considerations of sheer political expediency.

He said this country regarded the present stalemate as an act of gross inhumanity and outright callousness to the Namibian people.

"We therefore appeal most earnestly to the parties concerned to put the interest and welfare of the Namibian people above any other consideration and to facilitate the implementation of security council resolution 435," said the Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister also reiterated Swaziland's support for the people of the Western Sahara.

Swaziland, he said, believed that the forceful annexation of the Western Saharan land against their will constituted a flagrant violation of the noble principles enshrined in the United Nations Charter.

Prince Mabandla also told the General Assembly that Swaziland deeply abhors any act of violent seizure of diplomatic personnel under any circumstances whatsoever.

"For we believe that adequate provisions exist under the Vienna Convention for dealing with diplomats who are guilty of abusing their diplomatic privileges."

On the present economic situation, he made it clear that the worsening crisis through which international relations and the world economy were currently passing, presented considerable dangers for the world community.

"My delegation believes that the yawning economic gap which separates rich and poor countries has not been sufficiently recognised as the major factor in the present crisis," he said.

He also expressed concern at the present unemployment situation in the developing countries which he said was fast approaching crisis proportions with threatening consequences to the socio-political stability stability of these young countries.

The Prime Minister also expressed concern at the widening gap between the price of commodity exports from developing countries and stated that the cost of imported manufactured goods has been the main factor in the worsening balance of trade deficits being experienced today by a growing number of Third World countries.

He also stated that the international community as a whole, regardless of domestic political and economic systems, should fully contribute to the global efforts of restructuring the existing world economic order.

He felt what was needed now was not an analysis of the past misdeeds of colonialism and other forms of exploitation but a forward looking programme of concerted action to avert the real dangers of a large scale famine engulfing growing numbers of the people of the Third World countries.

Referring to the third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, he said if one was compelled to identity one of the most important features of the future convention for Swaziland it would be the articles relating to the right of access to and from sea and freedom of transit for landlocked states.

Prince Mabandla returned home on Friday.

FINANCIAL FIGURES ON ASSETS, DEPOSITS GIVEN

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 16 Oct 80 pp 5, 9

[Text] Swaziland's net foreign assets increased by E3.9 million to E129.2 million during the month which is E18.2 million higher than last year.

The increase is largely due to the seasonal increase in export receipts, mainly from sugar--being sufficient to more than offset the payments for imports, together with some funds from the EEC.

Government deposits with banks decreased by E3.2 million during August, to a level E21.8 million higher than a year ago. Bank lending to the private sector decreased by E4.2 million. Although there was a marginal rise in agricultural lending towards forestry, repayment by the sugar industry is expected to reduce total lending to this sector because of the seasonal increase in export earnings.

Banks' cash and deposits with the Central Bank of Swaziland increased by E14 million due to the net inflow of funds into Swaziland. Banks borrowing from the Central Bank decreased from E4.5 million at the end of July to E3 million at the end of August.

Money supply increased significantly by E4.3 million during the month under review, a 21.8 percent rise in 12 months ending August 1980. This percentage increase in money supply is bound to increase inflationary pressures.

During August, Time Deposits decreased by E2.7 million, reaching E62.3 million. Savings deposits increased marginally during the month, at E20.3 million they are E3.1 million higher than a year ago.

During August, bank loans and advances fell by E4.2 million whereas deposits rose by E3.5 million and these movements in part were reflected in a E14.1 million increase in liquidity.

Having mentioned above that export receipts are higher at this time of the year, it is not surprising that liquidity should rise in August. However, we can expect liquidity to fall in September due to a rise in loans and advances which we expect to be greater than the rise in deposits and will result in a squeeze on liquidity.

Given that 1980 has been so far a good year, we can expect further demands for loans and advances to further reduce liquidity in the coming months.

DETAILS OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS, EMPLOYMENT ACTS REVIEWED

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 17 Oct 80 p 1

[Article by Pat Nxumalo]

[Text] THE INDUSTRIAL Relations Act and the Employment Act both signed by King Sobhuza II at the end of last month have been fully described in the latest government gazette.

The two Acts, said to be the most important pieces of labour legislations since independence, were passed by Parliament earlier this year and will come into force on dates to be appointed by the Deputy Prime Minister, Senator Ben Nsibandze in his capacity as Minister for Labour.

Among the highlights of the Industrial Act is the establishment of the Industrial Court, the first in the Kingdom, the Employee, Staff and Employer Organisations, Federations and International Organisations; the Negotiating Machinery; Works Councils, Collective Agreements; Disputes Procesures; Freedom of Association and the Right to Organise.

The Industrial Court will have a President who will be a judge of the High Court and will be appointed in the same manner as a judge of the High Court. He will in turn appoint two members who will be known as nominated members.

One nominated member will be chosen by the President in consultation with the Labour Commissioner from a panel of six names nominated by the Federation of Swaziland Employers and one from a panel of six names nominated by industry unions or staff association.

On the establishment of works councils, the Act makes it clear that in every undertaking employing 25 or more people, excluding casual employees, a works council will be established by the employer within six months of the Act coming into force.

It is declared in the Act that every employee or employer may take part in the formation of an organisation or federation, in the case of employees, and association or federation in the case of employers.

Both employers and employees may become members of any such organisation or federation and to take part in their lawful activities.

No employer will be allowed to discriminate against an employee because of his exercise or anticipated exercise of any right conferred by this Act, or because of his participation in any capacity in a proceeding under the Act.

If an employee who has been lawfully on strike, or who has been locked out by his employer, presents himself for work not more than one day after the end of the strike or lockout, the employer will reinstate that employee in the same post he held immediately before the strike.

It will be lawful for an employee or employers to refuse to do any work normally done by an employee or employees who are lawfully on strike, provided that such refusal will not endanger the safety of persons or property.

Every employer will allow reasonable time for internal consultation with members of the organisation, provided that permission to be excused from normal duties has been obtained.

No organisation or federation or anyone acting on its behalf will engage in any activity or publicly advocate any course of action designed to bring about the overthrow of the government or violent resistance to it or designed to bring about acts of violence.

All peaceful picketing by persons involved directly in the dispute giving rise to the picketing will be lawful except if it is intended to lead to or support an unlawful strike.

The Trade Unions and Employers Organisations Act of 1966 and the Industrial Conciliation and Settlement Act of 1963 have been repealed.

KAUNDA LAUNCHES 'HUMANISM WEEK,' BACKS SELF-RELIANCE PROJECTS

Joint Effort Required

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 18 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

PRESIDENT Kaunda has called on Party leaders at all levels to stimulate and mobilise the masses into self-reliance projects.

"The function of leaders is to remove obstacles from the way of people seeking to work for their life. The function of leaders is not to raise obstacles and create problems like people seeking to work for themselves and society," he said.

In a statement of encouragement on Humanism Week which starts today released in Lusaka yesterday, Dr Kaunda said Party leaders and those holding positions of service to the people must translate the Party's policies correctly to help every citizen improve his living conditions.

The Party, he said, had an obligation to encourage and guide the people in urban and rural areas to revolunalise their modes of production and styles of living.

"The lima programme is one such effort aimed at stimulating and accelerating production on the land and to make agriculture the major base of our efforts," Dr Kaunda said.

To achieve that goal, he noted, farmers needed to work hard and their efforts supplemented by an "equally stable, efficient and hard-working population" that would process the products for local consumption.

The joint effort of the people would reduce their dependence on imports and release substantial amounts of foreign exchange for further investments in many fields of work.

"Our people will, by their own efforts, improve their situation because new investments will reduce unemployment and idleness which leads to lawlessness and decay of society," the President said.

Dr Kaunda said although Zambians had built a material base of their life, they had much more to do to improve their lives within the socialist policies and programmes they had laid out for themselves.

Meanwhile, Zana reports that Prime Minister Mr Daniel Lisulo and Mrs Betty Kaunda yesterday called on Malawian President Dr Kamuzu Banda at Sanjika palace.

Welcoming the visitors, Dr Banda said African boundaries were artificial and that he did not recognise them because they were not created by God or by Africans.

The people of Malawi and their neighbours were one despite the colonial-inherited boundaries that separate them politically, he said.

Ward Work Programs

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 18 Oct 80 p 2

[Text]

LUSAKA Urban governor, Mr Bill Chanda, has released a programme of work to be done by wards in Lusaka during Humanism Week which starts today.

Each of the wards is to be assisted by companies in the capital, the governor said.

He appealed to companies and workers with queries to contact him.

And ZANA reports that more than sixty workers from the Cooperative College and others from the Ministry of Agriculture and Water Development and the department of marketing and cooperatives in Lusaka spent most of yesterday morning working on projects ear-marked for Humanism Week which officially starts today.

The workers who included the cooperative college deputy principal Mr Folke Albinson and the teaching staff were assigned in groups to work on clearing the football ground, play-ground in the college residential area while others worked on the construction of the bus shelter near Bauleni township.

Chief projects coordinator Mr Zacharia Chitundu expressed satisfaction at the enthusiasm shown by the college and the ministry workers.

The college decided to start working on the projects yesterday instead of today to ensure a full turn-out of workers most of whom would not have managed to turn-up because of transport and other personal commitments.

On projects that might not be completed by October 23, Mr Chitundu said the college staff and other workers would be mobilised to continue working on any unfinished projects on a weekly basis to ensure their completion.

Eight projects will be undertaken during this year's Humanism Week in Kafue, a spokesman in the office of the governor said yesterday.

Self-help

The spokesman said four of the projects would involve the completion of classrooms at four primary schools which were all constructed on self-help basis.

He said workers from Kafue Textiles of Zambia will work at Shikoswe and Nakatete primary schools while Kafue Estate Limited employees would work at Muchoto school and Kafue council employees would be at Chikupi school, more than 30 km west of Lusaka.

The Humanism Week committee has allocated the construction of a bus shelter at the Kafue roundabout to Nitrogen Chemicals of Zambia.

Meanwhile, Kitwe will embark on improving roads to production units and build a bus shelter during the Week, governor Mr Joseph Musonda said yesterday.

He said companies which had been requested to carry out the projects were responding well.

Mr Musonda said he regarded the projects as important.

All Humanism Week activities in Mufulira will begin on Monday because of the rally which will be addressed by Copperbelt member of the Central Committee Mr Shadreck Soko today.

Governor Mr Addon Chilembo appealed to the people to support the Week.

Mr Chilembo said the Week was supposed to start today but it was not possible because of the importance attached to the rally.

He urged residents to attend the meeting.

POLITICAL 'NITPICKING' THREATENS NATIONAL UNITY

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 22 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

WHERE is the nation heading to? A dangerous disease is sapping at the core of the nation. It is the political nitpicking of small worms which turn into ugly maggots.

That malady is particularly rife now in the leadership of the nation's trade unions. The name of the game is to be very vocal in criticising and render worthless legitimate Party policies.

The current vengeful and acrimonious outbursts from the labour movement over decentralisation are ugly symptoms of that disease. Yet decentralisation, as a party policy, was accepted as far back as 1972.

The disease is made chronic by the apparent lack of immediate rebuttals from the Party's top leadership. It has sinned by silence when it should have spoken out or defended its policies vehemently. There lies its weakness.

Hence the go-slows, the numerous ultimatums, the wildcat strikes, the warnings of a nation-wide strike, and now the violations of individual rights by a union in barring its members from seeking political office in ward elections.

All the while only the Press has been left to do all the fighting in defending the Party. The big guns have conspicuously been very silent.

Even the toy-pistoled Press is denied the right ammunition and is instead threatened with destruction through the fulminations of the likes of Mr Joshua Mumpanshya.

How then can it carry out its rightful function as the nation's first line of defence as suggested by Mr Edward Lubinda in his speech in Lusaka yesterday? It is a thankless job.

In keeping with Zambia's noble participatory democracy, the Press should actually be treated as a conveyor belt for public information and criticism and not as an apologia.

It is one of Zambia's recurring tragedies that when irresponsible statements are made, say, by petty trade unionists, or by misguided politicians, no one with real authority, from the Party and its Government, stands up to refute them at once.

When left unchallenged such statements appear correct. The nation needs the re-assurances on such matters from the powerful voices of the Party Secretary-General and the Prime Minister.

It should not always be left to the Luminas, the Kamalondos, the Litanas or indeed the defenceless Press to fight all the battles. Neither should everything be left to the good old KK.

The Party and its Government has a duty to protect the interests of the majority and not succumb, through silence, to some irresponsible and illegal behaviour of a tiny vocal minority.

REPORTAGE ON PARTY ELECTIONS

Mufulira Candidates

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 18 Oct 80 p 2

[Text]

IN Mufulira 164 candidates were returned unopposed during nominations for the forthcoming ward elections.

Governor Addon Chilembo said only 30 posts would be contested while six others were vacant because prospective contesters filed their nominations late.

Mr Chilembo urged people to turn up in large numbers on Tuesday to "elect candidates of their own choice".

Referring to a complaint by one of the vetoed candidate Mr Wilbroad Musonda, Mr Chilembo, who is chairman of the Mufulira district political committee, said the committee's decision was based on Party regulations.

He said the committee had nothing against Mr Musonda as he was a Party member.

The governor advised him to cooperate with Party officials and work hard in future.

He said Mr Musonda should have approached him so that the facts could have been given to him instead of rushing to the Press.

Meanwhile, candidates aspiring for the post of ward chairman in the forth coming Party elections are free to stand in any ward not necessarily where they reside, Livingstone regional secretary, Mr Mpepo Chisanga said.

'But from the post of vice-chairman candidates are required to be from the ward they live,' Mr Chisanga said.

This came to light after it was learnt that some people living in the Livingstone Urban area were contesting for chairmanship in rural areas, while others within the town were contesting in wards other than where they lived. — Times Reporter/Zana.

MUZ, NUPTW Oppose Decentralization

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 21 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

THE Mineworkers Union of Zambia has ordered officials who have stood for ward elections in the proposed decentralisation system of local government to withdraw today.

This was announced in Kitwe yesterday by MUZ deputy general secretary Mr Anderson Chungu.

The elections will take place today.

"We have discovered that there are some MUZ branch and headquarters officials who have lodged their nominations for elections in the decentralised system of local government. We order them to withdraw now or resign from the MUZ leadership," he said.

Since the union was against the system, it was unwise for its leaders to participate in what they opposed.

"Those who don't withdraw or can't resign will be sacked. They cannot have it both ways," Mr Chungu said.

He said MUZ fully supported the Zambia Congress of Trade Union's stand on the new system.

In Lusaka, Chairman of the Elections and Publicity Committee of the Central Committee, Mr Bob Litana, described the union's move as "unfortunate".

He said he was surprised that MUZ should "turn around and condemn a system which they helped to build".

This was because the union was composed of Party members who were also members of the National Council and who participated in the discussions which led to the formulation of the proposed system.

"It therefore surprises me in that they (MUZ) should turn round and condemn the system which they helped to build," he said.

Mr Litana added that the union was victimising its members who had filed in their nominations by forcing them to withdraw from the race.

Since he did not know the motive behind the union's statement, he could not comment further, and referred further inquiries to the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Joshua Lumina who declined to comment saying:

"I have not heard anything about this."

At the bi-annual conference in Livingstone, MUZ delegates warned against introducing the system saying that it would bring chaos.

Recently, the ZCTU submitted a petition to the Party Secretary-General, Mr Mainza Chona, to shelve the new local government decentralisation.

The supreme council of the National Union of Postal and Telecommunications Workers (NUPTW) has also rejected this.

Meanwhile, secretary for the publicity and elections committee Mr George Phiri said branch officials elected last month would form the electoral college for today's elections.

Voters will elect a ward chairman and seven committee members. Eight women and eight youth ward committee members will vote.

Mr Phiri appealed to non-branch officials not to turn up at polling stations because they would not be allowed to vote.

Polling stations open at 08.00 hours and close at 16.00 hours. The elections would be held throughout the country except in a few areas, Mr Phiri said.

He reminded voters to carry Party membership and national registration cards.

Director of elections Mr Tobias Mbewe said nominations in Chadiza district and Kabulonga Ward Three in Lusaka had been nulified.

Mr Mbewe said nominations in Chadiza had been nulified because many people misunderstood the vetoeing of candidates and those in Kabulonga were irregularly conducted.

Mr Mbewe who is in the Eastern Province to check on the progress on the elections said in Chipata that the electoral commission would set new dates for fresh elections in the two areas.

● All is set for the 16th independence day celebrations which officially start on Thursday with President Kaunda addressing the nation on both radio and television.

On the same day the President would open the inter-city bus terminal.

According to the programme, Dr Kaunda will on Friday lay a wreath at the Freedom Statue, along Independence Avenue followed by an investiture ceremony at State House.

The army band will perform a retreat at Independence Stadium in the evening.

Other highlights of the celebrations will be the official opening of the independence arts festival by the Prime Minister Mr Daniel Lisulo on Thursday at Kulima Tower.

Treated

Residents in Mandevu, Kaunda Square, Mutendere, Kanyama, Chawama and other townships will be treated to film shows by Zambia Information Services on the independence eve.

In Ndola there will be a rededication service on Friday at the Independence Monument, a march past and an address by Copperbelt member of the Central Committee, Mr Shadreck Soko.

And in Kasama, member of the Central Committee Mr Alex Shapi, will take the salute before the march past.

Eastern Province will have independence day speeches, cultural dances and gymnastics, while North-Western, Western, Southern and Central provinces will have similar activities with film shows.

Trouble at Lusaka Stations

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 22 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

TROUBLE nearly flared up at some polling stations in Lusaka yesterday during the Party ward elections when some Youth and Women's League branch officials were turned away as they tried to cast their votes.

But tempers were cooled when Lusaka Urban district secretary Mr Sitali Chababa intervened.

Earlier, returning officers had turned away the officials as they tried to vote.

The Party militants almost manhandled the officials. They later marched to Mr Chababa's office to protest against the officials' action and demanded to know why they were not allowed to vote.

Mr Chababa said the branch officials rushed to the polling stations at Kamwala, Muchinga and Munkolo wards 25, 14 and 21 respectively after listening to a radio announcement that Party branch officials should cast their votes.

But after Mr Chababa explained the situation, the Party militants were satisfied and returned to their respective areas.

Apart from this incident, Mr Chababa said, voting in most parts of Lusaka was conducted in a peaceful and orderly manner.

Most of the results were in by late last night with no major shocks in the capital, but in Livingstone, mayor, Mr Muchimba Sichala was among candidates defeated in the elections.

Polled

Mr Sichala polled five votes against his rival, Mr Richard Sekeleti Likando's 22 votes for the post of secretary in Freedom ward.

Another councillor, Mr Log Chindambwi, lost in the Libuyu ward, where he polled only one vote as against 17 votes polled by Mr David Mwauluka for the post of chairman.

Meanwhile, Minister of State for Legal Affairs and Solicitor-General, Mr Gibson Chigaga, has appealed for a quick solution to the problem regarding the Mineworkers Union of Zambia's views over the elections.

Mr Chigaga said one would like to see a matter of this nature solved as soon as possible to stop it from worsening.

It appeared that there was a serious political implication in the situation because he could not see how the union, which was part of the Party, could criticise a system it helped in formulating, the minister said.

On what legality the union based its action regarding a warning to its officials who had filed their nominations to withdraw or resign from MUZ, Mr Chigaga said this was a matter which purely depended on the union's constitution.

In Kitwe, MUZ deputy general secretary, Mr Anderson Chungu said his union would have nothing to do with Labour and Social Services Minister, Mr Joshua Lumina, regarding the sacking of MUZ officials who stood for the ward elections in the proposed decentralisation system in defiance of a union order not to contest.

He was reacting to chairman of the Elections and Publicity Sub-Committee, Mr Bob Litana's comment yesterday which referred all inquiries on the matter to the Minister of Labour and Social Services.

Mr Litana said he was surprised that MUZ should turn around and condemn a system it helped to build. He said MUZ was victimising members who had filed in their nominations by forcing them to withdraw.

But Mr Chungu said the miners had rejected the new system. "They even threw stones at the commissioners who were appointed to look into the possibility of introducing the system in 1975 when they came to Kitwe," he said.

"Our order still stands. Anybody who has ignored it will be fired from leadership," Mr Chungu warned.

He added: "At this point in time we don't need the Minister of Labour and Social Services to intervene. As far as this issue is concerned, he is irrelevant. We don't know who he is."

The MUZ general secretary said Mr Litana forgot easily. "He knows very well that the issue of decentralisation was not debated at Mulungushi."

Mr Chungu said the union would go round to see which officials had taken part in the elections.

"To us, it does not matter whether anybody has lost the election or not. He will still be fired from leadership. Win or lose is not what we are concerned with, but participation in the race."

He said the bi-annual conference held in Livingstone last week was a high body of the union and all resolutions passed at that meeting were binding.

In Ndola, acting Zambia Electricity Workers Union general secretary, Mr Brown Zulu ordered his officials to boycott the elections.

He said his union had decided on the move because the Party and its Government has managed to come out with contradictory statements regarding the local government administration Bill announcing the local government elections while going ahead with the Party elections.

Turnout 'Extremely High'

[Text]

MINEWORKERS' Union of Zambia (MUZ) officials, who had filed nominations for ward elections, yesterday contested the polls in defiance of the union's threat to sack them if they did not boycott them.

The turn out of voters for the crucial elections, which are to usher in the new decentralised Local Government system, was described as "extremely high" by Party officials in most parts of the country.

Chairman of the Electoral Commission, Mr Edward Shamwana, told a Press conference at Kitwe's Edinburgh Hotel, that he was satisfied with the manner in which the elections had been conducted and reported no serious complaints.

In Luanshya, the governor, Mr Grant Ng'ombe told the Mail that despite the MUZ threat on the eve of the elections, all miners who had indicated their willingness to contest various posts, did not withdraw their candidature.

"I have visited the polling stations myself and all workers employed by the mines, who filed in their nominations are still in the race," he said.

Only one candidate withdrew from the polls in Mufulira, and according to Copperbelt provincial political secretary, Mr Cox Sikumba, the candidate, who pulled out was competing for the post with two others "and he was the weaker of the three".

Mr Ng'ombe, disclosed that in fact some of the miners, who were contesting the polls had gone through unopposed. Those who have opposition in their respective wards are still in the race. "No single miner has withdrawn from the elections despite the threats by MUZ," Mr Ng'ombe said.

Commenting on the elections in general, the governor said that nearly all voters had turned out to cast their votes.

"I can even rightly say that the turn out was close to 100 per cent," he said.

Ndola Urban district secretary, Mr Bedford Kang'ombe also said that the turn out was almost 100 per cent in all of Ndola's 25 wards.

"Nearly all voters braved heavy rain to cast their vote, the district secretary said.

He added that in fact, some wards in the districts had to approach his office to collect more ballot papers as the demand was high.

In Ndola Rural, the district secretary Mr Laimon Shanduka said that the turn out of voters was good

"Though I did not visit all stations in the district, but from what I have seen from a few polling stations nearby, the turn out has been excellent and close to 100 per cent.

He said that seven chairmen out of the 29 people who were contesting, were returned unopposed while 18 vice-chairmen in the 20 wards were returned unopposed.

"For the post of secretary, 15 were returned unopposed, for vice secretaryship, 18 were returned unopposed. Treasurership 15 people went through unopposed while for the post of vice-treasurer, 19 went through unopposed," the district secretary disclosed.

He added that generally, the elections were conducted in a peaceful atmosphere throughout the district.

And 38 Party officials out of 44 who are registered on the voters roll in Ndola's Itawa ward yesterday turned up to cast their votes in the ward elections.

Member of Parliament for Chiwala, Mr Eno Juma Banda, under which the ward falls praised the Party officials for turning punctually. However, Mr Banda said that the regional offices in Ndola should quiz all the six Party officials, who had failed to turn up.

"This election is very important and we don't see any reasons why they did not turn up. They must be questioned by the regional offices as soon as the elections are over," Mr Banda said.

Those elected were Mr Raban Ngwira, treasurer, Mr Wilfred Chilembo, secretary and Mr Nephas Tembo, vice-chairman.

On Monday MUZ acting general secretary, Mr Anderson Chungu, had said the union would fire any member who contested the elections because it was opposed to the integrated Local Government system.

UNIP Scores Strategic Gains

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 22 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

UNIP has scored strategic gains in section Party elections held a few months ago, according to a Freedom House analysis released yesterday.

And indications are that yesterday's elections will further consolidate the plan by the Party and its Government to hand over power to the people under the proposed decentralised local government system.

The analysis from Freedom House shows that so far 70 per cent of the posts at section level have been filled, compared to only 47 per cent during the 1977 Party section elections.

The indications are that despite the strong opposition from the Zambia Congress of Trade Unions people at grassroot level have now accepted the proposed local government decentralised system.

According to figures released yesterday by Freedom House in some provinces more than 90 per cent of the section posts have been filled. The Freedom House figures show that the highest score comes from Luapula Province where the main UNIP Party section leadership has filled 94 per cent of available positions.

In the same province 58 per cent of the available women's league posts are now occupied. But the province is weak on the youth league level, having managed tol fill only 28 per cent of the positions at stake.

But in terms of mass political mobilisation the Copperbelt comes out weakest with only 62 per cent of the posts filled in the main UNIP body, 52 per cent of the women's league and only 27 per cent of the youth league.

The Copperbelt is the power base of the Zambia Congress of Trade Unions, which seeks to block the introduction of the local government decentralisation bill. The ZCTU alleges that the exercise will be too expensive, an infringement on the civic rights of the individual and the Mine workers Union of Zambia has withdrawn candidates who belong to their trade union.

Freedom House maintains that the new system is crucial in the Party's decision to give political power to the people.

The figures released by the chairman of the Elections and Publicity Sub-Committee of the Central Committee Mr Bob Litana show that the Northern Province is the most consistent area in terms of Party mobilisation.

The Province has filled 77 per cent of the youth league posts, 79 per cent of the women's league and 83 per cent of the main Party. Next is the North-Western Province with 62 per cent of the youth league, 83 per cent of the women's league and 90 per cent of the main body.

Freedom House has expressed satisfaction at the growth of Party following in the provinces, as this enhances party popularity. The figures released yesterday exclude 30 wards in the Northern, Southern, North-Western and Eastern Provinces and eight wards in Lusaka Urban.

The rest of the figures are with percentages filled in brackets, Southern Province (49) youth league (68), (74) women's league, and 80 main body. Western Province (46) youth league, (68) women's league and 80 per cent main body.

Luapula Province (54) for youth league, (64) women's league and 74 per cent of the main body.

According to regulations governing the elections issued by the electoral commission yesterday candidates who are aggrieved by the results of the polls will be able to petition to the High Court.

But those vetoed by the Central Committee will have no further recourse for redress, according to the statatutory instrument.

MUZ Intimidation Hit

Lusaka ZAMBIA DAILY MAIL in English 22 Oct 80 p 4

[Editorial]

[Text]

MINEWORKERS Union of Zambia (MUZ) is insistent that all its members, whether individuals like it or not, should not stand in the current Party elections.

In other words, all MUZ members should boycott the ward Party elections and just have nothing to do with them.

Acting General Secretary, Mr Anderson Chungu warned members who ignore the boycott that they would be sacked. Those who feel strongly that they must stand for elections have been told to resign because "they cannot have it both ways."

The reason MUZ have given is that the results of the elections will introduce decentralisation — a system they are opposed to. The threat by MUZ against those who will dare stand for elections raises an endless list of questions in the minds of many people in this country.

Standing in any election is a constitutional right of every citizen. It is consistent with the democratic principles of our nation, and as long as this provision and privilege remains the right of every citizen, it would be wrong to intimidate those who wish to contest elections.

We know that the basis of all constitutions for the various organisations that we have in the country is the Zambian constitution. Therefore, anybody who acts against its provisions commits a serious breach.

There is no provision for intimidation even in the MUZ constitution, and using intimidation as another form of protest to frustrate the Party elections is a grave offence.

The fact that some officials of MUZ have ignored this intimidation and have decided to stand for ward Party elections is sufficient evidence that it is not every member who is opposed to decentralisation.

All signs show that intimidation will fail to dissuade union officials from participating in the elections, hence MUZ wants to use another whip. In this connection, all successful officials will be asked to step down from their union positions.

Nobody would quarrel with this, as long as such provision exists in the MUZ constitution. In fact, successful candidates should know their positions even without such reminder.

Apparently, the decision to stop all officials of the union from taking part in the Party elections was taken at the recent eighth MUZ bi-annual conference which was held in Livingstone and a resolution was passed to this effect.

But even after passing the resolution, it is clear that some officials did not think the best way to fight against decentralisation was to stand on the side of the balcony. They would like to voice their resentment from within.

This is the only reasonable and effective way we know of correcting what one considers to be wrong. But it is evident from the number of people who have ignored and decided to stand for elections that it is not the whole MUZ who oppose decentralisation.

It may just be a handful and since they seem to be powerless to stop the mass of their officials who would like to contest the elections, the only way is to use intimidation.

As the Chairman of the Elections and Publicity Committee, Mr Bob Litana, aptly put it, this move by the union is most unfortunate. Is the inference that when the union officials attended the national councils and voted in support of decentralisation, they did not understand the implications?

This is the only logical but sad conclusion one can make. Why did those MUZ who attended the National Council not register their disapproval? Something is seriously wrong in the union

ZUNA HITS PARTY OFFICIAL FOR THREATENING PRESS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 20 Oct 80 p 7

[Text]

THE Zambia United Nations Association (ZUNA) has criticised Eastern Province member of the Central Committee, Mr Joshua Mumpanshya, for threatening severe reprisals against the Times of Zambia and Sunday Times of Zambia.

ZUNA secretary-general, Mr Sundie Mutambo said the threat gave a bad impression about Press freedom in Zambia to the international community.

Mr Mumpanshya threatened the two papers last week when he denied reports that the Eastern Province Development Council had stopped maize grown there to be taken to other provinces.

Mr Mumpanshya charged that some people were undermining and contradicting President Kaunda who had said yellow maize was as good as white maize meal.

He was reported as having said: "Wait and see. We will go deep and see. We will go deep until we find the people who are using you. When we find them, we shall keep our lips sealed. Some of you will never be able to use those pens and notebooks. You will be jumping from bar to bar."

But in a Press statement released in Lusaka yesterday in view of the World Development Information Day on October 24, Mr Mutambo said Mr Mumpanshya's threats painted a wrong picture to the outside world.

As a member of the United Nations, he said, Zambia was required to support the new world information order and Mr Mumpanshya's threats to Times staff was an infringement.

It was wrong to take Mr Mumpanshya's views to reflect Government thinking, Mr Mutambo said, adding that his (Mr Mumpanshya's) threats contradicted President Kaunda's stand on a free Press.

Mr Mumpanshya's outbursts should be treated as a contradiction of national policy which upheld good relationship between the Government and the mass media "which the President has stressed in his dealings with the Press."

"My advice to Mr Mumpanshya is that he should seriously examine his statements before making them," Mr Mutambo said.

Meanwhile, Mr Mutambo has urged Agriculture and Water Development Minister, Mr Unia Mwila, to speed up the formation of a national committee to liaise with the Food and Agriculture Organisation (FAO)

GOVERNMENT URGED TO AMEND EXPORT-IMPORT REGULATIONS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 17 Oct 80 p 2

[Text]

THE Government should amend regulations governing exports and imports if it is to gain from inter-regional trade, according to experts from the Geneva-based International Trade Centre seconded to Zambia.

The experts, in their report to the Ministry of Commerce and Foreign, Trade, say immediate measures should be taken to correct the shortcomings which are now working against the Zambian economy.

"Action at the political level is necessary to obtain preferential treatment for Zambian exports," say the experts, adding that this was particularly crucial for trade with Zimbabwe which may turn out to the disadvantage of Zambia.

The experts, from the ITC, who were hired specifically to study Zambia's export potential following the independence of Zimbabwe has identified that there are 353 exportable products from 113 Zambian companies.

But the export drive, which should earn the country millions of Kwacha in foreign exchange, was being undermined by a number of administrative and legalistic arrangements.

Goods produced in Zambia would be 50 per cent cheaper if importers did not have to wait for 20 months between the time they placed the orders and the time the suppliers were paid, says the report.

Reduction

With such a reduction in the prices of Zambian goods, which have been found to be of high quality, the country would be able to compete on the outside market.

The experts recommended that in future the granting of foreign exchange for the importation of raw materials should be in favour of firms that could export their products.

Zambian firms would need export finance, export credit insurance, export incentives and improved finance for imported raw materials.

"Linking allocations of foreign exchange to export earnings would, for many exporters, remove the main obstacle to export and at the same time provide a powerful export incentive," says the report.

The experts note that President Kaunda approved such a scheme in his speech to the 1979 Ndola Trade Fair.

They add: "An effective scheme for drawing duty and sales tax on imported raw materials which are used to manufacture exports is needed."

All the red tape associated with exporting arrangements should be removed immediately.

The experts from the ITC visited Zimbabwe for their inter-territorial market survey and they reported that there was great potential for trade between the two neighbouring countries.

NUPTW EXECUTIVE REJECTS PROPOSED DECENTRALIZATION

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 20 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

THE Supreme Council of the National Union of Postal and Telecommunications Workers (NUPTW) has rejected the proposed decentralised local government administration.

This was one of the resolutions passed at the council meeting held at Kapiri Mposhi at the weekend at which Ndola governor, Mr Alexander Kamalondo was denounced for allegedly inciting youths to harass union leaders.

Union chairman, Mr Chitalu Sampa said the council fully supported the Zambia Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) decision to petition Party Secretary-General, Mr Mainza Chona to shelve the new local government system.

The petition was unanimously approved at the congress seminar on political and economic administration for top trade union leaders held at the President's Citizenship College near Kabwe last month.

The Mineworkers Union of Zambia (MUZ) has also objected to the introduction of the new system, warning that it would not benefit Zambians but it will bring chaos instead.

Mr Sampa, who is ZCTU acting general secretary said the NUPTW Supreme Council considered the congress stand on the matter as constructive.

"We fully support the ZCTU for submitting a petition to Party Secretary-General," he said.

On reports that Mr Kamalondo had mobilised the Youth League to deal with people who were trying to discredit the Party and its Government, Mr Sampa said:

"We feel insulted for Mr Kamalondo to issue such a Press statement which, in actual fact, is criminal. You cannot at this moment try to organise youths to harass their fathers who are trade union leaders.

"We categorically condemn the utterances of the governor. It is advisable that the parents of these youngsters guide their children properly," he said.

Mr Sampa who was flanked by supreme council delegates warned that if parents failed to control their children the country would end up in chaos.

Mr Kamalondo should find the youths employment instead of involving them into "irresponsible activities," he said amid shouts that Mr Kamalondo was only a governor for Ndola and not a national leader like ZCTU chairman Mr Frederick Chiluba with whom he had chosen to pick a quarrel.

Mr Sampa said Mr Kamalondo must follow the advice of the Copperbelt member of the Central Committee, Mr Shadreck Soko, who was appealing for peace and stability in the area.

TAZARA OFFICIAL WARNS UNION LEADERS, MUZ RAPS NDOLA GOVERNOR

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 22 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

TAZARA general manager, Major-General Charles Nyirenda has warned that if union leaders do not cherish the aspirations of their followers their leadership is blind.

He was speaking at a reception in honour of delegates from Tazara management and the Railway Workers Union of Zambia and the National Tanzania Workers Union on Monday night after a tripartite meeting.

General Nyirenda informed the guests, who included Zambia Railways acting general manager, Mr Richard Veenis, RWUZ chairman Mr Dominic Katwishi and NTWU secretary for communications and transport Mr A. L. Ngweno, that without the dedication and support of workers, Tazara would be doomed to failure.

He recalled that Tazara had in the past been a target of forces of destruction including blowing up of bridges but workers remained calm and the "great uhuru" survived.

"Without you [workers] Tazara would not be there. We [management] value you more than anything because without you we would starve to death."

He called for hard work to ensure goods were promptly delivered adding that the co-operation between the management and the two unions had been demonstrated by mutual trust.

In reply Mr Katwishi said that although General Nyirenda was heading an "infant organisation" he had made a big achievement by bringing RWUZ and NTWU together to discuss common problems.

He attacked some managers who felt they could not consult workers because of their high status and warned that this practice was dangerous as it brought about suspicion.

"I hope some managers are going to emulate Tazara because I am aware that some organisations think trade unions are economic wreckers, which is a wrong attitude," he said.

The action taken by Tazara management to meet union leaders of the two countries was a progressive one.

Mr Katwishi said Tazara management needed support and assured Gen Nyirenda of his union's full backing.

Meanwhile, the Mineworkers Union of Zambia has accused Ndola governor Mr Alexander Kamalondo of undermining the labour movement which built him to a position of recognition.

"Treacherous"

MUZ vice-chairman Mr Timothy Walamba described Mr Kamalondo's threat to use violence against labour leaders in Ndola as "treacherous".

MUZ is the second union which has attacked Mr Kamalondo since he warned he would let the youths in the town loose against unionists who allegedly worked against the Party and its Government.

On Monday, general secretary of the Posts and Telecommunications Workers Union, Mr Chitalu Sampa, described Mr Kamalondo's remarks as criminal.

Mr Walamba wondered how Mr Kamalondo, who is former vice-chairman of MUZ, could turn round and insult the labour leaders who brought him up to where he is now.

He said Mr Kamalondo was appointed a district governor on a MUZ ticket and should be grateful for this.

MUZ, he added, had spent a lot of money on Mr Kamalondo's education in the United States, but the union did not know he would one day turn against it.

Mr Walamba said MUZ would not be idle while Zambia Congress of Trade Unions chairman Mr Frederick Chiluba was being harassed.

"Anybody who touches Chiluba and other ZCTU leaders will provoke MUZ and other affiliated unions," he warned.

TRADITIONAL CHIEFS HOLD KEY TO SUCCESS OF RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 22 Oct 80 p 2

[Text]

THE rural development programme cannot succeed without the blessing of traditional rulers, President's Citizenship College principal, Mr Emmanuel Chalabesa has said.

He called on chiefs to encourage their people to start ploughing their fields in time to ensure a bumper crop harvest next season.

Mr Chalabesa was speaking at a reception in honour of seven chiefs attending a three-week course in political education at the college near Kabwe.

He said the college could not be perfect in everything but as leaders, the chiefs had a big role to guide their people in the right direction.

In reply, Chief Ingwe of Kasempa district in North-Western Province, called for the extention of the course from three weeks to at least two months so that they would know how to run their administration effectively back home.

Chief Ingwe, speaking on behalf of the group, said however that traditional rulers had accepted the course with the hope that they would gain more but they discovered that the three-week duration was inadequate.

His colleagues had enjoyed the cooperation accorded them by the college tutors and they had benefited from the course, the chief said.

He assured college authorities that after graduating, the traditional rulers would do everything possible to impart their knowledge to their subjects.

Implication

"We did not know the implication of Humanism until we came here at the college. Every chief now knows that without their support, Party organisation will not succeed" Chief Ingwe said.

Other traditional rulers attending the course are Chiefs Nzamane of Chipata, Fungulwa of Ndola Rural, Mpikamalaza of Lundazi, Kashiba of Mwense, Senior Chief Tafuna of Mbala and Chieftainess Shimukunami of Ndola Rural.

In Mazabuka, Southern Province, a traditional ruler has threatened to take away idle land from farmers at a settlement scheme, Zana reports.

Chief Mwanachingwala of Mazabuka district said lazy farmers at Mwanachingwala settlement would lose their farms unless they worked hard and became productive.

Addressing more than 100 farmers' committee members at his palace yesterday, the chief said those who failed to utilise land would lose it and it would be re-allocated to hard-working people who desperately needed farms.

ZCTU BI-ANNUAL CONGRESS CLOSES, PLEDGES TO CONTINUE FIGHT

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 19 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

THE Zambia Congress of Trade Unions will not succumb to pressure from any quarter in its fight to improve the welfare of its members, chairman Mr Frederick Chiluba declared yesterday.

Mr Chiluba, who was closing the eighth bi-annual conference of the Mineworkers Union of Zambia at Livingstone's Victoria hall said this was because the congress believed that respect, rather than fear, for one another was the basis for unity in any society.

The ZCTU was not trying to be a government within a government, nor was it an alternative to the present Government, but was not going to allow anybody to rob it of its participation in the affairs of the country.

Mr Chiluba told his audience, which included Southern Province permanent secretary Mr Mwiche Siwale: "Remember, do not fear this Government or the leaders because with fear, your patriotism will be conditional."

Leaders should be respected individually, as well as collectively. There should also be respect for authority too.

"If this Government is holding an olive branch, the labour movement has olive oil to soothe the troubles," he said.

"But we do not have blankets on which leaders, including arrogant ones, who are insulting others will walk care-free to their destinations. We shall not cooperate with anybody insulting the people, just because he is in authority," he said.

The ZCTU would make unions more powerful at district levels so that they would be capable of dealing with local problems.

● Eighty-five miners were killed in accidents at work over the past three years.

STEEL MILL PROJECT UNDER CONSIDERATION

Lusaka ZAMBIA DAILY MAIL in English 21 Oct 80 p 3

[Text]

ZAMBIA may establish a steel re-rolling mill following recommendations by the United Nations Industrial Development Organisation (UNIDO).

An expert from UNIDO headquarters in Vienna, Austria, Mr Bal Nijhawan, who has been working on the project said it was necessary for Zambia to have her own steel mill in order to reduce her high import bill and save foreign exchange.

The government has been considering the establishment of a steel mill to produce reinforced concrete bars, rods and steel sections used in the construction industry.

Zambia's imports reached a peak of about 70,000 tons (71,120 tonnes) of bars and rods in 1974 which were valued at about K15 million and the aggregate value of the steel imports over a period of between four and five years would amount to about K75 million, said Mr Nijhawan.

He said the capital costs of a steel re-rolling mill over a four year period is about K15 million, and the plant would produce enough steel to feed Zambia's industries.

It does not need a specialist to find out which course of action is better for Zambia, to continue spending millions of money to import steel or establish her own mill, he said.

Mr Nijhawan added that the dynamic support given by Minister of Commerce and Industry, Mr Remmy Chisupa in according top priority to the steel re-rolling mill project, has been the driving force for the realisation of the project.

The Development Bank of Zambia (DBZ), is playing a vital role in having invited proposals for the establishment of the steel re-rolling mill.

He said so far there were two proposals from Zambian firms on the establishment of the mill and these were receiving serious considerations and were under active scrutiny and evaluation for which UNIDO was providing requisite technical assistance.

"These firms are being asked to prepare most expeditiously detailed project reports for the establishment of the plant. The reports will be examined and evaluated by UNIDO in close co-ordination with DBZ and the Government," he said.

BARCLAYS TO FINANCE LIMA LOANS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 22 Oct 80 p 4

[Text]

BARCLAYS Bank is to lend K2.5 million to about 2,000 farmers during its lima loans scheme which it launched recently, a bank spokesman said in Lusaka yesterday.

Explaning the progress made so far, he said over 900 farmers had been identified as potential borrowers of approximately K1.6 million.

The bank launched the lima scheme in its continuing efforts to assist in the nation's drive to produce more food.

"Loans are at present being processed and more requests are being obtained all the time. The bank is on its way to achieve its target of lending K2.5 million to about 2,000 farmers," he said.

He added: "The scheme is progressing well and according to plans because the Barclays team of credit supervisors, who are spread all over the farming areas involved, work hand in hand with district agricultural officers."

The bank will hold a meeting on November 26 at the bank's head office in Lusaka where district agricultural officers from Mazabuka, Lusaka, Mumbwa, Petauke and Katete and Barclays lima supervisor will review work done and to review the strategy for the next phase of the scheme.

"Barclays is confident that the lima loan scheme will succeed and that the end result will mean a significant contribution to the operation food production being embarked on by the Party and its Government," said the spokesman.

He explaimed that such active participation by commercial banks in agricultural projects, while being somewhat innovative, did follow trends being set by banks in other Third World countries.

The addition of the mobile team of agricultural credit supervisors by Barclays, to the already existing agricultural department, has considerably increased the involvement of the bank, which last year loaned K45 million.

"This represented about 37 per cent of its total lendings to this sector," said the spokesman.

SPECIAL HOUSING IMPROVEMENT SCHEME REPORTED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 19 Oct 80 p 1

[Article by Dennis Kapata]

[Text]

A SPECIAL multi-million Kwacha scheme aimed at improving housing prospects and encourage home ownership in rural areas gets off the ground early next year, it has been reported.

According to a spokesman for the National Housing Authority (NHA) which has been commissioned to coordinate the project to be known as "rural social housing programme," the scheme would involve the establishment of site and service schemes in conjunction with local authorities.

The spokesman said the Government had initially provided K2.500.000 obtained as a loan from the European Development Fund, to cover six rural centres under the scheme.

The centres to be affected will be Mansa, Pemba, Monze, Mazabuka, Mpika and Chipata.

The spokesman said the introduction of site and service schemes in the six centres would mark the start of a series of such ventures to cover the entire country.

Although originally planned under the Second National Development Plan, the project was in fact the first genuinely-social housing scheme to be implemented in the Third National Development Plan, he said.

The spokesman also said the scheme would go a long way in eliminating shanty compounds.

The two-year scheme will be managed along the same line as the K26.5 million Lusaka housing project. The spokesman said the NHA had already started recruiting staff for the project.

Local authorities would be given four types of houses from which participating residents would make their choices.

Each participant would be given a K500 loan in the form of building materials which would be repayable over a period of time, he said.

The participants would be encouraged to seek financial aid from other institutions because the K500 would not be enough to complete a house.

"But our officers will try as much as possible to make the participants obtain financial assistance from cheap sources," he said.

Land clearing, provision of facilities like water and roads in the six centres would start in February so that interested residents could start getting plots.

And ZANA reports: The Zambia National Provident Fund has released K3 million for the construction of modern residential areas in Solwezi, Mansa and Chipata.

The Fund's principal inspector for Copperbelt and North-Western Province regions, Mr Felix Zimba, said this in Solwezi yesterday.

He told the Provincial Development Committee meeting attended by the province's member of the Central Committee Mr Fine Liboma that the aim was to alleviate accommodation problems faced by township councils.

Mr Zimba said the housing estates were in addition to office buildings under construction.

Mr Zimba was requested by the development committee meeting to explain why the Fund was only building office complexes and not houses.

"We are putting up three staff houses in additional to office buildings. The Fund has also released K3 million for the construction of housing estates in Solwezi, Mansa and Chipata. "We are doing this to help alleviate accommodation problems." Mr Zimba said.

ILLEGAL STRIKE ACTION CONDEMNED

Lusaka ZAMBIA DAILY MAIL in English 23 Oct 80 p 4

[Editorial]

[Text]

STRIKE action stands out as one of the most potent weapons for venting workers' wrath on authority and in the process demonstrating their solidarity.

Examples abound however, that taken illegally, strike action can also be one of the most inconveniencing and sometimes pointless actions taken to draw attention to particular causes.

By the look of things in Zambia today, it does not seem to matter anymore whether or not a strike is legal. Today even illegal strikers can boast of going about their sordid affairs without ever encountering the supposed long arm of the law.

Every law abiding Zambian obviously understands the implications of the Industrial Relations Act and the penalties for illegal strikes.

Of course, it is obvious too that whether or not a strike is legal, the damage done to industrial peace and disruption of services is very devastating.

We fail to understand therefore, why in the civil service strikes are continuing when in May this year a commission of inquiry was appointed to look into conditions of service and wages of civil servants.

We cannot understand either, why for instance, this week another strike was on at a Livingstone Secondary School where literate teachers who have read about the commission's completion of its work this very month stopped work for a day.

We sympathise with Southern Province chief education officer, Mr Henderson Simwanza, and other officers in his kind of work who have to explain such obvious things to adults who can read and write and understand that to put together information gathered over a five month period, is not exactly a simple matter.

We do know, too, that most of the strikes that have been on in the civil service on this issue have been illegal.

We would like to pose here and ask whether the Ministry of Labour and Social Services is dealing with these clear cases of illegal strikes. Is anything stopping the ministry from taking action against those who flout the law?

We are not here condemning the ministry for the sake of filling this space with meaningless words. We are urging it to take these strikes a little more seriously through decisive and deterrent action.

If the recent illegal strikes are meant to impress authority about the workers' ability to defy it, then we say, the law must take its cause.

Has President Kaunda not done his bit in condemning illegal strikes? So why should they continue to be tolerated?

We are getting sick and tired of hearing day in and day out about strikes that ought not to take place if the Industrial Relations Act was adhered to.

Good trade unions should understand the necessity to negotiate, declare disputes, conciliate, arbitrate and take strike ballots because that is what the law says.

With the commission's report not yet in, we would like those who want to take the law into their own hands to remember that in the Industrial Relations Act, there is a section that categorically forbids employees, union and other persons from going on strike during a period of conciliation.

Like Mr Simwanza, we would like to urge civil servants to be patient. We are certain that the Government in drawing up these conditions of services and wages, will take into account the rapidly changing times. But all the same, industrial peace has to be maintained.

EFFORTS TO SAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY REPORTED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 22 Oct 80 p 7

[Text]

THE Zambia Publishing Company is on the verge of collapse — and workers have made a fresh appeal to President Kaunda through Information and Broadcasting permanent secretary, Mr Edward Lubinda, to save the organisation.

Zambia Daily Mail and ZPC employees gave Mr Lubinda a petition calling for action.

The petition, read by works committee chairman, Mr Emmanuel Sikuvuna said an earlier appeal to President Kaunda in March last year had not been answered.

The petition says that the appointment of Mr Lackson Kaemba, who is Mail acting Editor-in-Chief as ZPC acting managing director did not change the situation.

Appointed

"Although Mr Kaemba was appointed acting managing director this has not helped matters because it appears to us that he is not free to make firm and lasting decisions for the simple reason that he himself is not sure of his future," the petition says.

Workers said they were surprised by a decision by the board of directors, chaired by Mr Lubinda, to advertise the post of general manager held by Mr David Warsall, who resigned.

Mr Warsall was given a six-month extension at the end of his contract on September 30 to groom a Zambian to take over.

Workers want two and a half years in which to groom a Zambian to take over from Mr Warsall. "While we are for Zambianisation, we are at the same time not happy to see it done for window-dressing."

The petition accused Information and broadcasting Minister, Mr Mark Tambatamba, of doing nothing since he promised to solve the organisations' problems in October last year.

Mr Lubinda assured the workers he would forward their grievances to Mr Tambatamba.

On the appointment of staff he said: "It is no good for us to wash dirty linen in public. Among us there are reporters from other papers and therefore we cannot handle the matter for all to hear. We are not promising you the moon, but my ministry will do everything possible."

Answering a question on why Zambia Daily Mail which was Government-owned had no loan facilities, Mr Lubinda said these would be introduced when the company's financial position improved.

Mr Lubinda called on journalists in the country to be in the forefront in maintaining peace and safeguarding security in the nation.

Journalists should strive to unite the people and not to disunite them.

He said journalists should always consider whether the information they intended to publish might damage the country's interests.

He warned Zambian newsmen against being misguided by the empty phrase of "freedom of the Press."

"Freedom of the Press is relative and does not exist in the absolute anywhere in the world," he added.

SECURITY FORCES ARREST FRENCH NEWSMAN, DETAIN CHILANGA GUNMEN

'AFP' Correspondent

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 20 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

POLICE are holding the Agence France Presse (AFP) correspondent in Lusaka, Mr Francois Cros, for undisclosed reasons.

Minister of Home Affairs, Mr Wilted Phiri yesterday declined to comment on the whereabouts of Mr Cros.

He said: "At the moment I can neither confirm nor deny the report" when asked to confirm whether Mr Cros was under detention.

Press attache at the French embassy, Miss Arlette Beau, declined to comment saying: "I cannot say anything at the moment."

But diplomatic sources said Mr Cros was picked for questioning last Friday and that the French embassy was in touch with the authorities on the fate of their national.

Mr Cros has been the AFP correspondent in Lusaka for some time and covered the climax of the Zimbabwe liberation war. He was about to leave Zambia at the end of this month as AFP are understood to be closing their office in Lusaka and opening a new one in Salisbury. It is not known whether Mr Cros was going to open the Salisbury office or return to AFP head office in Paris.

Meanwhile, Copperbelt member of the Central Committee, Mr Shadreck Soko has warned of external enemies working in collaboration with internal enemies to commit crime.

"There is evidence to show that this kind of crime is conceived, planned and carried out by organised gangs of hardcore criminals.

"For example even if you surrender your car key, your car, your money and other valuables when criminals confront you, they never spare your life. They still shoot and kill you," Mr Soko said.

Mr Soko called for an intensified fight against crime. "We cannot and must not despair in the face of this danger because despair and cowardice are not the solution to this menace," he said.

Mr Soko urged the public to help the police in their war against crime as law enforcement officers were few.

He said internal enemies wanted to capitalise on the current wave of crime for political gains.

"External enemies operate in collaboration with local contacts. They are friends in crime," he said.

In Kabwe, commissioner of prisons, Mr Jonathan Mwanza called on secuirty forces to rally behind President Kaunda so that Zambia could enjoy peace and stability.

He made the call at a reception held at Mukobeko to mark the end of annual senior prison officers' conference.

Mr Mwanza described the conference as a huge success — Times Reporter/Zana.

Details Not Released

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 21 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

THE Government will soon release details about people arrested and detained by police in the past week as well as the search for a private army of over 50 men who exchanged fire with security forces in the Chilanga area last week, Home Affairs Minister, Mr Wilted Phiri said yesterday.

He declined to discuss the two issues in detail because it would be prejudicial to do so.

"The Government will release details at a later stage," he said.

On Thursday and Friday last week security forces exchanged fire with the men speaking Chokwe, Lunda and Swahili. Two of them were reported to have been shot dead while three others surrendered. The rest fled.

Mr Phiri and Secretary of State for Defence and Security, Mr Grey Zulu, have said security forces were making good progress in rounding up the fugitives — at the rate of two everyday.

"We are doing very well," Mr Phiri said.

The minister would not say whether those picked up last week, including National Guidance governor, Mr Rogers Mubanga, Mr Francois Croe of Agence France Press (AFP), suspended army officer, Major Macpherson Mbulo and former general manager of Industrial Finance Company (IFC), Mr Goodwin Mumba, were connected with the shooting incident.

Ownership of Farm 'Mystery'

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 22 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

MYSTERY surrounds who owns the farm in Chilanga where Zambian security forces exchanged fire with insurgents last week.

Security forces shot dead two of the 50 gunmen and captured three during the shoot-out on Thursday.

Home Affairs Minister, Mr Wilted Phiri, said last week that a prominent Lusaka lawyer might have used the farm — plot 456A — south of Chilanga in Chipongwe area.

But officials in the Ministry of Lands and Natural Resources' lands and deeds department said the farm was still under the name of an absentee landlord according to their records.

A visit to a nearby farm revealed that the expatriate farmer left the country three years ago and told his workers that he was going to settle in South Africa.

One farm worker alleged that two weeks ago, a white man brought a group of Africans to the farm and told nearby farm workers and villagers that the group were new farm workers.

"The man stayed on the farm for one week. We became suspicious of these people because they avoided talking to us.

"We wondered where they were getting food from since the farm was unproductive as the owner left three years ago," he said.

Villagers later reported the presence of these people to Chilanga police who in turn informed higher authorities in Lusaka.

Meanwhile, paramilitary police are guarding a number of injured persons at the University Teaching Hospital in Lusaka who were brought in on Sunday night.

BRIEFS

GDR AGRICULTURE COURSE--Fourteen Zambian agricultural students have completed a course in agriculture at a college near here. The students include some officers from the Ministry of Agriculture and Water Development. The German Democratic Republic news agency ADN quoted three of the Zambian students as having expressed satisfaction at the adequate preparation at the college for them to help promote the national operation food production programme when back at home. The college here, has offered 29 agricultural courses since its opening in 1971 and has trained over 700 specialists from about 25 African, Asian and Latin American countries. Meanwhile, a mining trade mission from the United States arrives in Zambia today for a week-long visit aimed at exploring ways to increase US participation in the Zambian mining industry. Advance officer for the mission, Mr Reginald Biddle said in Lusaka that a 12-man delegation representing all phases in the mining industry will hold wide range discussions with Government officials, including Minister of Mines, Mr Mufaya Mumbuna and officials of the mining companies. The delegation will be led by a mission director from the US department of commerce, Mr Roger Forther and will be coming to Zambia from Zaire before going to Zimbabwe Business Review Reporter/Zana/ADN. OAU SUPPORT FOR ZIMBABWE REPORTED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Oct 80 p 4

[Text]

SUPPORT for Zimbabwe and a 15-point plan for development were among the resolutions passed at a four-day conference of African Ministers of Social Affairs held recently in Addis Ababa.

Zimbabwe representatives attended the conference from October 4 to 8 for the first time as full members.

The ministers asked the secretary-general of the Organisation of African Unity and the executive secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to extend advisory services in social planning and to support development activities in Zimbabwe.

The member states of the OAU and the ECA agreed to support the Government of Zimbabwe in its efforts towards its social and economic reconstruction and urges the international community to respond generously to the call by Zimbabwe for financial support for its reconstruction programme.

The aim of the third conference was to expose, elaborate and emphasise the importance of a plan of action that could benefit Africa. The salient points of the plan are that governments should:

- Create research programmes and production facilities to adopt production technologies that would be suitable for the African situation.
- Formulate and implement, with utmost urgency, policies concerning soil conservation, tapping underground sources of water and reafforestation.
- Revise and introduce improved range-management programmes.
- Launch a massive literacy campaign aimed at eradicating illiteracy among the agrarian population, with help from students, if necessary.
- Adopt prompt and decisive measures to promote farming co-operatives
- Give priority to rural development schemes aimed at eradicating rural underdevelopment and unemployment.
- Involve governments in large-scale production of food with a view to increasing food reserves.
- Launch mass education programmes designed to change traditional customs and attitudes concerning food.
- Establish a campaign to educate the agricultural population in new methods of cultivation, harvesting, storage and processing of farming produce.
- Introduce a campaign against traditional customs and taboos which militate against production.
- Provide more credit facilities to farmers.
- Expand marketing facilities for farming products.
- Formulate food distribution systems to make products available to all sectors of the population.

● Expand general health services to cover all sectors of the population.
● Come up with far-reaching agrarian reform programmes with utmost urgency.

The ministers noted that previous efforts at African development had failed because the planners did not take into full account the social and cultural context within which planning for economic development took place.

They also noted a declining demand on the world market for Africa's export products and the severe limitations placed on the continent's export of manufactured goods to developed countries.

The ministers suggested that trade between African countries be stepped up, through an efficient transport network.

They also adopted a plan to improve the standards of living of their people and to provide purposeful promotion of full employment.

While noting that gobal efforts to increase the participation of women in development have gained momentum, the ministers said that access to formal education continued to be limited. This would continue to hamper efforts to mobilise all available human resources for the rapid economic development of the continent.

The ministers also saw youth unemployment in Africa as a serious problem. This was because most young people who dropped out of school did not have skills to enable them to engage in productive activities, they said.

"Most African economies do not have the facilities to train and deploy such youths in productive employment in any major way," said the ministers. They urged governments to work hard to find an effective remedy to the growing problem.

It was noted that the disabled had been relegated to a "social and economic cold storage", and the conference voted that these people be given an equal opportunity to be productive and self-supporting members of societies.

On farming, the ministers voted that Africa should develop intermediate technology as an answer to agricultural growth.

Advanced technology would result in mass unemployment, the conference believes. Such technology would also result in mass rural to urban migration and urban congestion.

The plans have now to be approved by heads of governments.

CEAO ANNUAL SUMMIT CONFERENCE PREVIEWED

London WEST AFRICA in English 27 Oct 80 p 2113

[Text] THE LEADERS of the member states of the Communauté Economique des Etats de l'Afrique de l'Ouest will be able to look back with some satisfaction on community developments in the last year during their annual summit in Niamey this week.

Their principal task will be to review the progress of some of the projects and the search for finance undertaken in the course of the last year. During the Bamako summit of 1978 and that of Nouackchott in 1979, CEAO committed itself to a series of community projects whose value was 40bn. CFA francs. These concerned a regional centre for solar energy, a regional school of management, a school of mining and geology, a school for textiles, a higher institute of fishing, a community fishing company and a village and pastoral water supply programme.

The summit will have to review the responses of potential creditors, who will be presenting their reports. It was hoped that all the main African, American, Arab, Asian and European financial institutions would contribute towards the realisation of this programme. To achieve this the deputy Director-General of the CEAO, M. Oumar Alpha Sy, has been globetrotting for finance and he has received commitments from all the institutions that they would send representatives to a creditors' meeting this month.

Common Market

The aim of the community is that it should be a true common market by 1986. The ministerial meeting and the subsequent Heads of State summit this week will therefore be concerned with financial and customs problems. It has been widely observed that the budget allocations from all the member states, who are all undergoing a period of relative financial difficulty — will be limited. The development of the two main financial institutions the Fonds Communautaires de Développement (FCD) and the Fonds de Solidarité et d'Intervention pour le Développement de la Communauté (FOSIDEC) will also be discussed. Naturally, measures to improve the food deficit, which CEAO estimates will be between 290,000 tonnes and 300,000 tonnes in the year 2,000, will loom large in the minds of the planners. With this in mind the community has already started a programme to develop fish resources to increase the nutritional quality of the diets on the community populations.

The free circulation of people was agreed to during the Bamako summit. Measures have already been taken to facilitate the free movement of capital, which is already at an advantage as all the member states are members of the franc zone.

The most heartening feature of CEAO, according to the authorities in the organisation, is the progress being made in trade agreements. The centrepiece of the process is the TCR, the Taxe de Coopération Régionale, under which specific industrial goods originating from the community are subject to fiscal advantages when they are traded to other community members. The progress of the TCR can be measured by the growth in compensatory payments made through the FCD. It is considered a sign of the confidence in the FCD and the overall development of the community trade agreements that the FCD capital has increased by almost 60 per cent from 4.2bn. CFA francs to 6.7bn. CFA francs. At the summit and the preparatory ministerial meetings new products will be added to the TCR list.

Figures for 1979 trade have not appeared for all the member states but the increase in community trade from 1976 to 1978 suggests that the trend will continue. In 1976, trade of products under CEAO specifications was worth 2.8bn. CFA francs. This rose to 6.5bn. CFA francs in 1978 with Mali (1.9bn. CFA francs), Upper Volta (2.04bn. CFA francs) and Niger (1.2bn. CFA francs) taking the bulk of the trade. Under the TCR and FCD arrangements, the importing country which stands to lose will receive compensation two-thirds of the value of the loss. The remaining third will be devoted to community development projects.

The one area to which much thought will be given is the relations with other regional organisations. The two most important are ECOWAS and CILSS. Both within the community itself and with regard to other organisations there is a need to improve the flow of information.

Defence Pact Still Grounded

An additional political problem is the defence pact which has been proposed in the past but has never managed to get off the ground. It is unlikely to do so again. Any implementation of the 1977 defence pact of Abidjan agreed by all the CEAO states might be seen as inimical to the interests of more powerful neighbours. It is not so much non-aggression that is the issue as the assistance to be rendered in the event of attack on a pact member. Less than a fortnight before the summit, Col Gaddafi of Libya decided to speak publicly of the maltreatment of the Tuaregs in Mali and Niger, and said that they can always rely on assistance from Libya. This is the sort of consideration that weighs heavily on these two states. They have been the two most reluctant to participate with any enthusiasm in the Defence Pact.

ZIMBABWEAN ELECTRICITY FOR MOZAMBIQUE REGION

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 24 Oct 80 p 4

[Text] ZIMBABWE'S ESC SUPPLIES POWER TO CHIMOIO DISTRICT

THE Electricity Supply Commission is supplying emergency power through Umtali to the Chimoio district across the border after the Mozambique National Resistance Movement blew up the local thermal power station at Revue.

The resistance movement blew up one of two generators at the station.

"This was the only operational generator; the second was in the process of being repaired. I understand that the blast destroyed or severely damaged both generators.

"No one here seems to know what progress is being made in bringing the station back into operation," the source said.

A spokesman for the Umtali thermal power station confirmed the station had been supplying Mozambique with 30 megawatts of power since June, at the request of the Mozambique Government.

The source said there were initial delays in transmitting power to Chimoio

"The ESC was planning to dismantle the power transmission equipment for Mozambique (at Umtali) and when the urgent request came through new components had to be installed.

"There was also a plan to bring in power from Zambia for Chimoio, but this proved impractical. This meant that it was several weeks before power could be restored to the area."

There was also a delay while terms and pricing arrangements were worked out between the Mozambique authorities and the ESC.

AFRICAN EXPORTS TO JAPAN INCREASE

London WEST AFRICA in English 27 Oct 80 pp 2122-23

[Article by David Morris]

[Text]

David Morris of the Anglo-Japanese Economic Institute looks at the effect which domestic political changes and the world recession--in Japan this means an annual growth rate of 2.5 per cent--are having on Japan's economic and international activities, with particular reference to trade relations with West Africa.

IT HAS BEEN quite a year for Japan, one way and another. The country has seen the massive $12,029m. balance of payments current account surplus of fiscal 1978 evaporate, to be replaced by an even more massive $13,931m. deficit in fiscal 1979, with the unsought promise of more of the same to come. It has watched its industrial economy slip inexorably into recession as the Government left business stimulation moves in the pending tray while concentrating its main attentions on checking resurgent inflation (with some success: wholesale prices are still rising at around 20 per cent a year, but the consumer price advance is being held to single figures — the increase in September was 8.9 per cent compared with a year before).

Gross National Product growth in the April-June quarter was the lowest in three years at an annual rate of just 2.5 per cent — a reminder that, to the Japanese way of thinking, recessionary gloom sets in with evidence of slow, rather than negative, growth: other industrial nations, let alone the Third World, should be so sensitive.

In the wider world, Japan has found itself forced by its Western partners from its accustomed and comfortable all-things-to-all-men perch on the international fence and obliged to join the West's concerted chorus of opprobrium over the Afghanistan invasion (for which sign of solidarity ensuing sanctions cost Japanese companies the lion's share of a newly-signed $350m. steel plant contract, aside from other economic disruptions) and the Iranian hostage issue, when the Iranian issue uppermost in Japan's own mind was the significant fact that Iran then constituted Japan's second largest source of oil, after Saudi Arabia.

Still in Iran, the Japanese have watched nervously as one of their biggest-ever international investment projects, the Mitsui group's still uncompleted $3,000m.-plus petrochemical complex at Bandar Khomeini, became the target firstly for Iranian hints of expropriation if Japan did not get on and finish the job, begun during the Shah's regime, and more recently a target for Iraqi bombing. The latter circumstance, a concerned Japanese Minister for International Trade and Industry (the undertaking has been accorded national project status by Japan, with the Government taking a financial hand) could only conclude, was "not accidental": the nervous watch continues.

In the midst of its other problems, the factional power-jostling that characterises Japan's long-ruling Liberal-Democratic Party (LDP) — it has governed virtually without a break throughout the post-war years — achieved the masterstroke of bringing its own side down, as rivals for the party leadership boycotted the vote on an Opposition motion of no confidence in then Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira's Government and promptly found themselves facing a June general election in an atmosphere of vociferous displeasure at the party's incessant internal squabbling. Within days of his government's fall, Prime Minister Ohira was struck by a soon-fatal heart attack that left the LDP leaderless in the election run-up and Japan a virtually token presence at that same month's Venice Summit of leading industrial nations — an event on which the former Premier had pinned great hopes for consolidating Japan's increasingly active participation (if still not yet initiative) in world counsels, following Tokyo's hosting of the preceding 1979 summit.

Chastened But Still in Power

Traumas notwithstanding, the chastened LDP was returned to power yet again, with an enlarged majority to boot, and left to sort out the leadership succession and resume the business of running the country. On grounds, it seems, of his being the least objectionable candidate to all concerned of the party's power-brokers, the choice fell unexpectedly on the obscure person of Zenko Suzuki, until then a key background figure as chairman of the LDP's executive council. Searching for some convenient tag with which to explain the new Prime Minister to his curious subjects, local political pundits latched on to a suggested Buddha-like persona in their new leader and duly dubbed him Zenko the unflappable.

The description doubtless loses something in translation, but must have come as reassurance in its original form, "flap" never having been one of humankind's more desirable traits, to the Japanese mind. Right now, imperturbability at the top must seem a more than usually welcome attribute. The new Premier may assert that Japan has a voice of its own and will not conduct a "please-all" policy, but the more immediate evidence seems to be of a please-none policy, with Japan a repeated target for the frustrations of its main Western trading partners, who are threatening barriers against what they see as an unquenchable tide of Japanese exports swamping their home markets.

It is Japan's lot that, even when feeling itself in less than robust economic health, its image is dogged by glaringly visible signs that obstinately read success.

Certainly its steelmakers are cutting back output in the face of falling demand; admittedly its aluminium smelters have scrapped or mothballed one-third of productive capacity, and textile firms are banding together for mutual support and commiseration. What, though, of the cars and electrical goods that are every bit as much household names in Lagos as in London or New York, and continue to spread their Made-in-Japan message to the High Streets of the world?

That the message may not always be strictly accurate is the minor price to be paid for successful brand promotion: the spread of overseas investment has taken Japanese manufacturing skills around the world, and the Sanyo colour television set in an Ibadan store is as likely, indeed more likely, to have come from the Japanese company's joint venture in the city, Sanyo (Nigeria) Ltd. — now turning out 6,000 electrical items, from TV sets to air-conditioners, every month — as from a Sanyo factory in Japan itself.

Still, there is little sympathetic understanding of Japan's position to be aroused from US or European rivals by tales of slumping demand on Japan's own car market, say, when January-June exports show a 40 per cent rise over first-half of 1979 to close on 3 million vehicles (137,863 went to Africa, the only region, incidentally, not to show a double-digit percentage sales increase in 1979) and July saw Japan's monthly vehicle production top the one-million mark. Recession is clearly a selective phenomenon.

The Japanese may point to their balance of payments shortfall — wasn't that, after all, exactly what was being demanded of them a year or two back when Japan's seemingly inevitable export surplus was filling the national coffers to overflowing? — to the problems of structural readjustment confronting many major industries, to the 1,500 Japanese companies going to the wall each month, and to all the other pertinent indicators that things aren't what they used to be and are certainly not what Japan would like them to be: the outside world remains unconvinced, it has statistics of its own.

One indisputable figure for the debate, though: Japan ran up a record trade deficit of $10,815m. in the first half of 1980.

Outside the Middle East oil producing nations with fat surpluses on their Japanese accounts, though, that slight misfortune may understandably have passed unnoticed. Oil made up a good 37 per cent of Japan's January-June $67,000m. import bill (for 1979 the proportion was just over 30 per cent of the year's $110,595m. imports), leaving a 63 per cent share of $44,000m., or thereabouts, for the rest of the world's wares, to be set against Japan's six-month export total of $58,800m. In the event, the USA — Japan's biggest trading partner — logged a first-half deficit on the two-way trade of $2,823m.; the European Economic Community $3,721m.; developing Africa around $1,000m. To that Africa figure, the key Nigerian market alone contributed something in the region of $600m. — approaching the $700m. deficit of the whole of 1979 — and Liberia a further $450m.: counterbalancing surpluses elsewhere are reflected in the overall $1,000m. figure.

Liberia's deficit is one of the enduring characteristics of Japan-West Africa trade, and derives overwhelmingly from the value of Japanese-built ships delivered for Liberian flag registration. From the late 1960s onward, such vessels came to account, nominally at any rate, for an effective half of Japan's entire export earnings from Africa, a situation that was to continue until the 1973 oil crisis punctured the Seven Seas Bubble of the then tanker boom and sent new ship orders plunging. Deliveries have since dropped progressively, to such an extent that last year's further 44 per cent fall sliced the Liberian ship share to a scant 17 per cent of Japan's overall sales to Africa, with a corresponding impact on that sales total.

Astonishingly, Japanese exports to the continent have fallen by more than one-third in the last two years: 1979's total ¥1,147,000m. (around $4,800m.) sales to Africa were 35.8 per cent lower than in 1977, cutting the continent's contribution to Japan's world-wide export earnings from its former, customary 8 or 9 per cent to barely more than 5 per cent last year.

Japan's imports from Africa, though, tell a different story entirely. These rocketed more than 50 per cent last year to ¥699,000m. (approximately $2,900m.) to retain their 3 per cent hold on the Japanese import market and even outpacing the 45 per cent climb in that $110,595m. global import bill — a climb which owes much to sharp depreciation in the value of the Japanese Yen on foreign exchange markets (a factor increasing Japan's export competitiveness against stronger currency rivals, but inexorably inflating its heavy fuel and raw materials import bills) and more besides to ever-spiralling oil prices. Exchange complications or not, the dramatic surge in African sales to Japan last year brought replacement of bilateral trade deficits with Japan by surpluses for Mali, Cameroon and the Central African Republic, along with a significant narrowing of Gabon's deficit as a 93 per cent leap in manganese ore shipments (their value soaring 119 per cent to ¥1,979m.) spurred a more-than-doubling of its total exports to Tokyo to ¥2,823m.

Inevitably, Nigeria emerges as the major focus of Japanese activity in West Africa, with more than 1,400 Japanese resident there and around 50 major Japanese companies established either in joint production ventures or through local representative offices. Here, too, a virtual 500 per cent jump (spurred by a heavy fuel bill) in 1979 sales to Japan combined with a 12 per cent dip in Japanese exports to this, its third largest African market, after South Africa and Liberia, helped to narrow the bilateral trade gap from 1978's alarming 127-to-1 in Japan's favour to a more manageable 20-to-1 last year, albeit still one of $700m. The gap is unlikely to be bridged in the foreseeable future, the sheer scale of Japan's prestige undertakings there works against that — Chiyoda Chemical Engineering and Construction earlier this year completed the West African nation's third and largest oil refinery in Kaduna State, where, too, Kobe Steel, already partner in one Nigerian steel production venture, holds a Federal Government contract to set up a ¥28,000m. steel-rolling mill at Katsina.

Nonetheless, one welcome imbalance-offsetting factor re-entered the reckoning this year, with resumption after a gap of some years of long-term Japanese imports of Nigerian crude oil. The first two announced contracts alone, for Idemitsu Kosan and Maruzen Oil, will bring in a daily $500,000 that should help balance the doubling of Japan's exports to the country in the first half of the year.

Oil, indeed, is assuming a progressively larger role in Japan's West African reckoning generally. Earlier Japanese attempts to develop Nigerian offshore deposits may have foundered for reasons of economic viability, but in Gabon the recent start of commercial production at Mitsubishi Petroleum Development's offshore joint venture with Elf-Gabon (it should be turning out some 8,000 barrels a day by next spring) was quickly followed by news of a further strike in a neighbouring field. In Zaire, too, Teikoku Oil added a second offshore find to Zaire Petroleum's Nibale field production this April.

These various ventures add a second energy string to Japan's West African bow: the first — uranium, with three Japanese-partnered undertakings in Niger alone expected to meet more than half of all Tokyo's uranium fuel needs by the late 1980s. The first, at Akouta, is already in production.

Elsewhere on the mining front, the raw material needs of Japanese industry — even in its mildly depressed state — provide a continuing market. Liberian iron ore shipments to Japan trebled last year to 357,438 tonnes, worth ¥2,010m., while Mauritanian mines supplied a further 695,792 tonnes (34.2 per cent up) that contributed ¥3,118m. to its overall ¥5,578m. sales to Japan. Processed copper sales brought Zaire ¥5,040m., ore and concentrates ¥8,995m. more.

Echoing Gabon's manganese ore upturn, Ghanaian shipments, too, swelled 48 per cent last year to ¥329m., while its aluminium exports to Japan rose 14 per cent to ¥8,810m., more than countering a 4.8 per cent slip to ¥14,353m. in the cocoa bean sales that have long earned Ghana trading surplus with Japan.

Doubtless providing Tokyo businessmen and politicians with a much-needed cup of something strong and black as they contemplate their problems elsewhere in the world, Ivory Coast upped its coffee bean sales to Japan by 13.2 per cent to ¥1,756m. — three-quarters of its entire 1979 export earnings from Japan — Cameroon coffee shipments rose 10 per cent to ¥2,055m.

Despite persistent deficits for a number of its West African trading partners — deficits that can, and have, been offset to some extent by economic co-operation and inward investment (there are close on 700 Japanese investment ventures in Africa as a whole, representing a financial commitment of more than $1,300m.) — relations remain largely friction free, as traders and diplomats go quietly about their respective business. Steady progress rather than spectacular developments marks the growth of two-way relations, and if the message in Tokyo continues to read All Quiet On The West African Front, Japan, for one, will not complain.

ZAMBIAN OFFICIAL SAYS CHIPATA WAS PART OF MALAWI

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 26 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

CHIPATA was once a part of Malawi, mayor of Blantyre, Mr Enos Chikwende, declared in Ndola yesterday

He said colonial boundaries had done a disservice to the people of Africa and that it was a result of these demarcations that Chipata was now in Zambia.

"If I remember correctly Chipata was at one time a part of Malawi," Mr Chikwende said.

Mr Chikwende was speaking at Savoy Hotel where his Ndola counterpart, Mr Julius Sakala held a luncheon for his delegation.

Blantyre and Ndola have been twin cities since 1973 and the delegation was here to take part in the 16th anniversary celebrations of Zambia's independence.

He was emphasising the feeling shared by many African leaders that boundaries between their countries were artificial and that the peole of Africa were actually one.

He suggested that there should be free movement between the people of Malawi and Zambia in order for them to learn from each other more.

Malawi's high commissioner to Zambia Mr Joseph Itimu recently rebuked people who spread rumours that his country "wants to grab part of Zambian territory."

He was commenting on reports that a border dispute existed between the two countries. Mr Itimu said lawyers from Malawi and Zambia had been detailed to define the border following suspicion that about two buildings belonging to the Zambian customs and immigration post were on Malawian soil.

He said before Europeans came to Africa there were no restrictions on people's movements and that it was hard for anyone to separate people

ETHIOPIAN ARMY REPORTED CAPTURING 39 'BANDITS' FROM SOMALIA

LD271858 Addis Ababa Domestic Service in Amharic 1700 GMT 27 Oct 80 EA

[Text] Thirty-nine bandits, trained and dispatched by officials of Somalia's ruling CL que to engage in subversion in revolutionary Ethiopia, surrendered together with their arms to the revolutionary army during the week. The bandits, who were equipped with small arms, heavy weapons and radio communication equipment, were forced to surrender when they realized that they had been tightly encircled by members of the revolutionary army and farmers in (Yerer) district. This fact was revealed by the bandits following their surrender.

The bandits had received thorough military training at the Abdelcader bandits training camp and had been sent to disturb the peace of the people of (Yerer) in particular and to engage in general subversion.

Comrade Brig Gen Demise Bulto, commander of the eastern command and alternate member of the Commission for Organizing the Party of the Workers of Ethiopia [COPWE] central committee, and Comrade Lt Col Worku Chernet, head of the Military Political Affairs of the eastern command and alternate member of the COPWE central committee, told the bandits that socialist Ethiopia is a peace-loving country which welcomes all who seek peace and regret their past mistakes. They added that the country has no wish to engage in senseless killings.

ZIMBABWEAN-ZAMBIAN UNITY--Zambia had paid dearly during the independence war in Zimbabwe, but the people of both countries were one, President Banana said last night. At a reception given by the Zambian High Commissioner to Zimbabwe, Mr Wamweni Mayondi, marking Zambia's 16th anniversary of independence, President Banana said: "They were indeed a frontline State. Zambia paid dearly and heavily for our independence. After all, our people are one people and the Zambezi River cannot divide us." Mr Mayondi said it was Zambia's first anniversary since "our sister country Zimbabwe has just won itself independence after a protracted and heroic struggle for freedom and independence." In a message to the Zambian High Commissioner, the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr Simon Muzenda, said there had always been contact between the peoples of Zambia and Zimbabwe. Co-operation between the two nations had "triumphed over human political prejudices" and had "survived all the obstacles nature and man could impose." FRENCH-CAR AID TO BIRAO--The French Army has begun an operation to airlift 60 tons of foodstuffs and medicines to the isolated, famine-stricken Birao region in the remote north-east corner of the Central African Republic. The French troops, who have remained in the country since the French-backed coup ousted Emperor Bokassa last year, set up an advance base yesterday at Birao, 800 km. (500 miles) from Bangui. The region borders on Chad and Sudan. Two C-160 Transall cargo planes, two Puma helicopters and six Landrovers will be used to get the food--manioc and millet--to Birao and on to Amdafok, on the Sudanese frontier, and to Boromata, on the Chad frontier. The Central African Army's role in the operation will be to transport 30 tons of millet from Bossangoa, in the western part of the country, 500 km. (300 miles) to Bangui, whence it will be moved to Birao. The plight of Birao first came to light five weeks ago, when reports reached here that more than 50 children had starved to death. The shortage of food was caused by locusts, an influx of refugees from the civil war in Chad and floods. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English 27 Oct 80 p 2152]

CONTROL OF UNIFIED NATION, ISSUE OF CIVIL WAR DISCUSSED

London WEST AFRICA in English (27 Oct 80 pp 2105, 2108)

[Text]

PRESIDENT STEVENS condemned foreign interference in the Chadian conflict during the latest meeting organised by the OAU to bring about a negotiated settlement to the fighting. Earlier, President Shagari had said to Col. Kamougue, the de facto ruler of southern Chad, that he must make every effort to see that the country remains united. The fear in this case is secession.

With such considerations in mind, not even the most optimistic participant at the meeting at Lomé on October 18 and 19 expected any encouraging outcome. In the event President Stevens left the following day, as did President Kerekou of Benin, and the conference was inconclusive. There is no evidence of either Hissen Habre and Goukhouni Woddeye having had any discussions during their brief stay in Lomé. There were even some doubts that Habre would make it. His arrival was delayed while an aircraft placed at his disposal in Garoua in northern Cameroon awaited his appearance from Chad. Mr. Edem Kodjo, Secretary General of the OAU, tried to paint a brighter picture of the summit saying that at Lomé neither Goukhouni nor Habre had "objected to a ceasefire in Chad."

French Help in South

While Habre has been holding his own in the conflict, with the help of arms from Egypt, Goukhouni, who is not without certain problems within his own alliance, has continued to insist that the only way to a solution is through military victory. In the south Col. Kamougue has failed to commit himself to the combat and every day that passes gives more the impression that he is happier remaining in control of a region that has remained relatively unscathed by the fighting and which, as growing evidence suggests, is enjoying the generosity of the French government to keep his economy ticking over (see West Africa September 29, 1980). The French government has permitted the French textile company, CFDT, which has large holdings in Chad to advance money to Cotonchad, the state cotton company, to pay farmers for their latest crop.

The French policies in Chad have taken an unusually indecisive turn. To support Habre openly is legally impossible since Habre has been sacked by the legally-recognised President of the Transitional Government of National Union, GUNT, which was created after the Lagos meetings in August, 1969. Kamougue has asked the French officially to revamp their co-operation programme in the south. The French insist that any financial or other aid that goes to the south has to be agreed to by President Goukhouni. The latter cannot disagree in that Kamougue remains the Vice-President of GUNT.

However, the government alliance is going through a shaky period. The obvious increase in Libyan material aid to the GUNT forces through Ahmat Acyl has increased the latter's leverage within GUNT and within the Revolutionary Council of FROLINAT. The appearance of a fighter which strafed the positions of Habre's Forces Armées du Nord two weeks ago has merely reinforced the view that Libyan activity is growing, though French military sources specify that there is no evidence of Libyan personnel in Chad.

The obvious effect has been to raise the level of intensity of the conflict to such a level that even the Internation committee of the Red Cross has been obliged to suspend its activities in the country (see West Africa, October 13 1980).

President Ahidjo of Cameroon has confirmed this by expressing concern both at the extent of arms smuggling through Cameroon and the escalation of the refugee problem in Cameroon since the latest intensification of fighting in N'Djamena. Already sheltering over 150,000 refugees in northern Cameroon, President Ahidjo is worried about the numbers and sophistication of arms that are being smuggled from Chad into Cameroon.

Unity Not An Issue

The south is ~~becoming a~~ separate entity. It is unlikely that the other, more serious factions, would permit such a separation becoming a legal reality. Quite apart from diplomatic pressures from other African countries to prevent such a move, the south has the wealth and the trained personnel which, as Goukhouni's followers will openly acknowledge, they do not have after a decade and a half of guerrilla warfare. The south, therefore, in Goukhouni's eyes, is an essential component in a unified Chad. Unity is no longer an issue; it is rather that of whose supporters will come to control the unified Chad.

The intricacies of northern antagonisms and alliances and their association with external supporters and the gradual detachment, for all practical purposes of the south, have led to more speculation as to what kind of constitutional structure is best for Chad. All Chadians who are drawn up against Hissen Habre maintain that there is no potential constitutional problem; the war is a legacy of the colonial era which has been aggravated by the personal ambitions of one personality, Hissen Habre. Habre is not interested in any federalism or secession. His ambition as experience suggests, is to have power in Chad and he has, so far, received enough support from sources as diverse as the French and Egyptians, as well as having well drilled forces, to give him the confidence to believe that there is a place for him in Chad.

INCREASED COAL-HANDLING CAPACITY FOR MAPUTO PORT

Johannesburg SUNDAY TIMES-BUSINESS TIMES in English 12 Oct 80 pp 1, 3

[Article by Penelope Morgan]

[Text]

MAPUTO harbour will be able to handle an additional 2,2-million tons of coal annually within a few months. This is the first stage of plans for $51,5-million extensions to Mozambique's major port.

Tenders, mostly from SA, for the R3-million interim alterations are being scrutinised at the moment and construction is expected to begin before the end of the year. Tenders for the rest of the plan, due for completion in about two years and with a capacity of around seven million tons, have come from all over the world.

The Maputo Harbour and Railways authorities aim to attract the coal exports from independent South African exporters who currently export through Durban, from Zimbabwe's Wankie mines, and perhaps from Zaire and other Southern African states.

Ferdinand Wilson, of the Maputo Harbours and Railways, is confident that if the SA authorities refuse to give permission for coal exports through Mozambique (he doubts that they will), the terminal will not suffer.

He claims that although SA is a major coal exporter other Southern African sources could keep the terminal at capacity. But sources within the coal-mining industry estimate that if no coal were forthcoming from SA the terminal would probably be forced to operate at only about half capacity. At present the harbour can handle batches of between 20 000 and 30 000 tons of coal per vessel.

Mr Wilson reckons that, because of the shorter rail link between Maputo and the Transvaal coal mines, railage costs will be lower than to Richards Bay. But he estimates that the Maputo route will cut costs by only about 5%.

Anticipating the extensions and in an effort to re-establish the port's good reputation, the Maputo Harbour and Railways authorities have launched an aggressive marketing plan. They hope to restore the harbour's 1973 operating levels by 1981.

They are adamant that the loading delays which have been a feature of the last few years are a thing of the past. Mr Wilson pointed out that exporters who are uneasy about the handling of their goods can provide personnel on the quayside to supervise loading. He quotes the SA Citrus Board as an example — it has personnel stationed in Maputo to handle fruit at the harbour's precooling plant, which is also due for expansion.

Mr Wilson said that the main problem facing the harbour authorities was the necessity of having to dredge the canal at the harbour entrance, but he added that a new Dutch dredger which would alleviate the problem had recently arrived at Maputo. Mozambique has also recently received four new tugs — one of which will go to Beira, the others staying at Maputo.

Meanwhile, the feasibility of expanding the harbour at Nacala is being investigated.

DECISION IS PENDING ON BOTSWANA-WALVIS RAIL LINK

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 24 Oct 80 p 1

[Article by Dave Pieters]

[Text]

FOR THE FIRST time, the issue of the long-awaited Trans-Kalahari railway line from Botswana to Walvis Bay has assumed the proportions of a practical, viable and economic project.

A final decision on the matter is expected in the immediate future — regardless of the nature of a political settlement in SWA.

The implementation of this far-reaching multi-million dollar project is based on a new feasibility study just completed and has become a colossal race within the present economic tug-of-war between the Southern African Development Co-ordinating Conference established last year by the Frontline States which favours Maputo as the port rail head, and the Constellation of Southern African States announced by the RSA this year.

The proposed route runs along 22.5 degrees SL, from Palapye through Gobabis and Okahandja ending in an offshore coal loading terminal at Walvis Bay.

Designed to transport 10 million tons of coal pa the railway will cost in the region of 800m dollars.

This was revealed to the Advertiser this week during an exclusive interview with Mr Des Mathews, local representative of the private consultants who led the consortium which conducted the latest study — R F Loxton, Hunting and Associates.

Calculated on the basis of large-scale exports of high-ash Botswana coal at a price well below 30 dollars per ton in 1978/9 — the railway is an strong economically viable project.

Projected returns on investments are increasing by the day, said Mr Mathews, since coal was fetching 35 dollars per ton at present and could be expected to reach 50 dollars per ton long before the line becomes operational.

The meeting with Mr Matthews was precipitated by a remark made recently at a symposium held in Johannesburg under the auspices of the National Development Management Foundation by Dr Lawrence McCrystal, a leading SA economist, in which he was quoted as saying that "a consortium is considering building a coal line from Botswana to Walvis Bay."

Because the matter was considered a political "hot potato", the Advertiser was referred from one quarter to the next, eventually landing at Mr Matthews who is highly informed on the confidential report.

Mr Mathews, who has been acquainted with all the studies conducted since as far back as the 1920's but especially since 1955, on various trans-Kalahari rail routes, explained why the matter had now assumed the proportions of a practical, viable economic development project for the first time.

● It had been decided within the Southern African Development Co-ordinating Conference, which was established to advise, develop and implement ways and means to reduce the Frontline States' economics dependence on SA, that Mocambique, charged with communication aspects in this design, would upgrade Maputo with a view to serve as a major coal exporting outlet for the sub-continent.

It was reported this month that Maputo would be ready to handle an additional 2,2m tons of coal per annum within a few months. There was a need therefore to move speedily with the development of the Walvis Bay route into Botswana.

● The present feasibility study has demonstrated that the Walvis Bay connection is economically viable and practically implementable immediately — even more so than in 1978 when it was started. This is in view of the higher coal prices resulting from the industrialized world's demand for coal in lieu of diminishing oil resources.

● The plan for the western route to Walvis Bay is completed while the feasibility of the Maputo connection undetermined.

● The western route is shorter, and traverses more suitable terrain.

● The biggest drawcard is the fact that the Walvis Bay route offers Botswana's President Quett Masire, who is also heads the SADCC, the earliest opportunity to transform his landlocked country into a net exporter for the first time.

According to Mr Mathews, the economic prospects of the Walvis Bay Palapye coal line are unshakable even on political grounds, and the five-year time scale involved in completion of the project, makes it necessary to presuppose a political settlement, and to commence with the construction of the route now.

MAPUTO, WALVIS BAY COMPETE FOR BOTSWANA COAL EXPORTS

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 24 Oct 80 pp 5-7

[Text]

THE CONSTRUCTION of the Walvis Bay to Botswana coal line will carry SWA and its neighbour to the brink of unprecedented national economic growth.

The advantages and spin-offs entailed in the development of the Palapye — Walvis Bay line and Botswana's coal-mining economy are numerous, not only for the two countries concerned, but for the entire sub-continent.

● Walvis Bay will immediately receive a 90m dollar shot in the arm which will filter into its domestic economy and create a valuable gestation period for its fish resources to recover while adding muscle to the viability of creating an international duty-free port. This in turn opens up new markets in the sub-continental hinterland for overseas imported manufactures directly instead of through SA.

● The construction of the line would be labour intensive and go a long way in absorbing undeemployed numbers in both countries.

● Botswana's cattle exporting industry would reach take off, as would its potential exports of soda-ash, base minerals, and power to SA.

● Zimbabwe and Zambia would be offered alternative export routes for their coal,

● The Kalahari would be able to accumulate capital for the development of a regional petrochemical industry.

● Coupled with envisaged southwards diversion of water from the Okavango system, Botswana would be able generate electric power for export with the possibility of electrification of the rail network.

● The existence of a high capacity ore-carrying line breaching SWA at its centre could lend itself in the future as an arterial from where to penetrate further deposits of uranium, iron ore, and tin with the present lack of infrastructure.

BACKGROUND

The idea of a trans-Kalahari railway line is certainly not a new one, and had haunted the minds of investors for at least a century.

In 1880, Germany, England, the Cape Colony and the Transvaal Republic engaged in a web of intrigue concerning the strategics of a railway connecting the west and east coasts.

Even before that, Cape traders and Republican Boers rivalled for what was then called the Great Missionary Road or the East-West Trade Route.

Since the 1920's, the idea of a rail link through Bechuanaland via the Caprivi and Okavango, and linking Rhodesia and the Union of SA networks had been considered.

Various schemes had been formulated on both sides of the Zambesi during the course of the past four decades but nobody was in a position to plan concretely for the reason that no detailed maps of the Kalahari and Ngamiland were available to aid the planning of a route in sufficient detail.

The final breakthrough appears to have occured during the 1970's.

In 1978, a local paper carried a report on the study initiated by an international team of geologists, civil engineers, economists and railway experts in which a rail link between Walvis Bay and Francistown featured prominently.

Zambia, Zaire, Rhodesia and Botswana would acquire access to the west coast along an additional route which would supplement the Tanzam line to the east and the Benguela line to the west.

What emerged in that report was the recognition that such a collossus would require multilateral economic investment which was reflected in the multinational composition of the consortium of consultants.

It would appear that the team led by Loxton, Hunting and Associates and upon whose research the present report (which is confidential) is based, is the same as reported on in 1978.

TRANSPORT

The development of coal mining ventures in SWA or Botswana is not possible without the development of a suitable transport infrastructure.

As far as the transport of the coal reserves mined in south western SWA and southern Botswana are concerned, rail links to SA ports are out of the question.

Cape Town, Richards Bay, Saldanha Bay, as well as Port Elizabeth and East London have not the spare handling facilities to cope with massive volumes entailed in a coal mining project of export proportions, and the SAR network in the Republic is currently running at full capacity.

Walvis Bay is therefore the logical conclusion, being the port nearest to the Kalahari coalfields.

The recent visit by Captain Joseph Fox, executive director of the American Maritime Officers Service based in Washington, to SWA at the invitation of the Proswa – Namibia Foundation, said in Windhoek recently that after a political settlement in SWA, American steamship companies would "dramatically increase" their usage of southern African ports to "load ore of various types."

It is significant that Captain Fox visited Walvis Bay during his brief visit to Territory.

Captain Fox is reported to have said that he represents 67 US steamship companies only two of which are presently active in the area.

BOTSWANA COAL

Botswana's total coal reserves have been estimated at an astronomical 30 000 million tons – enough for nearly 700 years if exported at a rate equivalent to SA's 44 million tons pa presently.

At 10 million tons per pa, the 2 500 million tons of known coal reserves, 900 of which are in situ at Morupule, for which the Palapye line is designed to carry each year, the project will pay for itself within five years.

POLITICS

Ironically, now that the western multinationals have collaborated successfully in producing a workable feasibility study, nationalist rivalry in the sub-continent has become the fly in the salf, which, if applied, would go a long way in fostering economic development in SA's northern neighbours.

The question of a trans-Kalahari railway has been locally described as a political "hot potato" because it has become embroiled in conflicting attempts at forging economic alliances, the one, Pan-Africanist, the other, Pan-South Africanist.

A spokesman for the SAR Public Relations Office in Johannesburg told the Advertiser that it known that the Botswana Government was looking into the matter of a proposed line. He pointed out that at present, Botswana's railways were operated by Zimbabwe, and that the SAR was not involved at this stage.

A spokesman for the Republic's Botswana desk at the Department of Foreign Affairs told the Advertiser that he had no knowledge of rumoured negotiations between the two governments on the proposed railway.

He said he was aware of the feasibility study just completed and added that it was "quite possible" that the Frontline States were active in attempting to secure the proposed project as part of their efforts to develop a transport system that was independent of SA, as spelt out in the Southern African Development Co-ordinating Conference.

Speaking at a recent symposium in Johannesburg, Dr Lawrence McCrystal a leading development economist in SA, sketched the facts of the matter as follows:

"Whatever may be said by politicians, the facts of economic life in Southern Africa are such that there exists a close inter-relatedness between the various countries of the sub-continent."

He then went on to say that "SA is economically so dominant that it is impossible for the other states in the region to ignore it.

"They will try to attain to some form of economic independence from SA but they will fail.

"The attempts by Zambia to free itself of SA's transport system and ports by building the railway line to Tanzania is just one example of the ongoing failure. The railway has never been a success since it first opened, for many reasons and Zambia, much to its mortification. . . had had to rely on SA for reliable and consistent transport of its imports and exports."

If Black Nationalist leaders in the sub-continent have their way with the present trans-Kalahari railway project, Maputo will be the rail head for Botswana's infant coal mining industry, and Walvis Bay will have had the race lost for it by the politicians, in the same way that they lost the race for Walvis Bay when it competed with Mocamedes a short while ago.

Economically, Maputo is at a disadvantage under the present circumstances. The factors favouring the westwards route from Botswana over the eastwards run through Zimbabwe have been mentioned.

Perhaps the most important ones to be emphasised are the following:

- The Palapye Walvis Bay line study took two years to complete at considerable financial cost to the consortium of consultants. Why should they spend another 'X' amount of dollars to repeat the process along the eastern corridor?
- Mocambique is not a member of the World Bank nor the Lome Convention;
- The Zimbabwe and Mocambique railway systems are already relatively congested.
- Efficient management of a highly-geared ore line such as this one is crucial for the success of the entire operation, and either way, the SAR are going to end up managing the system, whether at Walvis Bay or at Maputo. The SAR is already running the show at both ends:
- The route to Walvis Bay is shorter and traverses more favourable terrain;
- Walvis Bay is presently grossly underutilized as a result of the depressed state of the fishing industry and the introduction of containerisation.

It is an unfortunate contradiction, however that Walvis Bay has so many plus points for it technically, but is the least favoured politically.

The time scale in which a political settlement is presently foreseen for SWA by both pro- and anti-Swapo elements runs at about five years.

For Botswana's President Masire, Walvis Bay is an easier decision, and financially the more attractive.

For Sam Nujoma, it is unnecessary to deny SWA further development in order to return home in five years as he is destined to do anyway, and illogical to want to return to a Namibia that is so much less developed.

In the medium term, both Mocambique and SWA will both be connected to Botswana coal and cattle resources by rail. This is an inevitable pronoucement of growing world demand for both commodities.

International big capital will land up financing the complete rail system joining the sub-continent's east and west coasts eventually and African nationalists are sure to recognize this.

The economics of bread and butter faultlessly prevails over polemics and hot air, and it is logical for history to follow the path of least resistence.

Since history is hardly ever logical, however, Southwesters and Mocambicans can only hold their thumbs.

On whichever side the steel Behemoth rests its weary foot first, Botswana will at last be in the shade.

In order to prevent the Eastern Bloc from pulling the carpet from under its Behemoth while balanced so precariously, the Western multinationals will soon have to rest the other foot firmly on the ground as well.

SWAPO DEATHS--Windhoek--The SWA Territory Force and South African forces killed 28 SWAPO terrorists and Angolan Government MPLA soldiers in a raid into Angola on Monday, Brigadier Willie Meyer, Second in Command of the SWA Territory Force, disclosed in Windhoek. Brigadier Meyer did not disclose how many of the dead had been MPLA soldiers. In a statement, he said the SA and SWA Forces had attacked a SWAPO base in southern Angola, north of Kaokoland in northwestern SWA on Monday. The MPLA soldiers killed in the incident had become embroiled in the fighting. A large quantity of arms and ammunition was destroyed, Brigadier Meyer said. All SA and SWA soldiers had returned safely to base. "It is a pity that the MPLA soldiers were, in spite of repeated warnings, still cooperating with SWAPO," Brigadier Meyer said. "They will, therefore, now have to bear the consequences." Brigadier Meyer said he wished to emphasise that the SWATF had no wish to become involved in skirmishes with the MPLA forces. "It is trusted that they will now stop giving aid and cooperation to SWAPO," he said. [Text] [Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 22 Oct 80 p 1]

BULGARIA AIDS KANO INDUSTRY--The Kano State Government has reached a number of agreements with Bulgaria. Under the pacts, Bulgaria will help in the implementation of the state's rural electrification project, as well as with the establishment of pharmaceutical and fertilizer manufacturing companies. The state governor, Alhadji Mohamed Abubakar Rimi, and the Bulgarian deputy prime minister, Mr Andrey Lukanov, concluded the accord during their talks in Kano. Alhadji Hohamed told the Bulgarian deputy prime minister that the fertilizer manufacturing company would ensure adequate and prompt supply of the commodity to farmers as a means of stepping up agriculture. MILITARY REPRESENTATION INCREASE--Nigeria's military representation in other countries is to be increased. This was disclosed by the minister of defense, Professor Iya Abubakar while exchanging views in Lagos with the ambassador of the German Democratic Republic to Nigeria, Dr (Wulf) Schunke. Professor Abubakar stated that Nigeria was also prepared to protect her sovereignty against external attacks. The ambassador had earlier called for stronger military ties between both countries. ECONOMIC COUNCIL CRITICIZED--The leader of the House of Representatives, Alhaji Yinusa Kaltungo, has accused members of the NEC [National Economic Council] of politicizing the council and making it a forum for character assassination. He told the new agency of Nigeria in Kaltungo that the governors have spent the past year deliberating on salaries for public office holders instead of advising the president on the economic affairs of the country. Alhaji Yinusa described as wrong and unconstitutional the salaries fixed at the last all-party meetings to fix remunerations for public officers. He said interested parties should have directed their members to sponsor motions on the issue in the National Assembly. On the appointment of presidential liaison officers, Alhaji Yinusa contended that the country needed them as links between the federal and state governments, adding that they were not in any state to interfere with administration. SENGHOR DISCUSSES PROBLEMS OF NORTH-SOUTH DIALOGUE

Paris L'UNITE in French 10 Oct 80 p 5

[Exclusive Interview with President Leopold Sedar Senghor, by Guy Perrimond: "North-South: An Increasingly Unequal Exchange. President Senghor's Solemn Call to Stop the Deterioration of Exchange Conditions Which Makes It Possible for Developed Countries to Get Richer at the Expense of the Poorest Countries"; date and place not given]

[Text] [Question] How did you like the UN special meeting on North-South problems which has just ended?

[Answer] The extraordinary UN conference on the North-South dialogue has ended in a half-failure, just as the Paris and New Delhi conferences before it, not to mention the conference on desert extension.

The essential cause for this succession of half-failures--I do not wish to be too severe--is essentially the result of the selfishness of developed countries and their lack of political will. It is true that developing countries have often lacked skilfulness and, especially, moderation.

To come back to the United Nations, they have not considered any of the fundamental problems of the "North-South dialogue": neither energy, nor currency, nor finances, nor aid to development. Once again, the solution has been postponed until a new North-South conference is held in 1981. Even the draft resolution concerning the third decade of development, it too, has been referred to the ordinary session which is now in progress.

[Question] In your opinion, what are the most urgent problems of the South: energy, demography, debts, etc.? What are those for which a solution could conceivably be found soon?

[Answer] The most urgent problem is that of the Third World's debts. From 64 billion dollars in 1971, its total debt has increased to 376 billions in 1979. I need not comment on these figures.

As far as energy is concerned, taking the example of Senegal, our oil bill has increased tenfold during the 6 years from 1973 to 1979; it increased from 100 million French francs to 1 billion.

Third problem: demography. In Black Africa, the population doubles approximately every 20 years but, because of the "deterioration of exchange conditions"--I shall come back on this later on--the per capita income increased only by .2 percent during the decade ending in 1980.

It would be possible to start solving the energy problem at the ordinary session of the United Nations, in 1981 at the latest, by pegging oil prices and the prices for other raw materials supplied by the Third World to the prices charged by developed countries for goods and services.

[Question] Can the European socialist movement offer prospects to the countries of the South, and which prospects? Is it possible to imagine a course of action which would prevent countries in the South from having to chose between the two main cultural, economic and political models which the West and the East are offering?

[Answer] In his latest and remarkable book entitled "Les Orangers du Lac Balaton," Prof Maurice Duverger mentions a "third road" which would be that of European socialists, whether or not they call themselves "democrats." I told him last week that we, African socialists, were looking for a fourth road in matters of culture, economy and policy.

With respect to culture, let us take once more the example of Senegal; since independence, we have created not only a new French-language literature, but also a new way of painting, a new sculpture, a new art of tapestry, and we are now creating a new music, a new dance, a new architecture, a new philosophy. Already before independence, we were busy taking up roots in the values of Negritude so that we could open up to the life-giving values from other continents and other nations, first of all those of Mediterranean countries.

As far as economy is concerned, democratic socialism, to us, consists essentially in using the latest scientific and technological discoveries to increase the production of economic goods, and that of spiritual goods as well. All the more so as, as we have been saying for a long time, it is impossible to solve economic problems if you neglect their cultural aspect. This is what the World Bank has just confirmed.

In the rural sector, we have nationalized 95 percent of the land; we have come back to the old Negro-African tenure system which establishes the right of the farmers to use, but not to own, the lands which they cultivate.

In the secondary and tertiary sectors, next to public establishments of an industrial or commercial character--water supply, ports, telecommunications, etc.--we have created semi-public corporations in the leading branches such as energy and the mines.

Above all this, there is policy, as the ancient Greeks understood it, i.e. the management of human society so as to make men not only more prosperous, but better and happier. This is where democratic pluralism and the separation of the three powers--executive, legislative and judicial--play a part.

The results are there. There has been no miracle, but there has been progress in all domains since, in spite of 10 years of drought out of 20, per capita income in Senegal has increased from 160 dollars in 1960 to 463 dollars in 1978, according to the World Bank. As for culture and education, we have multiplied the number of students in primary schools by 4, that of students in secondary schools by 10, and by 13 that of university students.

In summary, we, African socialists--the example of Tunisia would be just as pertinent, if not more so--are trying to work out a fourth road which differs from the European third road in that it is rooted in the complementary cultural values of Arabity and Negritude. We have given priority to "animal needs," to economic and financial problems, but primacy to culture, in accordance with the thought of Karl Marx himself.

As a matter of fact, in a posthumous text entitled "Le Travail Aliene" [Alinenated Work], published in the March 1948 issue of REVUE SOCIALISTE DE PARIS, Marx writes that, after "animal needs" have been satisfied, the "generic activity" of man, human activity, is to "create works of beauty." Too many socialists keep forgetting this fundamental thought of Marx.

[Question] What concrete proposals could the European socialist movement prepare--for instance through European institutions or through cooperatives--until a global North-South negotiation becomes possible, to improve the lot of countries in the South through cultural and economic exchanges which, at last, would be egalitarian?

[Answer] These are the proposals which I intend to submit in the conclusion of my Introductory Report to the next congress of the Socialist Internationale.

If it wishes to fulfil its "humanist" mission, it should, first of all, tackle the question of aid to the Third World. Developed countries had promised that they would give each year 1 percent, later on .7 percent of their domestic gross product for this aid. At present, they are giving approximately .35 percent, i.e. only half of that. And the two superpowers distinguish themselves by the moderateness of their aid: .25 percent for the United States, .04 percent for the USSR.

However, what developing countries are mainly complaining about is the deterioration of exchange conditions which makes it possible for developed countries to get richer at the expense of the poorest countries. The World Bank has calculated that from 1952 to 1972, this deterioration, on the average, amounted to 2.5 percent. And specialists of the Third World have calculated that, since the first oil shock in 1974, this deterioration has amounted to between 10 and 20 percent.

The only effective way of lessening this deterioration, if we cannot put an end to it, is, as I have said above, to peg the prices of raw materials, oil included, to the prices charged by developed countries for goods and services.

We must, however, do more than that. In a recent book entitled "Why Are They So Poor?", Rudolf Strahm, a German Swiss, maintains that the 34 billion dollars supplied by developed countries in 1974 as an aid to developing countries represented only one third of the deterioration of exchange conditions. Therefore, more should be done and a tax should be levied on the defence or military budgets of all countries, developed or developing. At the extraordinary UN conference on disarmament, I suggested a 5 percent tax. The Socialist Internationale has accepted the principle of such a tax.

In conclusion, the Socialist Internationale, at its next congress, should adopt these proposals and refine them. Above all, socialist governments should put forward these proposals at the next UN North-South conference, in order to have them adopted definitively.

FOREIGN MINISTER SPEAKS AT DINNER FOR DIPLOMATS

AB271132 Kinshasa AZAP in French 1140 GMT 26 Oct 80

[Text] Kinshasa, 26 October (AZAP)--Citizen Inonga Lokonga Lome, state commissioner for foreign affairs and international cooperation, spoke about Zaire's foreign policy and the world situation at a dinner he held on Saturday evening for heads of diplomatic missions accredited to Zaire to mark his assumption of duty.

Speaking of his functions, citizen Inonga recalled that according to the constitution, international affairs are [words indistinct] in his capacity as the authentic representative of the Zairian people. It is therefore on these lines that he will strive, together with the heads of the diplomatic missions, to develop further the cooperation that exists between Zaire and the nations they represent.

He said: Iraq and Iran, two brother countries and members of the nonaligned movement, are at war with each other, thus jeopardizing the already precarious balance in the region, where the superpowers watch over their interests. Afghanistan and Kampuchea, two independent countries continue to be occupied by military powers in spite of UN resolutions. In the Middle East, the hopes for peace raised by the Camp David accords are likely to fade away because of the Israeli policy of establishing Jewish settlements on Palestinian Arab lands and because of the unilateral measures adopted by the Israeli Government to annex the holy city of Jerusalem.

In Central Africa, he continued, Chad, which is one of Zaire's neighbors, is experiencing a human drama in the sight of all. The same situation prevails in Southern Africa, where South Africa continues to hold Namibia under the colonial yoke and to mock the world community by its stubbornness and its insolence.

In regard to world security, he deplored the unrestrained arms race, especially the race for nuclear armaments, which increases the threat to peace and world security.

Concerning the steps taken to establish a new world order he referred bitterly to the failure of the north-south dialogue and that of the 11th extraordinary session of the UN General Assembly on the new economic order. This situation has allowed monetary disorder and the fluctuations in the prices of raw materials to continue. At the same time, the costliness of oil has affected fragile young national economies in such a way that they merely function at minimum capacity in order to survive, while the industrial countries' economies face the task of fighting against waste.

In spite of this panorama, which only creates worries and fears, citizen Inonga feels that one must once more believe that humanity will stop wandering by facing its historical responsibilities, because its survival is at stake.

Next he recalled Zaire's foreign policy and reaffirmed that Zaire intends to pursue her usual foreign policy and that it would therefore be superfluous to outline it. But he added that Zaire most ardently wishes that the United Nations would gain more authority whenever the occasion arises to impose its resolutions instead of allowing them to become ineffective.

On the regional level, citizen Inonga reaffirmed the policy of good-neighborliness, which remains the main line of action of the country. Zaire intends to create a security belt to safeguard its most objective economic interests and to give priority to the fraternal ties between its people and those with whom it shares common borders.

To illustrate Zaire's African role he recalled the positive role played by the country in the (?adoption) of the Lancaster House accords in London which led Zimbabwe to independence, to the satisfaction of all today.

Finally citizen Inonga urged the heads of the diplomatic missions to be the faithful interpreters of Zaire to their respective governments.

In his remarks the vicedean of the diplomatic corps, Moroccan Ambassador Mr 'Abd al-Wahhab Chorfi, reaffirmed the commitment of the nations represented by their diplomatic missions in Zaire to the promotion of cooperation between them and Zaire.

EDF AID--Two financing agreements in favor of Zaire were signed on Thursday at the Department of Foreign Affairs and International Cooperation between the executive council and the European Economic Commission. Under the first agreement, the EDF (European Development Fund) grants the executive council nonrefundable aid of 32 million zaires for purchasing materials and equipment, agricultural tools, spare parts and chemical products for the cotton sector. The second agreement concerns the expansion of the Kinshasa farming area to increase family foodstuff production and reduce food shortages in the Kinshasa urban area. The total area involved is about 3,000 hectares, of which 185 hectares are under irrigation or for fish breeding and 585 hectares are for orchards. The cost of the project, which is to last 3 years, is estimated at more than 31 million zaires. Under the second accord, the European community will grant aid of more than 19 million zaires to the executive council. [AB261049 Kinshasa AZAP in French 1125 GMT 24 Oct 80]

SIXTEENTH ANNIVERSARY OF INDEPENDENCE OBSERVED

Kaunda Lays Wreath

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 26 Oct 80 p 7

[Text]

ZAMBIANS celebrated the 16th Independence anniversary in a jovial mood at sports centres and political rallies despite imposition of the curfew in some parts of the country.

In Lusaka, President Kaunda led the nation in remembering Zambia's fallen heroes when he laid a wreath at the Freedom Statue along Independence Avenue on Friday.

Patriotic songs played by the Zambia defence force band filled the air as Dr Kaunda and heads of diplomatic missions in Zambia placed wreaths at the statue.

The moving ceremony was attended by Party Secretary-General Mr Mainza Chona, Prime Minister, Mr Daniel Lisulo, Secretary for Defence, and Security, Mr Grey Zulu, members of the Central Committee and Cabinet ministers.

Zambians should continue with determination to fight poverty, ignorance, disease, crime, corruption and exploitation of man by man which are becoming rife in the society, Southern Province member of the Central Committee, Mr Mungoni Liso, said on Friday.

Addressing an independence anniversary rally at Livingstone's Villa ground, he said the fight to overcome these evils was tougher than that against a foreign government.

He said: "From now on, we are fighting the corrupt, the criminals, the lazy bones and people who reap where they did not sow. In this struggle, our only weapon is our determination and our own efforts."

Copperbelt political secretary Mr Cox Sikumba called on people in the province to rally behind President Kaunda's leadership for continued peace and stability in the nation.

Mr Sikumba, speaking at a rally at Freedom Park in Kitwe, attacked people engaged in power struggles.

He said those with ambition for leadership should wait for their time to come.

North-Western Central Committee member Mr Fines Liboma, has paid tribute to civil servants who handled the recent census and Party elections despite financial hardships and lack of transport.

He said the two exercises could not have succeeded had it not been for the patience of civil servants who worked tirelessly sometimes without subsistance allowances.

Mr Liboma was speaking at an independence anniversary reception.

Meanwhile, the German Democratic Republic (GDR) and Bulgaria have paid tribute to Zambia for her efforts to develop the economy and her contribution to the liberation of Southern Africa.

The leading German daily Neues Deutschland said the GDR appreciated Zambia's great contribution to the African liberation.

The Bulgarian Committee for Solidarity wished Zambia further success in strengthening her national economy and independence.

Egyptian president Anwar Sadat prayed for the wise and peaceful leadership of Dr Kaunda to continue.

President Sadat also hoped that the friendly relations and cooperation that exist between the two countries would grow.

Guyana President Forbes Burnham pledged his country's total support to Zambia in her stand on the liberation struggle in Southern Africa.

Malawi President Kamuzu Banda said he was more than convinced that the brotherly relations between the two countries based on partnership and mutual understanding would continue to grow for the benefit of Malawians and Zambians. — Sunday Times Reporter/Zana.

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 26 Oct 80 pp 1, 7

[Text]

ZAMBIA has just celebrated her 16th anniversary of independence. This year's celebrations were particularly significant as they were held in an atmosphere of peace as neighbouring Zimbabwe (formerly Rhodesia) has after a heroic struggle achieved majority rule.

But in the aftermath of the euphoria caused by last Friday's celebrations, there are a number of tasks and challenges which the Party and its Government must tackle.

Often during independence anniversary celebrations praises are heaped on the leaders. This admittedly is because of the political achievements of the ruling clique. Equally while no one disputes that President Kaunda and his colleagues have achieved much it would be sychophantic for one not to look at the failures of the Party.

For instance the provision of social services to the mass of the people has yet to be met satisfactorily. During last week's independence celebrations there was the announcement by the governor's office in Lusaka that residents of Kaunda Square site and service scheme would for the first time be visited by cinema vans from the Zambia Information Services (ZIS).

Invariably the residents were shown propaganda films depicting the achievements of the Party and its Government.

But one is tempted to ask: Shouldn't these activities — film shows — be routine in the townships? As much as the colonial government was iniquitous, your correspondent still remembers that the Northern Rhodesia Information Services did frequently feature black stars such as the late Alick Nkhata quartet and the then Southern Rhodesian soccer maestro, Dusty King, when showing films in Chiwempala township.

Over the past 16 years it apparently has been the trend among top leaders to exhort self-reliance projects during Humanism Week (sic). One suspects that this is done with a view to catching the eye of the Press. Why can't leaders work quietly? Imagine a situation in which every general manager has to invite the Press when he or she meets a client.

Dedication to developmental efforts, this includes self-help projects, should be expected of every leader every day of the year if the public is to stop asking whether the objective behind October 24 celebrations is only symbolic hard work and doubting the continuing successes of the Party.

During the past 16 years UNIP's record in Government has not all been success. Notable had been the failure of the Government to meet the country's food production requirements. The back to the land programme was a disaster just like the ambitious programme to provide every Zambian with an egg for breakfast.

Zambia's agricultural hopes are now pinned on the recently announced K400 million food production plan. But Zambia's dismal performance in the agricultural sector is shared by other African countries.

The World Bank has this to say: "During the late 1960s and early 1970s the growth rate of agricultural production output grew by less than one per cent and this deceleration is reflected in both food and cash production. The disappointing performance of agriculture is at the heart of development problems in Eastern Africa.

"To make agriculture a dynamic sector requires several ingredients — proven technical packages that have been adapted to local conditions, a timely availability of inputs, effective extension services, a reasonable relation between prices paid for agricultural inputs and received for crops by farmers, a stock of consumer goods whose availability acts to spur increased productivity — the combination of which, in many places (Zambia included) it has not been possible to secure and sustain."

Cut down

It would therefore appear that save for the floods, over which no government has control, the challenge during the next decade will be for the nation to rise and produce food for itself and cut down on imports.

This again will require all potential productive sectors in the country to double their efforts. The Party will have to change thinking that traditional rulers are there only to solve divorce cases. Chiefs, Party regional secretaries and the ubiquitous governors, rather than denounce "reactionaries", must be seen to work and encourage people to grow food.

One school of thought has it that town planners should provide land in the townships on which those interested to take up farming can do so. Large tracts of land should be demarcated within the municipalities on which agricultural experts can demonstrate farming techniques. Inevitably this could eventually lead to "retirees" having the expertise to till land.

In all this, where do the masses come in? Logically after independence expectations were high among Zambians. Sixteen years after the masses' wishes have yet to be satisfied. They want the goods to be delivered. The overriding factor and platform of Party leaders during those hey-days of the Cha cha cha struggle was to rid the country of what was resented most in colonialism: humiliation, exploitation and the misery and degredation which was usually associated with British imperialism and rule.

Politically Zambia has overcome these. But questionable is whether the masses' expectations have been met. As controversial former UN expert Tibor Mendes has put it elsewhere:

"Once gone colonialism left behind a mere facade of ambition. For the vast majority (people) independence was synonymous with the end of imposed constraints and a return to the traditional patterns of living and poverty."

But for Zambia one can say that while the Party should not be avalanched by kudos, President Kaunda and his colleagues must grudgingly be given praise. On the positive side there has been increased free medical, educational and training as well as employment opportunities which have been brought to all with the advent of independence. The Government has attached high value to this aspect of development.

According to a recent report by the World Health Organisation (WHO) in 1960 life expectancy was less than 40 years in more than ten countries of which Zambia is included. But report says that major improvements have taken place in the health sector in this country to the extent that the average life span has now (for Zambia) been increased by ten years.

This, therefore, means, according to the WHO, life expectancy in Zambia is now 50 years both for male and female while during the same period the infant mortality rate per thousand children born has dropped from 36 to 23. Mr Rajah Kunda, Minister of Health has cause to smile over these figures. To some extent they go a long way to illustrate improvements in the health services. Whether the workers there are polite is another matter.

Crime

But even as the rhetorical praise resounds in the ears of top UNIP brass, there is no doubt that more has to be done. Not only by the leaders themselves but the ordinary Zambians themselves. For example there should be more concerted effort to contain crime which has reached alarming proportions.

Probably there is no graphic indicator of Zambia's precarious security situation than the curfew which was announced last Thursday. Hopefully it might yield results.

Therefore challenges ahead must be fully met. As President Kaunda put it when addressing the nation on the eve of Zambia's tenth anniversary of independence in 1974:

"Today's freedom fighter and the architect of the Zambia of tomorrow is not a paper revolutionary whose militancy is characterised by rhetoric or abusive language. But a practical and productive individual in town or the village."

President Kaunda must crack his whip and see to it that next year while Zambians celebrate October 24 they will be bouncing on full tummies of white maize and not the yellow imported stuff.

MINISTRIES ORDERED TO CURB WASTE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 24 Oct 80 p 1

[Text] President Kaunda has banned the misuse of Government property with immediate effect.

He has also ordered Government officials to stop their habit of going out on "meaningless tours" just to get subsistence allowance.

The ban which was announced yesterday is contained in a circular sent to Party Secretary-General Mr Mainza Chona; Prime Minister Mr Daniel Lisulo; Secretary of State for Defence and Security Mr Grey Zulu; members of the Central Committee; all ministers, provincial political secretaries and district governors to coincide with the 16th Independence anniversary.

The measure is aimed at saving funds for the successful implementation of the "operation food programme."

And last night, the President called for greater effort by Zambians to grow more food. He said this when he received a basket of fruits from Pamodzi Hotel as an Independence day gift presented to him by food and beverages manager Mr Francois Claessens.

Dr Kaunda says in the circular that for a long time he has noted with dismay and concern the wastage of Party and Government expenditure on stationery, office furniture, fuel and oils by ministries, departments and Government institutions.

This wastage has been "alarmingly too high," he says, adding that the demand for these items from the Government Printer, Government Stores and other establishments where they are supplied in bulk is so high that it is no longer possible to meet all the requisitions immediately as was the case in the past.

"It is clear, however, that the high demand is not due to the expansion in the public service operations but rather to the great wastage that goes on unabated in all public offices," he says.

This wasteful expenditure is largely due to indifference, negligence and negative attitude towards public property.

"I want it checked and brought to an end forthwith. There should be complete reversal in the customary attitude towards Government property," he says.

As a result of world inflation, Zambia's economy was experiencing some difficulties which were well known by everybody "and hence the great need to institute stringent measures in reducing wastage in your offices and in particular in the manner you handle public property."

He has directed the officials to design measures and procedures to reduce unnecessary expenditure.

The President says new envelopes should only be used for classified correspondence including mail addressed to private business concerns and our missions abroad. In all other cases, old envelopes should be used.

Typing papers should be strictly used because it was an expensive and high quality paper which should at no time be used on private mail.

He said now that genuine peace was returning to the region all efforts should be concentrated on the development of the nation in accordance with the policies of the Party and the philosophy of Humanism.

To achieve this, the nation would need every ngwee in its coffers. "We therefore need to plug all loopholes enumerated above and any others. We should develop exemplary customary attitudes," he added.

He revealed that indifference to Party and Government property by those using it had cost the State millions of Kwacha in repairs and premature replacement of vehicles.

PARTY OFFICIAL CLAIMS 'SABOTEURS' TRANSMIT THROUGH CENTRAL PROVINCE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 26 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

CENTRAL Province is the transit centre for saboteurs and enemies of the country because of its geographical position, Central Committee member for the province, Mr Pius Kasutu, said in Kabwe.

Addressing an Independence rally on Friday, Mr Kasutu called for unity and security consciousness to flush out undesirable elements.

He said that Zambia had passed through a difficult period and the intensification of the freedom war in Zimbabwe had resulted in the worsening of the security situation.

Mr Kasutu said that the province had experienced damage to property and loss of life when rebel commandos blew up the Lunsemfwa rail and road bridges including air raids in the Kampumba, Lunsemfwa and Mulungushi power station areas.

He informed the rally at the Zambia Railway football ground that although liberation wars appeared to have ended with the attainment of independence in Mozambique, Angola and Zimbabwe, there was need to tighten up security.

"It is imperative that vigilance and security consciousness be maintained at all times because the province is a transit centre for saboteurs and enemies," he said.

It was for this reason that the "operation clean-up" was launched to ensure that peace and stability which people enjoyed for the past 16 years continued.

Mr Kasutu said UNIP had continued to be popular and strong in the province and that the recent Party elections were peaceful.

The elections were crucial to the Party's decision to take power to the people

MUZ WARNED AGAINST OPPOSING UNIP

Lusaka ZAMBIA DAILY MAIL in English 27 Oct 80 p 1

[Text] Kululushi governor, Mr Morgan Simwinji, has warned Mineworkers' Union of Zambia (MUZ) officials to stop working against UNIP and refrain from intimidating Party cadres or face expulsion from the Party.

Mr Simwinji told more than 50 MUZ officials, who contested the recent Party ward elections in Kalulushi that the District Political Committee would expel from Party any MUZ official who tried to intimidate UNIP members.

"UNIP is capable of banning MUZ and the entire labour movement if it desires, and this should serve as a warning," he said.

He said the District Political Committee was empowered to expel anyone who was anti-Party and Government as some of the MUZ officials had shown in recent days.

UNIP, the governor pointed out, was capable of bulldozing its way through any obstacle, and he warned that he was giving a chance to some of those MUZ officials who thought their union was more important than the Party.

He warned that MUZ officials who thought UNIP was "toothless" and felt they could intimidate Party cadres at will, were in for a rude shock because the Party could bite, and it was capable of bulldozing its way through any hurdles.

Those MUZ officials in Kalulushi who were not prepared to turn over a new leaf and repent after several warnings would be in trouble with him, and when he decided to drive the "political caterpillar" himself, he would bulldoze them off the road and crush them ruthlessly.

"I am giving you a timely warning to stop harassing and intimidating UNIP members that I am capable of bulldozing dissidents from our way," he warned.

He called on those MUZ officials who had won the elections to stick to the Party because even if they were kicked out from the MUZ, UNIP would look after them.

Mr Simwinji said he had a session of "important talks" with the Roan Consolidated Copper Mines (RCM) Chibuluma Division general manager, Mr Leonard Mabson, and he was assured that the mines would keep the MUZ officials who would be kicked out of the union.

"UNIP will ensure that your jobs are safe. What you should know is that UNIP is mother of all the organisations in the country. There cannot be any MUZ or labour movement if UNIP does not want," he warned.

Mr Simwinji also announced that two MUZ officials, namely Mr E.K. Chimfwembe, a Chambeshi Ward chairman and Mr Philip Makesa, a vice-chairman for Kalulushi Ward, had written to him resigning from Party posts.

But, he said, he was not allowing them to resign because the people who elected them had shown confidence in them.

The governor attacked some Members of Parliament for saying that governors were hand-picked because governors were appointed by the President by virtue of the powers vested in the head of state.

"It pains me to hear some politicians say that governors are hand-picked. We are not hand-picked. The President appoints us under the constitution of the land," he said.

Commenting on Mr Simwinji's threat to have anti-Party and Government MUZ officials expelled from the Party by the Kalulushi District Political Committee, Zambia Congress of Trade Unions secretary general, Mr Newstead Zimba, said the labour movement could not be used as a scapegoat for other people's wrong doings.

Mr Zimba said ZCTU was an organisation just like UNIP was an organisation, and the only difference was that ZCTU represents the workers in employment whereas UNIP was responsible for the running of the country.

He said there were too many spokesman for UNIP, and all governors had been shouting their heads off instead of waiting for high authorities to answer to the ZCTU's recent petition to the Secretary-General.

"We do not deal in imaginations. Last time we were labelled as counter-revolutionaries. And now we have been accused of having political motives in sending that petition to the Secretary-General of the Party. We are not politicians," he argued.

Mr Zimba said the ZCTU was not against the Local Government Bill, but were interested in discussing decentralisation, and fortunately the high authorities had admitted some of the things concerning decentralisation were wrong.

He called on all national trade unions to be ready for an emergency ZCTU general council to discuss a letter from the Secretary-General of the Party, Mr Mainza Chona.

POLICE ARREST CURFEW VIOLATORS; 'TIMES' COMMENTS ON IMPACT

633 Arrested

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 27 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

POLICE have arrested 633 curfew breakers in all the affected areas since President Kaunda declared the dusk-to-dawn order last Thursday.

Inspector-General of police, Mr Crispin Katukula, said in Lusaka yesterday that of this number, 44 people were picked up in the capital.

But he said people had been cooperative with the law enforcement agencies and were keeping indoors by 19 hours as required by the law during the curfew.

President Kaunda declared the curfew under the Preservation of Public Regulations for an indefinite period.

The curfew, which starts from 19.00 hours to 06 hours covers Kafue, Lusaka, Mumbwa, Kabwe Urban and Kabwe Rural, Keembe, Chisamba, Kapiri Mposhi and all Copperbelt towns, including Ndola Rural.

Mr Katukula said the curfew order stipulated that everybody must be indoors by 19 hours and "it is an offence to sit in your verandah because you are not indoors and police can pick you up for breaking the order."

Arrested curfew breakers have the option of paying a K20 admission of guilt fine. Those who cannot pay are taken to court where they are charged with breaking the order.

Mr Katukula said police were continuing with the "operation clean-up" despite the curfew.

"To us, the curfew is part of the operation and they are more or less the same," he said.

In Kalulushi, Copperbelt Central Committee member, Mr Shadreck Soko warned that the crime wave in the country was politically motivated and was aimed at toppling the Government.

Addressing a rally at Kalulushi Independence Stadium yesterday, Mr Soko said the crimes were organised to create mistrust against the present leadership.

There were some Zambians who were collaborating with enemies outside the country so that after achieving their desired goal, they would call their colleagues to help them rule Zambia, the Central Committee member claimed.

"Even journalists will be replaced once the Zambian collaborators take over. They think that newsmen are part of the present Government," he said.

Mr Soko added that those who opposed the present Government and its philosophy of Humanism were the same people who wanted the wealth of the country to be concentrated in a few hands.

Although some of these disgruntled people did not like President Kaunda, they should admit that he had led Zambia for 16 years without war.

Concern

"We still need his leadership," Mr Soko said.

In Kabwe, Central Province Central Committee member, Mr Pius Kasutu expressed concern at the apparent struggle for power in the country.

He warned that people would gain nothing from squabbles because what was important was for them to maintain peace and stability in the nation.

Speaking at a reception to mark the 16th Independence anniversary, Mr Kasutu said people must be law-abiding citizens as they had been in the past.

"I appeal for peace without which Zambia will not survive. Of late, I have noticed a struggle for power in this country.

"If we continue with peace, we shall achieve so many things including social and economic development. Without peace, we shall never enjoy social amenities we are having now," he added.

The Central Committee member paid tribute to people of the province for cooperating with him even in the midst of wanton raids by former rebel Rhodesian soldiers who blew up bridges last year.

National Security At Stake

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 24 Oct 80 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text]

ZAMBIANS living in line-of-rail towns from Kafue to Chililabombwe, Kabwe and Ndola Rural and Mumbwa may be wondering why their Independence birthday gift this year is a curfew.

Soon after the curfew was announced yesterday — thanks Radio Zambia was efficient for the first time because the announcement was carried in the eight languages during the lunch time news broadcasts — some people with powers of the clairvoyant, and the "Cassandras" of Zambia bandied about stories which to them led to the measure.

Some of their stories are unbelievable and border on serious breaches of the peace if not lese majesty. However Zambians had it coming to them even if the curfew was imposed on Independence eve.

One doesn't have to go far to see the signs. Certainly the events of the past few weeks in the specified areas gave rise to concern.

Any government worth its name and anxious about public order and security would have taken appropriate steps under the circumstances.

So as we celebrate our sixteenth national birthday today we must bear in mind that the curfew is for our own security like that of last year when rebel Rhodesian mercenaries blew up installations here.

People should not moan about curtailment of their nocturnal movements; they must instead give maximum support to the security forces who are doing a great job.

Our security forces have no doubt been scoring successes since they started "operation clean-up". They have to be encouraged.

For instance their ferreting out and smashing a dangerously armed gang in the Chilanga area which was poised to strike terror in the nation and possibly subvert the system any time is an achievement worthy of pride.

However that gang has not been wiped out completely. According to reports its remnants are still at large.

In the Keembe area terrified villagers have reported "strangers" in tattered army uniforms and armed with rifles.

For the security forces to deal with the situation more firmly, it was therefore necessary to create the condition for it — impose a curfew.

And we owe it to ourselves to cooperate fully. The situation is no playmatter. Yesterday Prime Minister Lisulo and Central Committee member Bob Litana voiced similar concern at separate meetings.

Mr Lisulo warned of Zambia becoming a "decadent society" because of crime and related social problems.

Mr Litana hinted that labour leaders who have been advocating unrest could be acting "on behalf of somebody hidden somewhere".

Countrymen, this is the time we forgot our petty differences and rallied together with our security forces.

NDOLA GOVERNOR, ZCTU CHAIRMAN RECONCILED

Lusaka ZAMBIA DAILY MAIL in English 27 Oct 80 p 5

[Text]

NDOLA Urban district governor, Mr. Alexander Kamalondo and chairman of the Zambia Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) Mr. Frederick Chiluba have reconciled.

The two leaders shook hands and reconciled in the office of member of the Central Committee for the Copperbelt Province, Mr. Shadreck Soko.

The provincial political secretary, Mr Cox Sikumba reconciled them on Thursday.

He said Mr Soko summoned Mr Chiluba and Mr Kamalondo to his office on Thursday morning to help them "reconcile as children of the same house".

The meeting was also attended by provincial permanent secretary, Mr Jordan Munkanta.

Mr Sikumba said during the meeting Mr Soko pointed out that both Mr Kamalondo and Mr Chiluba were leading the same people. The difference was only that one was doing it through unionism, while the other led in politics.

The political secretary said Mr Soko observed that both men were leading and long-standing members of the Party and he saw no reason for one of them to attack another or to over-protect the Party.

Mr Sikumba said Mr Soko informed the meeting that the ZCTU had already petitioned the Secretary-General of the Party, Mr Malaza Chona in which they have adequately expressed reasons for their rejection of the new system.

"The Party and its Government are currently studying the petition and there should be no need for anybody to talk on the issue," Mr Sikumba said.

Mr Kamalondo threatened to mobilise Party youths and make life for labour leaders in Ndola difficult.

NEW ENERGY PLANS ON WAY--LISULO

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 27 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

THE Government is working out energy measures including exploration for oil and conservation to avoid wastage, Prime Minister Mr Daniel Lisulo, said yesterday.

He said experts were making feasibility studies on oil or natural gas in the Luangwa valley and the Zambezi escarpment.

Mr Lisulo, who said this would be a costly venture if results were positive, added that Romanians had shown interest in exploring the natural resources in the two areas.

"Whether it is oil or natural gas, we win if the explorations prove positive," he said.

In May last year, director of the geological survey department of the Ministry of Mines, Dr Fred Thieme said the ministry had put forward proposals in the Third National Development Plan for an oil drilling programme on the west side of the Zambezi river and the middle of the Luangwa river.

Dr Thieme said although the chances for discovering oil were not high, the programme would not be a waste of money as it would give them some other indices of possibilities of uranium, coal, salt, copper and gypsum.

"We are not saying it is completely not possible to have oil in those areas, but the programme will not be a waste of money," Dr Thieme added.

Mr Lisulo said the Government was working out plans to extract ethanol from molasses, coal and cassava for fuel.

This would take some time as experts studying the ideas were making sure the plans were feasible before they were implemented.

To conserve fuel, Mr Lisulo said the Government had established a special task force to check on the use of Government cars.

The team was operating under the road traffic department and among its duties would be to impound cars driven without log books.

Controlling officers, had in the past let the Government down, the Prime Minister said.

Government ministries were being given specific allocations of fuel. Those which exhausted their share had to put their own fuel in Government cars.

Members of Central Committee were at the moment drawing fuel twice a week, and it was up to each officer to see that they did not run out because when this happened, they would have to fend for themselves.

"We want to put a stop to fuel wastage because oil is very costly. If institutions or officials run out of their allocation before time, they have to park their vehicles," Mr Lisulo said.

Mr Lisulo announced that the Government would soon issue instructions to its agencies and Zimco companies to re-cycle used paper.

Two companies had offered to re-cycle the paper to minimise wastage which President Kaunda said was rife in public offices.

Dr Kaunda last Thursday said he had noted with dismay and concern the wastage of stationery, office furniture, fuel and oils by ministries, departments and Government institutions.

BRIEFS

LABOR OPPOSES DECENTRALIZATION--Chairman of the Zambia Congress of Trade Unions, Mr Frederick Chiluba, said yesterday he was ready to testify to the Party National Council why the labour movement is opposed to the introduction of a decentralised system of local government. Speaking at his Kansenshi home in Ndola, Mr Chiluba said he was looking forward to this opportunity. He was commenting on reports that the Party had summoned him to explain to the National Council opening in Lusaka next week why unions in the country are opposing the introduction of the system. Mr Chiluba is prepared to testify to a sub-committee on decentralisation rather than to the full National Council. He said he would like to speak to a small body of the council specifically charged with the task of decentralising the local government system "but I do not mind testifying even before the full National Council if this is how they would like it to be." TRIBALISM CONDEMNED--Southern Province political secretary Mr Axon Soko has warned against tribalism because it is a cancer that can destroy the nation. Mr Soko said tribal divisions had caused havoc in some African countries to the extent that millions of people and property had been destroyed. He was speaking in Livingstone over the weekend during the marriage reception of Mr Cyrups Chipeta, son of Luapula permanent secretary, who married former Miss Catherine Selemani, daughter of Livingstone housing director, Mr Willie Selemani. Mr Soko explained that tribal tendencies could be eliminated and the motor of "One Zambia, One Nation" achieved through inter-tribal marriages. Previously, people took pride and encouraged each other to marry from their tribes but after independence the country witnessed the new trend which completely ignored tribe in marriage. "We can only build a united Zambia through inter-marriage because any divisions based on tribe could destroy peace and the little that has been achieved so far," he said. MUGABE SLAMS RACISM, SUPPORTS NEW ECONOMIC ORDER

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

THE Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, last night condemned racialism in all its forms and called for a restructuring of international economic systems.

In a wide-ranging address to the nation marking the 35th anniversary of the foundation of the United Nations, Mr Mugabe said Zimbabwe intended to play its part to the full in the organisation.

Expressing support for a number of liberation struggles, including those in Namibia, the Western Sahara and Palestine, he said Zimbabwe "unequivocally deplores racialism in all its forms and manifestations".

"We cannot but deplore the apartheid system as practised by South Africa. My Government calls upon the South African regime to desist from the practice of this most humiliating and exploitative system of man by man and to expedite the process of democratic change," he said.

Zimbabwe supported the "democratic forces and liberation movements" in South Africa, as well as the peace-keeping efforts being made by the United Nations in the Middle East and in the Iran/Iraq conflict.

On nuclear disarmament, he said Zimbabwe was behind arms limitation and supported the signing of the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks (S.A.L.T. II) between the United States and the Soviet Union.

The Government was "totally opposed" to those who wished to spread the danger of nuclear confrontation to the Indian Ocean.

INTEREST

Zimbabwe stood "together with other members of the OAU in declaring the Indian Ocean a nuclear-free zone".

Mr Mugabe said the "burning issues" before the U.N. in the past decade in which Zimbabwe had a particular interest centred on "fundamental change in the structure of the international system, and in international economic relations between the industrialised and developing nations".

This interest had continued into the 1980s.

Change in this area did not come easily and met with resistance from those who felt their positions threatened, but those in that position should recognise a number of notions, he said.

They should appreciate the seriousness of developing countries in seeking change, that a new international economic order could bring economic improvement to developed nations and that harmonious international relations faced a "grave threat" unless the gap was bridged.

Mr Mugabe said development strategies for the 1980s needed to evolve basic reforms in areas such as rules and arrangements governing world commodity markets and liberalisation of trade by industrial countries.

He called for the transfer of technology to developing countries and the removal of constraints, externally imposed, on developing countries and an "intensification of economic co-operation" among them.

The Prime Minister praised three United Nations agencies -- UNICEF, the High Commission for Refugees and the Food and Agricultural Organisation — for their humanitarian aid efforts.

Noting that the 1990s had been accepted as the United Nations Decade for Women, Mr Mugabe said his Government was taking steps to ensure a full participation of women in all walks of life on the basis of equality.

"Male chauvinism has no place in the socialist society we propose," he said.

Extending his Government's thanks to the U.N. and its specialised agencies, Mr Mugabe said:

"We look forward to our full participation in the United Nations Organisation and its specialised agencies, as well as meeting our commitments and obligations in a manner befitting our new status as an independent sovereign State."

NKOMO DEFENDS FREEDOM OF TRADE UNIONS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

ZIMBABWEAN trade unions must remain free from any interference from the Government and control by political parties, the Minister of Home Affairs, Dr Joshua Nkomo, said yesterday.

"The unions must be free to represent the interests of their workers, and political parties and the Government should not interfere with the trade union movement," Dr Nkomo told thousands of chanting Patriotic Front supporters at a rally in Harare, Salisbury.

Police estimated the crowd at 4 000 while Mr Mark Nziramasanga, the PF's publicity and information secretary, said there were between 7 000 and 10 000 people. Journalists put the attendance at about 6 000.

In his wide-ranging, hour-long speech, punctuated by loud cheers and chants, the PF leader said he had seen "certain employment forms" which asked job-seekers to disclose their political history.

"This is nonsense and has to stop. Why are people being asked for their political history when they are looking for employment—what for?" he asked amid applause.

He criticised illegal "kangaroo" courts, saying they had to cease at once.

In certain areas of Zimbabwe, said Dr Nkomo, there were "young bullies" who went about beating elderly people. In other areas they demanded letters from a political party chairman before the person could enter an area or travel in a bus.

"Is that the freedom we fought for? No, that's nonsense. Nobody should be going around with AKs and grenades. People must be free when they drink their liquor, when they walk around with their loved ones, when they go to church or to weddings anywhere in Zimbabwe," the Minister said.

Saying those who went about seeking political support through violence or intimidation had no backing from the public, Dr Nkomo warned, "We will not stand idly by and watch this nonsense go on."

He had a swipe at rulers who failed to govern the country as one nation and not as a political party, and criticised leaders who were bent on denouncing others, saying: "Pasi nedzakutsaku" and "Pasi nemapurisa akayipa" when all these people were supposed to be ruled by one government.

Stressing that all Zimbabweans had fought for freedom, Dr Nkomo said he rejected claims by certain politicians who said that because the PF had lost the election it (PF) should be "good losers".

The PF had lost nothing, he said, as what the party had struggled and fought for had been finally realised — the independence and freedom of Zimbabwe.

Happy

It was not important who was in control of the Government, as long as the objectives the people died for were not only in existence but were seen to be that way, he told his audience.

The Minister went on to say he was happy at the way peace prevailed in Salisbury's local government areas since a few weeks ago when he addressed former ZIPRA guerillas at Chitungwiza.

"I told ZIPRA to do good, to see that people are not subjugated. These last few weeks we have seen peace in Salisbury. We want this to continue," he added.

He repeated his claim that unless lodgers were properly registered by administrators and not by political agents and the method and dates of the local government poll were announced well in advance, the election would not be free and fair.

He said although there were problems in transforming the police force, most of the members were doing a good job. However, there were some difficulties, as in all other Ministries, which would require time to overcome.

MUZOREWA CLAIMS MANY STILL DENIED FREEDOM

Will Stay Active Politically

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Oct 80 p 7

[Text]

BISHOP Abel Muzorewa says the Government has failed to let the people of Zimbabwe feel the freedom for which they fought and died.

In an interview in Salisbury the UANC leader said: "As far as I am concerned a lot of people are still waiting for their freedom." Bishop Muzorewa said he had no intention of quitting politics. He firmly believed that he still had a role to play in Zimbabwe. He would be a voice that would constantly "prick the conscience" of the Government.

"I shall tell them whenever I feel they are doing what they should not do but, at the same time, I will support every positive thing they do in the nation's interests," he said.

He said he expected the UANC to remain active in Parliament where it has three seats. He said that the party was in "very bad financial shape" like any other party after losing an election.

He also admitted that the UANC had received financial assistance from South African sources during the election campaign, but denied that it had come from the Pretoria Government.

Bishop Muzorewa said his party had no links with the South African Government and described as "absolute rubbish" reports that UANC auxiliaries were undergoing training in South Africa for subversive activities against the present Government.

"I told the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, personally when I went to congratulate him after the election results were announced, that the reports were untrue," he said.

He rejected the call by his predecessor, Bishop Ralph Dodge, for him to resign as head of the United Methodist Church. Bishop Muzorewa said the retired bishop had no right to tell an effective bishop to leave his post.

Bishop Muzorewa said there was a strong tendency towards a dictatorship in Zimbabwe and he feared that all political parties except the ruling ZANU (PF) might be banned.

He said he knew of many would-be investors who were afraid to put money in Zimbabwe.

Bishop Muzorewa said his real fear was that ZANU (PF) might "do to other political parties what it is doing to the UANC. That would be very dangerous because the other side is also armed to the teeth. We are not armed. It would be a sure recipe for civil war".

Ministerial Bickering Hit

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 26 Oct 80 p 1

[Text] Talk among Cabinet Ministers of "crushing one another" had not helped prospects of getting much-needed foreign investment in Zimbabwe, the leader of the United African National Council, Bishop Abel Muzorewa, said yesterday.

Addressing a rally attended by about 1 000 UANC supporters at Salisbury's National Sports Centre, Bishop Muzorewa said: "Ministers in one government shout at each other in the sight and ears of the public and the whole world.

"Each time they shout about crushing each other they throw away millions of dollars and millions of pounds which could come to help our baby nation in reconstruction, rehabilitation and development, which we need very badly..."

He lashed out at some "mischievous and malicious" people, whom he said acted and behaved as if UANC members had had no children among the guerilla forces.

"If people turn around and want to behave as if we are an enemy of the former freedom fighters, we resist that and dismiss this cheap manner of politicking, this unclean propaganda, with the contempt it deserves," he said.

The bishop also castigated people who went about saying the UANC was dead.

He assured his supporters that the UANC committee was working very hard to keep the organisation going.

"I want to make it abundantly clear that the UANC is not dead. It is only dead in the minds of those who say so."

He told the meeting he had heard of some UANC members migrating to Matabelaland because it was safer for them than Mashonaland. "They are sick to the marrow with intimidation in Mashonaland," he said.

LOCAL ELECTIONS' NOMINATION DEADLINE POSTPONED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 29 Oc 80 p 1

[Text]

THE deadline for the nomination of candidates for the local government elections in the former African townships had been postponed to November 7, the Minister of Local Government and Housing, Mr Eddison Zvobgo, announced yesterday.

The Minister told a Press conference in Salisbury yesterday that it was now clear that there was widespread interest in the local government elections in both the urban and the district councils.

"You will all have learnt that the closing date for nomination in respect of Gwelo and Bulawayo was today," he said. "This has taken many political parties by surprise, though I must hasten to say that both the Gwelo and Bulawayo city councils had advertised the nomination dates in the local Press in accordance with the law."

On account of the intense interest which the political parties were taking in the elections it was clear that the advertising procedure should have been amended in order to ensure that there was national publicity on the matter, he said.

The Minister said he had had representations from the political parties involved in the urban council elections to extend the period for nominations in respect of the former local government areas.

It was clear, he said, that not all political parties were aware of the various nomination dates which had been declared by the urban councils.

"I have decided, therefore, to publish an amendment to the Urban Councils (Substituted Electoral Provisions) Regulations, 1980, which will enable the urban councils to alter the nomination day to November 7 1980 in former local government areas, in all municipalities, town councils and local board areas," he explained.

This would ensure that the election was seen to be free and fair and that no political party or prospective candidate was prejudiced, he said.

He stressed that the new date applied only to incorporated local government areas and not to the old council areas.

In the case of Chitungwiza, where no new areas were being incorporated, the nomination deadline would remain the same, November 6.

In reply to a question the Minister said Dr Joshua Nkomo had so far not brought forward any evidence of the malpractices he was alleging, although he had promised to do so.

Mr Nkomo, president of the Patriotic Front, claimed at a rally in Harare on Sunday that, unless lodgers were properly registered by administrators and not by political agents and the method and date of the local government elections were announced in advance, the election would not be free and fair.

In respect of the elections in Salisbury, the Director of Community Services, Mr Bev Taylor, whose department is responsible for the registration of voters in the former local government areas, said yesterday there was no way a political party could register voters for the elections.

In Salisbury a total of 31 had been nominated by yesterday afternoon for election to the city's 36 wards. Of these only 13 were from the former local government areas. No nominations had been received by then from 10 of the wards in these areas.

Nominations had been received from all wards representing the former white areas and most of them were from serving councillors. Only three blacks had by yesterday registered their nominations in these wards.

In two separate wards of Mufakose, Mr Ronnie Madede (Ward 16), a costing and estimating clerk in the city, and Mr G. B. Mwase (Ward 18) w nominated.

Mr Kenneth Mano, a company director, is standing for Ward 19 in Kambuzuma. In Glen View Mr J. C. Gogwe, a technician with the PTC and Mr C. M. Chimbi, a clerk cashier, are candidates for Wards 21 and 23 respectively.

Ward 24 in Glen Norah has two candidates so far, Mr Ephraim Diamini, a company manager, and Mr C. T. Makamba, a clerk-bookkeeper. Mr N. J. Hlatywayo of Highfield is standing in Ward 28 in the same suburb. He is a clerk.

In Harare Mr Philip Sibanda, a dry cleaners' agent, and Mr S. M. Bhebe, an air freight supervisor, are candidates in Wards 30 and 31 respectively.

Mr A. N. Gumede, a typist clerk, and Mr Thomas Tapa are both standing in Ward 34 of Mabvuku. In another part of Mabvuku, Ward 35, Mr N. M. Mtetwa, a carpenter, has submitted his nomination papers.

Ward 36 in Tafara so far has one candidate, Mr. P.S. Nyakudya, a coppersmith.

MR ZVOBGO last night urged any civil servants and municipal workers who wished to contest the local government elections to seek written permission from their respective Ministries.

Addressing about 300 ZANU (PF) delegates from the party's Salisbury district at a meeting in Harare, Mr Zvobgo stressed that no one would be barred from contesting if they complied with the provision.

Municipal workers would have to approach him because their department fell under his Ministry, he said.

Serving councillors, Mr John Aitcheson and Mr John West are standing in Wards 1 (Marlborough) and 2 (Mount Pleasant, Northwood, Alexandra Park and Vainona) respectively.

Mr Clive Puzey and Dr Timothy Stamps, both serving councillors, are candidates in Wards 3 (Borrowdale) and 4 (Highlands).

Wards 5 (Greendale) and 6 (Hatfield) have serving councillors Mr Sidney Evans and Mr William Croxford respectively as candidates.

One ward in which much interest has been shown in the election is Ward 7, where Alderman Ivor Pitch, serving councillor Mr Jack Willis, a superviser, Mrs Elaine Raftopoulos and Mr Barach Brack Tunhira, a salesman, have been nominated. The ward includes Braeside and Eastlea.

Former Minister of Law and Order and UANC national chairman, Mr Francis Zindoga, is standing in Ward 8 (Waterfalls). Also in that ward is Mr John Drake Chambwe, a radio technician with the National Railways of Zimbabwe.

Mr Francis Mills, a serving councillor has been nominated for Ward 9, comprising Salisbury's central business area and the industrial sites.

Ward 11 (Mabelreign) has one candidate, Mrs Beryl Boaler, who is also a serving councillor, and the Mayor of Salisbury, Councillor J. Whiting is standing in Ward 12, comprising Avondale, Gun Hill and Alexandra Park.

Dr Arthur Wilkins has been nominated for Wa. 13 (Belgravia).

'Manipulation' Says Mayor of Bulawayo

BULAWAYO

BULAWAYO'S Mayor, Councillor Mike Constandinos, said last night that dates for the local government elections were being "manipulated to suit a political party".

"I am basically at a complete loss as to why they can't fix a date and then stick to it," said Mr Constandinos.

"One wonders now whether they intend to rule by regulation rather than by legislation."

Mr Constandinos said there would now be only two weeks between the nominations closing and the poll itself, placing tremendous pressure on the council's administration.

The Patriotic Front vice-president, Mr Josiah Chinamano, said the postponement of the closing date was due to the party's representations about the "clumsy handling" of the elections.

"We believe it is as a result of the voice of reason from Dr Nkomo that this has been done," said Mr Chinamano.

But he said the PF would not be satisfied unless the elections were postponed and completely reorganised.

In Bulawayo a list of candidates for the 23 wards in the reorganised city council was due to have been made public soon after the original nomination deadline of 4 p.m. yesterday.

The Town Clerk, Mr Ian Edmondes, said he had received a telephone call from the Ministry in Salisbury yesterday asking him not to make the list public after all.

He said there had been a steady stream of candidates from both major political parties registering throughout the afternoon.

HEALTH MINISTER ACCUSES PRESS OF UNDERMINING GOVERNMENT

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Oct 80 p 2

[Text]

BULAWAYO.

IN a Pres. statement released here yesterday, the Minister of Health, Dr Herbert Ushewokunze, said:

The white-controlled Press continues with its policy of undermining the Government at every opportunity. Among its latest targets has been myself as the Minister of Health.

As Minister of Health, I have no easy task. Health is one of those areas where white privilege has been most deeply entrenched.

Attempts to root out the injustices inherent in the health service are bound to meet vociferous opposition from the vested interests of the health sector and the fascist media which eagerly reflects their views.

Hence, the contrived furore following my recent address to the staff of the Andrew Fleming Hospital.

The swaggering insolence of the local Press reached a new level, predictably in The Sunday Mail. Its Comment (September 14) entitled "Dr Ushewokunze" was an insult to me as Minister of Health, to the Prime Minister who appointed me and to the people of Zimbabwe who elected me.

The Sunday Mail criticised me for what it termed "stage-managed tours of hospitals" and accused me of undermining the whole medical infrastructure in the country.

If the Minister of Health has no right to inspect hospitals and question staff about their duties, then who has?

Later in the same editorial there was grudging admission that "maybe" there has been discrimination in the health service and "maybe" there are wrongs and anomalies in the treatment of patients which should be righted. (Note the soft approach, the soft word "maybe" when criticism of whites is involved).

If the Mail (and the Herald) bothered to canvass black opinion instead of quoting almost entirely white views — as it did in its handling of the Andrew Fleming affair — then its judgment might well be more balanced.

It is the editor of The Sunday Mail who is undermining the Prime Minister's policy of reconciliation and it is the subversive activities of the white-controlled Press which need to be curbed.

As Minister of Health, I have hit the nail on the head.

My strictures against the inferior treatment and hospital conditions experienced by many African patients are fully justified.

Health services for the majority of our people are not and never have been adequate.

As Minister, I have already taken important steps to sever the health service from its colonial past by relieving the poor of the burden of health care charges and by embarking on a primary health care policy which will be of inestimable benefit to the masses.

There exists at the Andrew Fleming Hospital (and elsewhere) a wall of opposition to the elected Government and its socialist policies.

Many of the medical and nursing personnel behave and talk as though the new political order simply did not exist.

If reconciliation has any meaning for these whites, then with their help Zimbabwe could have a health service for the people second to none.

Without their help Zimbabwe will still have the finest health service in the developing world and the sooner they realise this, the better.

MUTUMBUKA LASHES OLD SCHOOLS SYSTEM

Salisburv THE HERALD in English 25 Oct 80 p 3

[Text]

SINCE the new Government took power, Zimbabwe's school population had risen from 800 000 to 1.3 million, the Minister of Education and Culture, Mr Dzingai Mutumbuka, said yesterday.

This, the Minister said, was an achievement of which the Government was "justly proud" and was a consequence of the introduction of the Minimum Wages Bill and the abolition of fees at primary school level earlier this year.

Addressing a National Affairs' Association meeting, Mr Mutumbuka outlined factors which had in the past led to discriminatory educational practices.

He said that in 1974 110 000 white workers had earned a total of $528 million compared with $372 million earned by 900 000 African workers.

For many years African wages had come to 41 percent of the total wage bill. Yet African workers outnumbered white workers by nine to one. On average a white worker received more than 10 times as much as a black worker, he said.

The economic sector catered for only about 1 million workers — about one-third of the potential adult workers in the country — while 2 million potential workers were "left to eke out a precarious living in the overpopulated and denuded TTLs".

Under the Muzorewa Government, a few "cosmetic changes" were made, so that the salaries of less than 2 percent of African workers were raised to match those of their white counterparts, Mr Mutumbuka said.

The colonial education system had been geared to service the economic system. As a result white education had been very highly developed.

"Indeed, I can go so far as to say that the European child has in the past received a far superior education in our schools than he would have received were he to live in any other part of the world," he said.

"Thus our 60 000 European schoolchildren were given half the money allocated to education every year. The other half went to some 800 000 African schoolchildren.

"A further 1,2 million African children of school-going age were not able to enjoy any educational facilities at all. An average of $530 was spent on the education of a European child compared to $38 for that of an African child."

Bridging the "seemingly unbridgeable chasm" between the two systems of education in this country would be a new phase of the struggle and was "an even more challenging and difficult struggle than ever before," the Minister said.

There were more than 1 million illiterate or semi-literate adults in Zimbabwe. Such a high percentage with little or no education was a "serious liability".

This was a "creation of our predecessors" and it was the Government's intention to eliminate illiteracy at all levels in the shortest possible time.

The latest skills and talents of Zimbabweans had not been given an opportunity to blossom in the past. Now there was the possibility of liberating those latent potentials and using them fully, Mr Mutumbuka said.

TRAIN UP

The country's first task would be to train 8 000 new teachers and to upgrade 14 000 sub-standard teachers.

"Gone are the days when our education system offered a pale imitation of the sort of education offered overseas," he said.

"Our situation in Zimbabwe as a Third World country in Africa is obviously very different from that obtaining in Britain or America.

"Equally, our education system must be geared to tackle the problems we face."

This meant that education would pay more attention to "developmental" skills in which schools would be "the living model of the type of society we hope to create".

He said this could be achieved partly by using curricula which were directly related to the situation in Zimbabwe and the establishment of productive units within schools to allow pupils an opportunity to deal with the country's problems "in their actual context".

He said people were the country's greatest resource. "Other resources, such as foreign aid, are secondary.

"Foreign aid can be poured into a country, and yet that country may still fail to develop. This is because foreign aid is nothing without the resourcefulness, hard work and skills of the people themselves."

Replying to a question, the Minister confirmed that he had no objection to private educational concerns being formed provided they were not along the lines of community schools.

LABOR MINISTER CONDEMNS ILLEGAL STRIKES

Slow Process of Change

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

ILLEGAL STRIKES are delaying the process of change, the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, said in Salisbury last night.

"A Commission of Inquiry is touring Zimbabwe, hearing evidence from workers on changes which should be brought about to redress past injustices in employment. This commission must be given time to hear this evidence, to study it and to make recommendations to Government on what changes should be brought about," Mr Kangai said.

The Minister appealed to workers who wished to see these changes come about to be patient.

He said most of the efforts of the Ministry to bring about effective change were being hampered as the Minister, the Deputy Minister and all their staff spent most of their time persuading workers to go back to work.

The number of man-hours lost was reaching alarming proportions. If this did not stop at once, the ability of commerce and industry to provide the additional jobs which were necessary to Zimbabwe, would be seriously affected.

The Minister called on workers to stop "sabotaging" Zimbabwe's hard-won freedom and to ignore those causing disruption by calling for strike action.

Such action was neither in the interests of the country nor was it in the interest of the workers, Mr Kangai said.

"Government has been patient with workers who were seeking ways of making their grievances known. This patience is almost exhausted as workers continue to act irresponsibly.

"If such irresponsibility does not cease forthwith, Government will be forced to take strong action against those who continue to undermine Zimbabwe's economy," Mr Kangai warned.

"Fundamental changes to the system will not be brought about by illegal strikes," Mr Kangai added. "We want a disciplined work force which raises grievances through the proper channels."

The Minister urged workers to use workers' committees to discuss with management issues which affect them at their places of work.

He said such methods had proved highly successful in many cases, and improvements in workers' conditions had been brought about through such discussions.

The Minister asked the workers to leave the broader issues of the wage levels to the existing Industrial Council and Industrial Board until the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry had been considered.

Mr Kangai also stated that in certain industries workers were being encouraged to stop contributing to industrial pension schemes.

"We wish it to be known that in terms of the law an employer is not permitted to stop making deductions from workers' wages to such pension schemes. It is a matter with legal implications," he warned.

Government Controls Urged

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 26 Oct 80 p 12

[Editorial]

[Text]

"EVERYBODY OUT." The strike call echoes again around the country and Labour Minister Kangai and his officials are kept busy rushing from place to place trying to resolve grievances, get production rolling and essential services resumed.

The "crisis of expectation", particularly more pay, is still at the core of workers' complaints but this time other unpleasant aspects are emerging, including accusations of "racialism" and demands for the sacking of senior people or reinstatement of those who have lost their jobs.

With growing militancy among trade unions, the formation of workers' committees and the banding together of the disgruntled and dissatisfied, labour relations face a difficult time: the need for both better communication between management and workers and "cooling off" periods is all too evident.

Communication does not mean either "We are the bosses—get on with your work or else . . ." or "We are the workers—give us all we want or else . . .". It means talking and resolving difficulties and differences to the mutual advantage of both sides and in the long run the country and its economy as a whole.

"Worker participation" is being encouraged by Government. Well and good—provided the end result is that workers benefit without crippling or putting out of business the concerns or services which employ them.

While obviously sympathising with the workers in their demands for a better deal, the Minister is rightly concerned about the number of man hours being lost—it is reaching alarming proportions, he says—and the disruption to commerce and industry which is effectively preventing the generating of more employment.

The racialism tag needs to be more clearly defined. If it means that people are being paid less purely because of the colour of their skin—no other reason — then matters must be put right. Equally it has to be impressed on workers that qualifications, ability, skill and service all count both on the promotion ladder and pay scales, though all must have the same opportunity to progress.

Far too many strikes start in other countries because of friction between individuals or an unthinking remark: it is something which will have to be watched very carefully in this country—by all sides and at all levels.

Trade unionism can achieve a great deal for the worker. It can also do the exact opposite, particularly when it becomes so powerful that it kills the goose that lays the golden egg.

CABINET DECISION UPSETS CATTLEMEN, FARMERS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 24 Oct 80 p 3

[Text]

THERE would be no increase in beef producer prices this year and a commission had been set up to study ways of overcoming the present crisis in the industry, the Minister of Agriculture, Senator Denis Norman, said yesterday.

Senator Norman opening a summer fattening beef symposium at Gilson Estates yesterday, told about 300 cattlemen and farmers:

"I regret to have to announce that the Cabinet has decided that any alteration in the present price schedule will only be a short-term policy to the cattle industry and not a cure for any ills.

"Therefore, there will be no change in the current price schedule."

He said prices would be "constantly reviewed" and come up for reconsideration at the end of February.

"This has come as a disappointment probably to all of you, certainly it has been a disappointment to me," he said.

The Minister also announced that a commission, headed by Dr Dick Elliot, assistant director of Research and Specialist Services (livestock and pasture) of the Ministry of Agriculture, had started to study all aspects of cattle production, from weaning to the finished product.

"Hopefully, that working party will be in a position to make recommendations to the Cabinet for a policy which I hope will correct the present imbalance in the industry."

He said that for cattle producers to become more viable they must become more efficient, have higher producer prices and reduce production costs.

Ranchers in Zimbabwe, he said, were as efficient as anywhere in the world, but they must not become complacent.

Beef prices would constantly be reviewed and negotiations would start soon for the 1981/82 beef price schedule.

Referring to reduced producer costs, the Minister questioned the policy of continually following grain prices, which was becoming a short commodity in the world.

"We must bend our efforts and our endeavours to find alternative sources of food. Because of the present viability in our industry, it is imperative that the search be speeded up," he said.

Zimbabwe was a large country and it must become "more productive".

Discussions had been going on for months to arrange greater flexibility for finance for those in the breeding side of the industry.

He also announced that the Cold Storage Commission grazer scheme had been extended.

This had been from $21 million to $24 million this year.

The Ministry was now actively encouraging farmers to use the scheme as a means of obtaining heifers.

He said he was encouraged by farmers' response to the scheme, which up to September had taken 5 955 male and 10 208 female cattle for breeding.

The Minister appealed to cattlemen to have patience and to have faith in the industry which he said was at the bottom of a cycle.

"I would appeal to farmers not to desert the industry at this stage because when viability returns — and I am sure it will — it will be extremely expensive to re-enter the industry."

He said the Government was aware of the problems facing agriculture and "we are endeavouring to the best of our ability to put things right".

● Cattle producers have expressed disappointment, and even annoyance, at the Minister's announcement.

Several farmers at Gilson Estates said yesterday it would be more difficult for them to continue producing beef.

Mr D. Tredgold, of Debshan Ranch, Shangani, said he was very disappointed with the announcement.

The rancher, who runs about 30 000 head of stock, said: "In order to encourage us to produce beef for the nation, they must make it an economic proposition."

Mr Robin Gilmour, of Carswell farm, Nyabira, said there would be an oversupply of beef in March and April next year with shortages from September to December.

"In the long term, price will be much higher than if a moderate increase were given now.

"I believe the CSC is in jeopardy and the beef industry has been set back 20 years."

He said the producer could not be expected to sell beef below costs.

"There was a song and dance about drought relief earlier this year, but this refusal to pay a realistic price negates any benefits derived from this relief."

No comment was available from the Cattle Producers' Association. A spokesman said the association would release a statement today.

PATRIOTIC FRONT ALLEGES INTIMIDATION BY RIVALS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Oct 80 p 2

[Text] The Patriotic Front yesterday claimed its party supporters in Salisbury's Dzivaresekwa area were prevented from attending a PF rally in Harare by men allegedly wearing ZANLA uniforms.

The PF publicity secretary, Mr Mark Nziramasanga, said a number of men, allegedly in ZANLA combat uniform, had stopped party supporters about to board buses for the rally, which was addressed by Dr Nkomo, party leader and Minister of Home Affairs.

"At some point during the trouble there, our supporters were chased around and told they would not be allowed to get into the buses," he said.

Yesterday's rally was being staged by the PF's 12 districts in Salisbury and was attended by several senior party officials, including the PF vice-president, Mr Josiah Chinamano.

In Harare, a wedding reception was disrupted when a group of about 30 PF supporters allegedly threatened to throw a grenade at the crowd.

The reception, which was to take place at the Stodart Hall, had to be transferred to the bridegroom's house where they were followed and again threatened by the same mob, and had to abandon the reception.

"We had to abandon the whole thing in fear of the people's safety and we are disappointed that the police could not act after receiving reports of this threat. We still have to pay the bookings for the hall which we haven't used at all," said one of the organisers.

A police spokesman said last night that no reports had been received of PF supporters being prevented from boarding buses. However, there was a fight in Dzivaresekwa at about 6.15 a.m. yesterday. First reports suggested a large number of people were involved, but by the time police arrived, the incident was virtually over, said the spokesman.

On the wedding incident, the spokesman said police had visited Stodart Hall only to ensure there was no overcrowding at the Patriotic Front rally.

NEW RULES FOR FOREIGN REPORTERS DETAILED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

ALL foreign journalists operating in Zimbabwe would have to get temporary employment permits and Press accreditation from next week, a spokesman for the Ministry of Information said in Salisbury yesterday.

He said any foreign journalists, including radio, television and film teams as well as photographers, would be required to get temporary employment permits (TEPs) from the Department of Immigration.

On their arrival in Zimbabwe they would be issued with a "notice to visitors", valid for only a day, and must report to the Ministry of Information for accreditation within that day. Then they would be given a TEP valid for the period of their stay in the country.

An accreditation exercise for foreign newsmen will be held in Salisbury on Tuesday. "All foreign media representatives are asked to report to the Ministry of Information conference room in Linquenda House, Baker Avenue, between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m.," the spokesman said.

He said local media representatives would be asked to report for accreditation at a later date.

The spokesman stressed that any foreign journalist working in Zimbabwe without a valid temporary employment permit (TEP) would be liable to a fine of $1 000 (or two years' jail, or both) and could be expelled.

"The Chief Immigration Officer is empowered to withdraw a TEP at any time, and similarly, the Department of Information reserves the right to remove accreditation," he warned.

RESTRICTIONS ON FOREIGN REPORTERS CRITICIZED

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 26 Oct 80 p 12

[Article by Henry Maasdorp]

[Text]

THE withholding of State facilities from reporters for foreign publications who are judged irrationally hostile is understandable. But it may be self-defeating.

The aim should be to replace prejudice — preconceived opinion — with a clearer factual judgment derived from a free flow of information and interpretation. Judgment will be favourable if performance is good.

This will take time and patience. But the longest way round is, in this instance, the shortest and indeed the only way home.

Retaliation by the Government against reporters will not in practice baffle the prejudice that is the source of the unhelpful reporting, but will tend rather to confirm it.

Implication

Some small examples in the writer's limited purview:

Radio South Africa, reporting the Ministry of Information's decision, chose to suggest a link between this and a forthcoming trial; the implication being, presumably, that the Government might be preparing the way for control of information arising from an event embarrassing to it.

The BBC gave the decision prominence in successive bulletins of world news, without filling in much if any of the background.

Later in the week the BBC selected from Mr Mugabe's speech to police recruits his statement that the way they did their duties would be crucial to the success of his Government. The brief report then recalled the latest instance of an attack on the police, in which a policeman was shot dead.

The connection was not clear. Listeners all over the world could be forgiven if they simply received an impression of rising crisis in the Government's handling of violence.

It is true that law and order represent a critical frontier in Zimbabwe. There are helpful and unhelpful ways of saying such things. The point for us is that any attempt by the Government to inhibit those who report unhelpfully or even untruthfully is likely to be counter-productive.

Any Government is an interested party in such matters, and no Government is formed of saints. Therefore to put reporters on Government sufferance may lead to gaps in the reported news. The victims, helpful or not, truthful or not, unbiased or not, are entitled to object on this ground.

Among the public they serve, such a situation breeds not only a suspicion that bad news will be hushed up but an expectation that there will be bad news to hush up. (What, for instance, was the average newspaper reader making of events in Zambia last week?). Since there is always a tendency to give readers and listeners the class of news they expect, a distortion with an independent life of its own is created.

Tendentious reporting which presents a misleading picture of how things are likely to develop should be left to die its own peculiar death. When events consistently confound projections such material will no longer be read, and if not read will no longer be written.

What is the general source of the prejudice from which, in Zimbabwe's case, such material arises?

If we try to construct a frank perspective, it must be admitted that some degree of prejudice is not without foundation.

In independent Africa formerly subject peoples learnt from the alien civilisation imposed on them the art of political warfare, with or without resort to arms — but did not, in notable cases, absorb strengths which characterised that civilisation, such as self-restraint and lifelong habits of hard work and accountability.

Strengths

Coming to Zimbabwe, in the post-revolutionary phase there was likely to be, in the light or what had gone before, some looting and atrocity, but it would contend with a growing urbanity as people settled down after the intense excitement of the period.

The relative strengths of the ingredients of the situation would depend on such things as the nature and amount of education the people had absorbed in the past; the nature of social experience; the vitality of institutions, formal and informal; and the scope of economic and other opportunity.

On these tests there is special hope for Zimbabwe, and the fact can be counted on to get past silly headlines and make its impact — provided performance matches potential.

Meanwhile, however, against the background of contemporary African history it is inescapable that Zimbabwe will remain on probation for some time.

Every error its Government makes, and it is bound to make some, will be highlighted and inflated by the prejudice formed in the last couple of decades against an Africa which, as a black Kenyan industrialist said the other day, has not done much to convince the rest of the world that it deserves the respect and dignity it demands.

ARMY CHIEF MACINTYRE RETIRES

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 26 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

ARMY Chief of Staff Major-General Alexander ("Derry") MacIntyre—who became known as "the soldier's soldier" — retired yesterday.

He has reached the military retirement age of 50, with 28 years of soldiering behind him.

His successor is Major-General Archer Bruce Campling, who was Chief of Staff (general duties).

General MacIntyre said yesterday he had not decided what to do.

He had been offered jobs in several parts of the world, but had not taken any decisions on them, nor on whether to leave Zimbabwe.

Were they soldiering jobs? "No, I have had enough of that," he said.

His immediate plan is to go to Britain to visit his mother, who is 80. She lives in Scotland.

General MacIntyre helped launch Operation Thrasher early in 1976. In Umtali he earned the epithet of being "the soldier's soldier", and was respected by civilian communities with whom he was involved.

He was a major on a course at the Staff College, Camberley, in England, when UDI was declared in 1965. He returned to Salisbury within two days.

General MacIntyre was born in Banffshire, Scotland, in 1930, went to Aberdeen University, and joined the Gordon Highlanders in 1952. He was commissioned through Eaton Hall into Britain's crack Parachute Regiment.

He came to Rhodesia in 1956. The next year he was commissioned and posted to 2 Bn, King's African Rifles, in Zomba.

In 1962, he was posted to 1 Bn Rhodesian Light Infantry, as adjutant. He served as a staff officer for three months before going to Camberley.

On his hurried return, he was appointed Brigade Major of 2 Brigade and in 1969 was posted to the School of Infantry at Gwelo as chief instructor and then commandant.

From 1970 to 1973 he was Commander of the RLI. Following promotion to colonel and then to brigadier, he was appointed Director of Projects before becoming Deputy Commander and then Commander of 3 Brigade in 1975.

RECONCILIATION OF WHITES, BLACKS URGED

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 26 Oct 80 p 12

[Muongororі's View column]

[Text]

IT is perhaps a paradox to state that one of the worst tragedies of any war is its long-term effects on the attitudes and sensibilities of the people.

In pre-war Germany the Nazi's anti-semitic propaganda blitz resulted in the murder and persecution of millions of people of Jewish descent. It was, presumably, a necessary strategy for Adolf Hitler to create this sort of fanaticism and blind loyalty among the stalwarts of his reign of terror.

Thus, in order to execute a war with any measure of success, it is a fundamental principle to indoctrinate one's fighting forces with "sufficient hatred" for the opposing side to create the right attitude of mind, brutal and callous enough to inspire the mass killings characteristic of any war.

In Zimbabwe, after nearly a decade of bitter fighting, the separatist indoctrination which drove a wedge between the black and white opposing forces provided the inflammatory atmosphere that led to the barbarities and atrocities of that war.

It is precisely this separatist indoctrination that the proclaimed reconciliation exercise seeks to dismantle. In a new and independent Zimbabwe, and if only for posterity, it is a dire necessity that the opposed sides during the war face up to the realities of the changed situation by burying their old hates and adopting an attitude of magnanimity and righteousness.

Granted that Zimbabweans, black or white, recognise the need for a revolutionary change of heart, during which process the enemy becomes a friend and ally, then the Zimbabwe Cultural Foundation must be fully supported by the Government and all people in its efforts to rehabilitate the country's cultural base to reflect the changed situation.

I fully agree with the foundation's chairman, Mr Caleb Somkence, in his observations that Zimbabwe faces a crisis unless it can live up to a new identity and "using the wedge that drove people apart during the war, lever the nation into a new cultural outlook".

Mr Somkence raises a very important point when he says both whites and blacks should not be defensive about their respective positions, but should instead have the courage for a "social confrontation" through which the cultural differences of the two sides will find common ground for integration and co-existence.

REALITY

Whites should not feel that reconciliation seeks to compromise the rights and privileges they enjoyed to the exclusion of their black compatriots, while blacks for their part should not think independence means juxtaposing their status with the whites and revenge for the injustices they suffered during previous governments.

What is wrong remains wrong, whether done by a white or black person. A black racist is just as bad as a white one.

Prime Minister Robert Mugabe has repeatedly stated that in an emergent Zimbabwe all races must regard themselves only as Zimbabweans and not as black or white Zimbabweans.

This is as it should be, and it should be seen to be happening in practical reality.

Whites who become condescendingly ultra-liberal and go out of their way to try to convince blacks that they genuinely accept them (blacks) as equals, and that they "personally" never harboured discriminatory sentiments, only expose themselves for the hypocrites they are — for indeed, one does not improve matters by stating the obvious.

On the other hand, the African must be seen to be openly proud of his indigenous identity. This can only happen through a process of mental decolonisation to dismantle the inferiority complex that the white people ingrained in his conscience to make him subservient and easy to govern.

It is my conviction that all this calls for a massive cultural revolution involving Zimbabweans in all spheres, be they intellectuals, peasants or politicians. The ZCF is in a unique position to spearhead this revolution.

The foundation must launch a nationwide political education programme to explain to all the people of Zimbabwe the inherent implications of their new cultural identity as a free and sovereign people.

I would also suggest the foundation approach the relevant authorities for permission to introduce free discussion programmes on radio and television at which racially mixed panels would meet and exchange ideas on any subjects of mutual interest.

From this, I believe, what Mr Somkence terms "black aesthetics" and "white aesthetics" will emerge a new understanding of the cultural values peculiar to the various racial groupings in Zimbabwe.

Zimbabwe must evolve a philosophy of co-habitation that will aim at bridging, unconditionally, the traditional, racial, tribal and ethnic barriers further accentuated by the extensive politicking preceding and during the war.

It must be a philosophy in which each and every Zimbabwean, regardless of race, colour or creed, will find security and hope for a future of racial equality and harmonious co-existence.

It should not be an academic philosophy to provide lively topics for intellectual discussions, but one that can be interpreted in practical terms, manifestly, as an instrument of change — a change to a renewed confidence in the viability of a nation of equals.

The ZCF has an enormous challenge before it. The declared reconciliation exercise has no precedent anywhere in Africa. It is a unique Zimbabwean experiment. Its success or failure depends on Zimbabweans themselves.

A TOTAL of 138 farms, comprising 10 percent of the 1 285 farming units in Manicaland, had been offered for sale to the Government, the Provincial Conservation and Extension Officer, Mr Anthony Carlaw, said in Umtali last week.

All the farms were being bought for reasonable prices, but no additional payment was made for buildings, dams, boreholes or other improvements, Mr Carlaw said during an interview.

"Nobody is being forced to sell out and it is certainly no land grab," he said.

Most were in what Mr Carlaw termed "depressed areas with marginal rainfall suitable only for small yields", and belonged to farmers who had suffered during the war and decided not to return.

All the resettlement areas would remain State land. There was no question of them being part of the tribal trust lands.

The first of 236 families, chosen from over 400 applicants, had begun moving into a 16 100 ha area in Mpudzi where 17 villages would be established.

By the middle of November it was hoped to begin moving 160 families into the Nyahgundi area of Odzi, where 8 986 ha have been allocated to resettlement. They will be joined by 200 people who will live on a co-operative farm.

Squatters have temporarily taken over some of the 15 533 ha at Murare where it is planned to settle 200 families.

Mr Carlaw said it had been decided to allow them to stay until the Government decided to develop the area.

At Nyajezi in the Inyanga district 13 650 ha had been set aside for 196 settlers who would start arriving in November.

"The total area earmarked for resettlement now amounts to 54 269 ha of which 3 970 are arable to which must be added the 200 ha allocated for the Odzi co-operative farm. On this we plan to settle 794 families," Mr Carlaw said.

Areas recommended for future resettlement are the rest of Mpudzi, lower Odzi and west Cashel where the farms have either been abandoned or farmers have indicated their wish to sell.

Explaining the basis of settlement, Mr Carlaw said each family would have 5 ha of arable land on which to grow maize, groundnuts or other crops.

They would be allowed eight livestock units each. Five sheep would equal one large ox so that if 10 families pooled their livestock they could carry 80 or up to 120 head.

Mr Carlaw is firmly opposed to the use of tractors or other mechanical farming implements. He believes the families should be encouraged to use oxen.

"Tractors increase ploughing costs and break down. Often they cannot be mended by unskilled hands. Nor do the anticipated yields warrant mechanical methods."

A carefully prepared blueprint for the resettled families—who must all be between 25 and 45 years old and have no other means of support — has been prepared by Conex in Manicaland.

Using family labour and including fertilisers, the cost of planting 1 ha of maize is given as $75. One hectare of groundnuts would cost $69 to plant and one other crop $30.

Maize kept for personal consumption by a family of four should amount to 300 kg a year, and groundnuts, 300 kg.

Based on low yields, the annual cash value of one maize crop is estimated at $804 and of groundnuts as $222. After planting costs of $324 have been deducted, $702 should be realised.

"If 10 families combine their livestock units into one herd they could carry 80 units or up to 120 head. This would allow the sale of some 20 head a year while still catering for draught and milk animals.

"The family share of this income would be $142, so in this way they would have the opportunity of earning between $600 and $850 a year in cash after providing for subsistence."

With good management and yields these figures could be doubled, Mr Carlaw stressed.

Farmers Must Be Taught

PEASANT farmers in Manicaland were as good as — if not better than — those anywhere else in the country but were still guilty of destroying their lands, the provincial agricultural officer, Mr Darrel Flowes, said in Umtali last week.

Describing agricultural practices in the tribal trust lands as "being in various stages of mismanagement", Mr Flowes, whose job it is to help rebuild one of the most densely populated rural areas in Zimbabwe, faces a situation where only eight in every thousand rural cultivators in Manicaland's 28 tribal trust lands are registered master farmers.

Master farmers are cultivators who have enrolled for training under the Ministry of Agriculture over two years. During the third year they apply their practical knowledge, after which they get a certificate and badge of proficiency.

Mr Flowes who has 24 years of experience in tribal trust land agricultural administration behind him, would like to see an agricultural demonstrator based at every school in the province.

But obtaining staff is proving a problem.

"Before the war we had 208 demonstrators and supervisors but by the end we were down to 139. Now we are busy reconstructing buildings and erecting temporary housing to enable staff to re-enter areas where nothing has been done for years," he said.

Mr Flowes stressed the importance of being self-sufficient in food to meet the growing population explosion. Already there are about 1 million people in Manicaland's tribal areas.

One answer to this, he believes, could be the establishment of rural service centres as growth points.

"By showing the people that agriculture will provide them with a good livelihood and providing amenities so far found only in the towns, they will hopefully be persuaded to farm properly," he said.

SQUATTERS INCREASE PRESENCE IN SALISBURY

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 29 Oct 80 p 9

[Article by Geoff Nyarota]

[Text]

MORE than 300 pole-and-daga and thatched huts stand huddled close to each other and more are going up. They house about 1 700 people — more than two thirds of them children.

Three water taps serve the entire population. One delapidated toilet caters for more than 300 men and there are no toilet facilities for the women and children.

The conglomeration of huts is surrounded by a carpet of human excrement, a health hazard even in dry weather. A heavy downpour of rain fell on the settlement when I was there on Monday.

This is the scene of an illegal squatter settlement on a plot in Tynwald on the outskirts of Salisbury.

The owner of the plot, one of several doing this in the Salisbury area, charges each family $5 a month for staying on his plot. He claims he turns away dozens of applications a month.

This is one of 13 squatter camps in the Salisbury area, several of them in the northern suburbs, including Borrowdale, Emerald Hill, Mandara and Tynwald.

There are also settlements in Westwood, in the Magaba section of Harare and along the Makabusi River near the municipal refuse dump.

The city council, with the co-operation of the Ministry of Local Government and Housing, hopes to get rid of them within the next month.

Much of the squatter problem is caused by people moving into Salisbury from the rural areas. When the families' bread winners cannot live with their families at their places of work in the suburbs or in municipal accommodation in the hostels they are forced to go squatting.

There are now in the Greater Salisbury area about 1 012 shanties housing more than 3 000 people, according to a recent city council survey.

The Mayor of Salisbury, Councillor Jack Whiting said yesterday: "The squatter problem in Salisbury has been caused by families coming in from the rural areas and wishing to live together as one unit rather than being separated, and a lot of the accommodation is for single people."

The council was responsible for housing people with jobs in the city, but there were many people who were unemployed or self-employed.

There was already a backlog in the housing exercise and the flood of work-seekers to the city had caused the squatter problem.

"I have discussed the problem with the Minister of Local Government and Housing," he said.

"Because of the onset of the rains and the associated health problem there is a need to expedite temporary housing for these people."

During discussions with the Minister it was planned to house the squatters on a temporary basis until permanent housing could be provided.

A special meeting had been held yesterday with the committee concerned and approval would be sought from the council at another meeting to be held later this week, the Mayor said.

"The intention is to house them in an area which has communal water and toilet facilities," he said: "This area could accommodate up to 460 families. At this point we cannot say where this area is going to be.

"These measures should deal with the immediate problem, but this will not stop future work seekers entering the city and again creating social and health problems."

The Mayor said the answer was to re-establish as many of the squatters as possible in the rural areas. But this could be done only when the rural areas were made attractive to the people.

"I know the Government is conscious of this need and is going ahead with its resettlement programme," he said.

"The Ministry, I am pleased to say, is taking a very realistic attitude to the squatter problem.

"The thing I am afraid of is that as soon as we clear the present squatter problem, we are going to have a similar one in six months' time, unless the Government does something to discourage it."

The Mayor said the city council was annoyed that certain owners of property were encouraging the occupation of their land by squatters and charging them rent. A few were letting the squatters live on their properties free of charge.

The landlord at Tynwald is making a minimum of $1 500 a month from more than 300 squatters.

A number of smaller communities of between 20 and 70 families live elsewhere in the suburbs.

A settlement on one plot in Mandara supports 110 families--234 people. Some of the men are domestic workers in the neighbourhood.

They have one pit latrine and get their water from a borehole. They live on the plot free of charge.

More than 200 people live in the area surrounding the municipal dump next to the Makabusi River. They have no water or toilet facilities except those in the nearby factories.

Councillor Whiting said he had told the Minister of Local Government and Housing that plotholders were subletting their lands to squatters. The Minister said he would look into these cases.

The owner of the Tynwald plot said that as far as he was concerned he was helping the squatters. They had come begging for a place where they could put a roof over their heads.

He produced a file of letters from employers in the northern suburbs who had asked him for accommodation for employees and families.

One employer begged the plotholder to provide lar l for an employee and his family whose home had been attacked at Epworth.

"I hope you will be kind enough to provide accommodation for this man who is employed by me," read another letter. "He is capable of paying $5 in rent."

The owner of the plot said he had written to the Government three times asking them to buy his plot for the squatters, but he had so far received no reply.

One of the squatters, Mr Tede Guvheya, who left the Mt Darwin area with his family in 1964 and has worked on farms since then, said he had no intention of going back.

Yesterday he was busy putting the finishing touches to his new four-roomed house in which he will live with his wife, six children and aging mother.

"I get money for food and rent from operating a shebeen and selling vegetables," he said.

"When we are short of money for rent the landlord is understanding and can let us off for months on end."

EVOLUTION OF HARARE TO 'SUBURB' EXPLORED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Oct 80 p 6

[Article by Geoff Nyarota]

[Text]

SINCE early this century Harare, Salisbury's oldest black residential area, has been a suburb of the city in everything but name.

Starting life as a "location", it graduated to the status of a "township" and last year, under the previous Government, it acquired the dubious honour of being called a "local government area".

After the local government elections, however, Harare and all other predominantly black residential areas in Salisbury and other cities in Zimbabwe will quietly be called suburbs. For then these "new" suburbs will have councillors representing them directly on their respective city councils.

Is a suburb then a residential area that has a councillor representing it on a city council?

In the past the reason why the black residential areas had to be called a different name to that reserved for the white areas was obvious. Those in power wanted to maintain a distinction.

In the process the term "suburb" acquired a status quite different from its original meaning. Suburbs became synonymous with white-occupied areas, while black areas were either townships, locations or, of late, local government areas.

Some blacks will even proudly announce their move from a township — sorry — local government area to a suburb.

But technically speaking these people will be moving only from one suburb of the city, whether it be Harare or Dzivarasekwa, to another, call it Hatfield or Gun Hill.

The term "suburb" does not refer to the outlook of a particular area. It does not define how "posh" the neighbourhood is, how many acres the stands in the area cover or the colour of the residents.

A suburb is merely a residential area near a city. The word derives from the Latin phrase "sub urbe", literally "near a city". The proximity of the area to a city is the only term of reference.

At last this has been realised and everyone can now live in a suburb, regardless of on which side of the railway line it is.

A Salisbury councillor, Mr S. J. Evans, said he believed all areas of residence should now be referred to as suburbs of Salisbury.

"These local government areas were formally administered by the Government," he explained. "When the Greater Salisbury municipal area was created in 1971 the City of Salisbury was forced to take them over and they were later called local government areas.

"Now with the creation of the new municipal wards this term must fall away."

In the city councils emerging after the elections a distinction between councillors representing wards in suburbs on one hand and those representing wards in local government areas on the other, could foment an unnecessary polarisation of attitudes.

The former would see themselves as working for the interests of the white community and the latter for those of the black community, instead of all working for the general good of the people of their cities.

In an interview the Mayor of Salisbury, Councillor Jack Whiting, said that after the forthcoming municipal elections the term local government areas would fall away as each of these would become a suburb of Salisbury.

"With the advent of the new Government and new policy the whole of Salisbury becomes one entity," he said.

"The old 13 municipal wards will have their council representation reduced from two to one and with the 23 councillors from the recently incorporated wards there will be a total of 36 councillors altogether, who will have the same power."

The only difference between the councillors was that those from the 13 former wards would be elected on the old franchise while those from the new wards were elected under a new system.

Under this system each candidate for the election has an individual ballot box with his photograph attached to it.

The former local government areas could, however, still retain their existing area councils if they so wished, the mayor pointed out. This was entirely up to the residents of the area.

The final decision on the future of the area councils rested with the Minister of Local Government and Housing.

PANNING FOR GOLD IN PFUNGWE REPORTED

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 26 Oct 80 p 5

[Article by Heidi Holland]

[Text]

EVEN the richest of gold-diggers will seldom wear boots when prospecting. An ancient African superstition holds that a prospector in shoes will chase the precious metal away from the earth beneath his feet, and many still believe it.

The barefoot women of Pfungwe in north-eastern Zimbabwe, near Rushinga, revere a dozen supernatural rituals in their quest for gold on the shores of the Mazoe River. They dance wildly on pebbled beaches of the sun-shrunken waterway, singing prayers to ancestral spirits who can lead the way to wealth, and rhythmically patting the rolled stones in an age-old chant of the gold fields. They believe that spangles of the brightest ore on Earth move about mysteriously underground and can be caught only by a select few.

The chosen ones are invariably women at Rushinga because the men of the area are too idle to work, according to Comrade Sarah, a former ZANLA guerilla who is now an official political commissar in the region.

"Pasi ne nunge!" she cries: "Down with laziness!" and the toiling women, many with babies on their backs, raise clenched fists as they echo her words.

The woman from Salisbury who staked the Pfungwe gold claim, and employs local peasant women to pan it, says she struggled for six months after the war to persuade men to get rich in the riverbed.

"But they just want to sit all day," she explains.

Her own husband is a hard worker, however, who learnt the tantalising secrets of gold mining when he was a driver with Anglo American Corporation, taking his bosses to remote corners of the country in search of valuable mineral deposits.

The two entrepreneurs—she with the gift of the gab and he with the technical knowledge—have hit paydirt on alluvial gold diggings as well as in underground mining for emeralds, tin, tantalite and aquamarine in other parts of Zimbabwe.

They employ the same ancient method of extracting gold from the river as their forebears used to find the glittering grains for barter with Portuguese, Dutch, Danish, English and Spanish traders during the last century and beyond. (Julius Caesar is said to have paid his enormous debts and to have swelled his treasury from wealth he derived through Spain from its gold dealings on the African continent.)

GOLD RUST

The most hopeful ground formation for alluvial deposits is a bed of reddish sand which contains small dark specks like gunpowder, called gold rust by local villagers.

Each woman on the Pfungwe claim puts about 1 kg of the gravel and sand into a wooden pan, covers it under an inch or two of water and crumbles the soil with her hands. She extracts and discards large pebbles, then rotates the sand and water to make a portion fly over the brim of the pan. While doing this with her right hand, she uses her left to throw out of the centre of the swirling vortex a portion of sand and water at every revolution.

When the sand has gone down she adds a little fresh water and holds the pan obliquely so that all but a fine, black and apparently metallic sand spills from the bowl. Beneath this dark covering lies the shining gold dust, heavy despite its scant volume and therefore not lost in the swirl of water and soil. The entire process takes less than 15 minutes.

The precious contents of the pan are then poured into a smaller clay bowl, where the gold granules are separated from the earthy matter. In former times the glittering dust would have been brushed with a feather into a snail's shell for storage, and transported to foreign traders in quills of ostrich or vulture. Today, much of it goes straight to the bank in petroleum jelly jars.

BURIED

Seven years of war seriously curtailed mineral discovery in Zimbabwe, but since the ceasefire thousands of prospectors have once again taken up the search for gold. Most of them are aware of the ore's rising value in the modern world, where paper money depreciates constantly. But some still hide their finds from the hungry jaws of city treasure hunters.

An early writer on gold mining, J. M. Stuart, reported: "A large percentage (of gold) is buried in the floors of the huts of the miners, who like to accumulate the precious dust in this manner, though its acquisition is of no more real use to them than are the hoards of the miser.

"It is strange that, after the severe toil, they should be content to bury the gold during their lifetime, while at the death of the owner, the precious metal is interred with him."

Stuart recorded, too, that it was commonplace to visit African villages and discover ordinary pieces of crockery and valueless ornaments recklessly mended and patched with molten gold. He estimated that millions of dollars worth of fine ore had been discovered and lost in this way. A "resurrectionist" would find a lucrative profession, he said.

MOUNTING DOMESTIC UNREST IN ZAMBIA DEPLORED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Oct 80 p 6

[Editorial: "A New Burden"]

[Text]

IT IS disturbing that as Zambia goes into its 17th year of independence it should be facing worsening internal problems.

The Rhodesian war taxed Zambia heavily in many ways. The lifting of that burden should have signalled a quick return to the much happier times that Zambia deserved.

Instead there are continuing shortages, more crime, transport problems, embarrassing allegations involving some of the country's top Service chiefs — and now curfews and talk of a coup.

It is a time of uncertainty and worry for many people.

There is a brighter side. The copper price is rising, education and health services have improved, and the country should be able to spend less on defence.

What Zambia needs is better employment opportunities for many more people and more strings to its economic bow. It is to be hoped that promises of finance obtained by Dr Kaunda on his recent overseas trip will help set the country on its feet.

Zimbabweans will be watching their northern neighbour's successes with delight, and setbacks with sympathy.

The Zambezi must never again be a barrier between Zambia and Zimbabwe. Rather should it be regarded as a waterway providing a permanent means of linking the countries closer together as trade and travel services across the river improve.

CHILEAN EXILES SEEK GOVERNMENT'S SUPPORT

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 24 Oct 80 p 8

[Text] A visiting group of Chilean exiles is confident that Zimbabwe will lend its support to international condemnation of the Chilean Government of General Pinochet.

In an interview yesterday, one of the visiting exiles, Mr Mario Galetovic, said that calls for international condemnation of the Chile Government would be renewed at a forthcoming session of the United Nations General Assembly.

Only five countries in the world support the existing Government. They are Argentina, Brazil, Paraguay, Uruguay, and Lebanon, according to a vote at last year's General Assembly session.

About a million Chilean nationals have been forced to flee the country since a coup d'etat toppled the short-lived socialist Government of Salvador Allende in 1973.

The coup was widely alleged to have been engineered by the CIA in collaboration with the ITT American multinational corporation which has extensive interests in Chile.

Many Chileans are reported to have "disappeared," and last year's General Assembly noted that hundreds of unmarked graves had been found in the main cemetery of Santiago, the Chilean capital.

Mr Galetovic said the leftwing Popular Unity Movement was poised for the first phase of a possible armed struggle from neighbouring Peru against the "fascist" Pinochet Government.

"As you know, we are ringed by dictatorships in neighbouring Bolivia and Argentina. But we believe the social democrat Government in Peru has sympathy with us and we are preparing for an armed struggle.

"Armed struggle, however, will not be the only method of overthrowing the present junta. Trade unions, peasants and the masses as a whole will contribute to the eventual downfall of Pinochet."

BRIEFS

CUBANS OPEN EMBASSY--A two-man Cuban Government delegation has arrived in Salisbury to complete the diplomatic and financial groundwork for establishing an embassy in this country. MUBAKO ATTACKS MEDIA--The Minister of Justice and Constitutional Affairs, Senator Simbi Mubako, yesterday attacked the news media, in particular ZBC, for their handling of the recent strike by court recorders in Salisbury. After reports of the strike appeared in the Herald, ZBC-TV carried an in-depth story on its Monday Magazine programme. The Minister said the Press and television reports were "misleading the workers concerned as well as the general public." The reports gave the false impression that the striking workers were employed by the Ministry of Justice and Constitutional Affairs, he said. Senator Mubako said it was stated on Monday Magazine that the workers were demanding higher wages from the Ministry and even went on to compare the workers' earnings with those of Government employees in other sectors. "This is a gross travesty of the truth." The true position was that the workers were employed by a private concern, Nass and Company. "A report suggesting anything else emanates from crass ignorance or sheer mischief," said the Minister. The allegation made in the programme that the Minister had refused to meet the workers was not correct. In fact he, his officials and Mr Nass, the director of the company, had held talks with the representatives of the workers' committee and officials from the ZTUC, said the Minister. Senator Mubako said he had made a protest to the Minister of Information, Immigration and Tourism, Dr Shamuyarira, about ZTV carrying "such a misleading report." The Minister said Dr Shamuyarira was himself surprised that the report would have been made without prior consultation. The Herald report of the strike carried on October 21 said the 18 court recorders had gone on strike after their request to Mr Nass for a 25 percent increase had not been answered. The report made it apparent that the recorders were employed by Nass and Co., the company that holds the contract for court recording in Zimbabwe. POLICE PROMOTIONS--Last week 176 sergeant-majors and 548 sergeants were promoted to the rank of senior patrol officer with the Zimbabwe Republic Police, a police spokesman announced yesterday. He said the promotions were effective from July 1 this year. Already this year 53 sergeant-majors and 58 sergeants have been promoted to the rank of patrol officer. The promotions were part of a continuing exercise to advance African members of the force to higher ranks, the spokesman said. The latest group was the largest number of men to be promoted at any one time in the history of the police force. In recognition of their long service, the men were entitled to wear two gold bars on their epaulettes as opposed to one gold bar for a junior patrol officer. FRENCH AID CRITICIZED--Paris--French aid to newly independent Zimbabwe has been "derisory" while at the same time France created the greatest number of obstacles to Zimbabwe's adhesion to the vital Lome Convention with the European Common Market, the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, said in a magazine interview published here. Mr Mugabe also accused French-speaking Africa of not helping in the struggle for majority rule in Zimbabwe. "Perhaps the influence of France can be seen in the fact that these countries take account of French foreign policy in setting their own objectives," he told the magazine Jeune Afrique. But he added he believed French-speaking Africa now saw the necessity to "speak to us and get to know us better." Mr Mugabe said France had given a few grants to Zimbabwean students. Any other aid was "not worth mentioning," he added. Mr Mugabe admitted Paris had agreed to do "everything possible to help us through the EEC" but at the same time he accused France of creating obstacles to Zimbabwe's adhesion to the Lome Convention. ZIMBABWE QUITS REGIONAL BODY--Mbabane--Zimbabwe has pulled out of a Southern African conservation organisation, apparently because South Africa is a member. The animal health section of the Southern African Regional Committee for Conservation and the Utilisation of the Soil, meeting in Mbabane, is discussing the drought situation, the spread of stock diseases such as rabies, foot-and-mouth disease and tsetse fly infections. The organisation was established to study conservation, soil use and animal health in the region and has as members Swaziland, Angola, Mozambique, Malawi, Lesotho, Botswana, South Africa and Namibia. Zambia quit the organisation a few years ago and now Zimbabwe has followed suit. The conference ends tomorrow. A Government spokesman in Salisbury, asked to comment on the Mbabane report, referred to a decision announced at the end of the Southern African Coordination Conference held in Salisbury between September 9-11. "A paragraph in the final resolution under the heading Animal Health, said the Government, had decided to pull out of SARCCUS," the spokesman said.--Herald Africa News Service [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 29 Oct 80 p 7]

WHEAT PRICE BOOST--The Government had agreed to an increase of $5 a tonne in the preplanting producer price for the current wheat crop, the Minister of Agriculture, Senator Denis Norman, announced yesterday. "The prescribed producer price for wheat delivered to the Grain Marketing Board in the intake year ending March 31 1981 will be $135 per tonne, Class AS," Senator Norman said. The Minister also announced that the preplanting price for the 1981 winter wheat crop would be $155 a tonne, Class AS. He said that there had been a reduction in the area planted to wheat in the past two years. "This decline in production was attributable to a number of factors, including viability and shortage of water due to drought conditions. "It was necessary to reverse this decline and, accordingly, the increased prices were provided to act as an incentive to increase production," he said. Senator Norman called on the wheat growers to make substantial increases in their wheat plantings for 1981, as maize farmers had done after the preplanting price of maize was raised to $120 a tonne. NO BEEF IMPORTS--There would be no dramatic improvement in the meat rationing system and no importing of beef to Zimbabwe, Senator Denis Norman, Minister of Agriculture, said yesterday. He told a beef symposium at Gilson Estate that meat rationing would continue until February. Thereafter, it would ease up until March when he expected it might be lifted entirely. He did not envisage beef being imported. "No, I don't think we will import beef," he said. "We will have to sweat this one out." [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 24 Oct 80 p 1]

KAUNDA PRAISES ZAMBIAN-MALAWI FRIENDSHIP

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 30 Oct 80 p 5

[Text]

PRESIDENT Kaunda has said that the people of this region are one although divided by artificial colonial boundaries.

Dr Kaunda said this when visiting Malawi's Blantyre mayor Mr Enos Chikwende called on him at State House yesterday.

The President described the relationship between Zambia and Malawi as excellent and called for closer ties between the two countries at the local government level as it was important that people at grassroots level should work together.

On reports that Chipata was part of Malawi, the Blantyre mayor said he had been misquoted.

Mr Chikwende said he was merely commenting on remarks already made by Copperbelt member of the Central Committee Mr Shadreck Soko, last Friday which were echoed by Mr Sata.

"At the luncheon in Ndola, my colleague the mayor of Ndola spoke first and then I replied to the effect that Zambia and Malawi are one and people of the two countries are the same," he said.

"Emphasising the remarks, I gave an example that people around Chipata could have gardens across the border in Malawi and vice versa," he added. — Zana/Times Reporter.

ECA MEETING ON GEOTHERMAL ENERGY OPENS

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 21 Oct 80 p 8

[Text]

ADDIS ABABA (EH) — A meeting of a panel of experts discussing different aspects of geothermal energy and biomass including fuelwood and charcoal was opened at Africa Hall yesterday.

The meeting was inaugurated by Mr. Marc Manirakiza, Deputy Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA).

Experts from Cameroon, Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Gabon, Madagascar, Tanzania, Togo, Zambia, Upper Volta and Uganda are taking part in the discussions that are scheduled to last until October 25.

A 14-point agenda will serve as the basis of the nearly week-long discussions. According to the agenda, statements will be made by participants in respect to the utilization of biomass, fuelwood and charcoal potential as sources of energy in their respective countries. The panel of experts are to review biomass, fuelwood and charcoal potential as sources of energy in Africa.

The panel will also examine prospects for and utilization of biogas in Africa as an alternate source of energy including problems related to methods of conversion and constraints for its utilization. The panel of experts will review fuelwood and charcoal utilization and its integration in the development plan of African countries with other biomass energy resources.

It was further learned that the experts will be discussing such items as the short and long-term planning, formulation of priority programme and policies for its implementation in the field of biomass development and utilization in Africa. Co-operation between African and other countries in the field of biomass, fuelwood and charcoal research, transfer of technology, flow of information, population sensitization, education and training and preparation of instruction manuals, will be discussed at the meeting.

The experts are expected to arrive at a common African policy on biomass, fuelwood and charcoal utilization, which is expected to be submitted for adoption at the intergovernmental meeting as an African approach to the problem during the United Nations Conference on new and renewable sources of energy to be held in Nairobi, Kenya, in August 1981. The panel of experts is expected to emerge with a comprehensive report at the end of the meeting.

Another meeting opened by Deputy Executive Secretary of ECA the same day was the meeting of representatives of African Portuguese-speaking countries on statistical training programme.

A document issued in connection with the meeting is dedicated to a draft model project for operational support for improvement of the statistical training programme for middle level personnel. The countries benefitting from the programme are Angola, Cape Verde, Guinea Bissau, Mozambique, and Sao Tome and Principe.

STUDY TAKES DISMAL VIEW OF AFRICA'S PROGRESS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 28 Oct 80 p 14

[Text]

EIGHTEEN years after causing an international controversy by forecasting a disastrous future for newly independent Africa, French ecologist, agronomist and author Rene Dumont says the situation is continually worsening.

His 1962 bestseller, False Start in Africa, arose out of studies he made for the French Government on "self-interested" French aid to former colonies.

His new book, Africa Strangled, concentrates largely on the two former British territories of Tanzania and Zambia, where he was invited after the first book to analyse development programmes.

Tanzania and Zambia held out high hopes of success among emerging nations.

After a new invitation by the countries' leaders to report on progress, he forecasts dismal prospects both for Tanzania's Ujaama — family socialism — and Zambia's humanism.

Even Tanzania's President, Dr Julius Nyerere, admitted to Dumont that advances had been minimal under the most important controlled sociological experiment in Africa.

"People talk a lot about Tanzania", the President told Dumont. "But in the end we are only interesting by contrast. The neighbours haven't done very much so we make a good impression".

Dumont sums up 19 years of independence in the east African state of 18 million people by saying: "Tanzania is an attempt at trying to be socialist that has struck difficulties of underdevelopment.

'SLAPDASH'

"It is no longer a question of realising dreams of African socialism. Slapdash and authoritarian village projects have been drawn up not only to serve, but also to control peasant farmers and have finally reduced agricultural production."

Edinburgh-educated Dr Nyerere is a close friend of Dumont, an agronomist who has spent 50 years studying Third World agriculture. The President has yet to publish the Dumont report, which concentrates on African rather than European failures.

His most damaging criticism is aimed at black bureaucracy, which has imposed socialism "from above".

Tanzania's rural population has been forced to resettle in 9 000 development villages. Apart from meeting open resistance in many areas, especially from warlike Masai tribesmen, many of the internally managed villages are unworkable.

Dumont attacks chronic shortages, enforced planting of unsuitable crops, poor soil conservation and ostracism of women in elected village councils, and says a series of natural disasters is now adding to bureaucratic mistakes.

In Zambia, which marked 16 years of independence last week, Dumont found that the excesses he criticised in the mid-sixties are now ruining the country.

"Behind a vague philosophical idea, the Zambian ruling class is constructing a neo-colonialism incapable of leading to real economic and political independence", he says — a remark aimed directly at President Kenneth Kaunda, whose vague humanistic guidelines to his overwhelming bureaucracy are behind the mortgaged economy of one of the world's biggest copper producers.

President Kaunda is described as "simple, affable, warm, and, above all, an honest man but a prisoner of an impossible situation."

WASTED

Apart from wasting its heritage on prestige projects, Zambia has created a gigantic unemployed urban population because it is forced to reject 100 000 partly educated candidates for secondary schooling every year.

Dumont reveals a catastrophic picture of a corrupt bureaucracy, rapacious state enterprises, a bigger privileged class than during colonial rule, and threatened famine because rural areas lack manpower after an exit to shanty towns.

Dumont's Zambian report was so critical that the Zambian bureaucracy tried to block its publication. But President Kaunda insisted on publication, saying: "Only cowards are afraid of the truth".

NASCIMENTO NOTES BREADTH OF TRADE RELATIONS

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 28 Sep 80 p 8

[Text] Luanda, 27 Sep--Lopo do Nascimento, member of the MPLA-Labor Party and minister of foreign trade, reaffirmed the principles that guide Angola in its trade policy, namely, "the establishment of relations with all countries, relations that should be advantageous both for our country and for the entities with whom we deal."

Do Nascimento spoke Thursday in Luanda at the ceremony inaugurating the office of the Japanese firm "Mitsuico Europa" in Angola. He declared that in 1979 the People's Republic of Angola had trade relations with over 60 countries, and that this policy will be pursued. "Some 63 percent of our export trade and 23 percent of our import trade are concentrated on a few countries in Western Europe," the Angolan foreign trade minister added.

The minister noted that Mitsui's great size should not be a hindrance to cooperation, as Angola and this firm should be considered "two partners seeking the best methods and the areas of common interest for developing their relations."

After expressing his assurance that it would be possible to establish "lasting relations with a company that is located in all the countries with which we have the best and closest ties of friendship and cooperation," the Angolan official announced that, starting next year, expansion of the cooperation will be subordinated to effective technical assistance, with the installation of a "post-sale" service and the training of Angolan cadres.

For his part, Eduardo Baptista, assistant administrator of Mitsui, spoke about the various sectors comprised by his firm. "Mitsui," he said, "is one of the oldest and largest companies in Japan, with 192 offices throughout the world, including those on Japanese territory. Mitsui currently employs 13,000 people, and accounts for 10 percent of Japan's foreign trade," Eduardo Baptista said.

BERBERA BASES CALLED 'PROVOCATION' --Luanda, 27 Sep--The JORNAL DE ANGOLA has characterized the agreements giving the United States the right to install its military bases in Berbera, Somalia, as a provocation against the peoples of Africa. The daily notes that these accords are aimed at developing the militarization of the Indian Ocean which, according to a UN decision, should be turned into a zone of peace. The newspaper declares that the North American bases in Somalia are very important for the Rapid Development Force and, above all, for Washington's interference in the internal affairs of independent Africa and the Middle East. The White House authorities are encouraging the expansionist ambitions of the Mogadishu government, the daily adds. The JORNAL DE ANGOLA concludes with an appeal to the progressive world to condemn the criminal alliance between the United States and Somalia, which threatens security and peace in the area, the Red Sea and the Persian Gulf. PREPARATIONS FOR FIRST CONGRESS--The second meeting of the national preparatory commission for the First Extraordinary Congress of the MPLA-Labor Party began today in this city, under the chairmanship of its coordinator, Lucio Lara, member of the party's Political Bureau. During the meeting, the commission members will study the methodology for discussion of the basic documents and for the holding of assemblies and conferences at this stage. They will also approve the general regulations for this body. Speaking at the opening session of the meeting, Lucio Lara gave a brief accounting of the activities of the commission since its first meeting, held last May. The leader urged all party members to engage wholeheartedly in the tasks of holding the Extraordinary Congress and to combat without quarter the internal and foreign enemies of the Angolan people. In addition to denouncing the South African agents, mercenaries and puppets who persist in launching treasonous and constant attacks against the Angolan people, Lara voiced his conviction that this preparatory stage of the congress will provide a wealth of experience, and that the MPLA-Labor Party will continue to be the vanguard leading the party to socialism. TRADE MINISTER IN BRAZIL--Angolan trade policy will be discussed at the Catholic University of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, by a member of the Central Committee of the MPLA-Labor Party and minister of foreign trade, Lopo Do Nascimento; he was recently invited by the foreign affairs department of that university. In his talk, the Angolan leader will stress questions about the Government of the PRA's [People's Republic of Angola] rapprochement, through trade relations, to Africa and other Third World countries. According to the ANGOP press agency, such an interchange involves defining a strategy for economic independence based on the principle of mutual advantages among countries or entities involved. Meanwhile, a PRA delegation headed by Minister of Industry Bento Ribeiro returned Monday to Luanda after an official 10-day working visit to the GDR. Speaking to the press, Bento Ribeiro felt his stay produced positive results for preparing development projects, in the context of strengthening the existing cooperation and friendship between the two countries. Moreover, he indicated that this visit also inaugurated a new form of more active cooperation with the socialist countries. During his stay in the GDR, the Angolan minister visited several industrial centers. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 1 Oct 80 p 8] 9479

Angolan Minister of Defense Col Pedro Maria Tonha, who presided over the ceremoney ending the course, made some recommendations to the new political cadres of the FAPLA to be put into effect in the regions to which the newly trained military men will be sent, before emphasizing that with this training the FAPLA will in the future be capable of performing fruitful work in military units as well as among the popular masses. PFP WARNED AGAINST INTERFERING IN PARLIAMENTARY AFFAIRS

[Editorial]

[Text]

THE matter between the P.F.P. and Mr Kwaku Baah should be settled amicably. It must be as fair as that, and the party should see it so.

A lot of people are wondering what Mr Kwaku Baah has done that constitutes indiscipline and disloyalty to the party.

The public image that is definitely developing for the Nkawkaw Constituency MP is a man who speaks for the common people. And some observers suspect that he is making some people unhappy about his spokesmanship for the common man.

When Mr Kwaku Baah was using a 'Range Rover', an expensive vehicle, these people accused him of being bourgeois; but they kept quiet when they regretfully discovered that the Range Rover enabled him to give lifts to more common people — it had socialistic purpose.

And then Kwaku Baah has been increasingly using his Parliamentary platform to speak for the common people. Was he becoming too much socialistic and therefore becoming disloyal to the P.F.P?

The matter must also be viewed on the basis of keeping party dictatorship away from Parliament as much as possible. The element of party loyalty should be the guide and not the rule for Parliament, otherwise democracy would be undermined.

It was the people who gave birth to political parties and not the other way round. So the superiority of the electorate should be the rule. Kwaku Baah is a learned member of the bar, a respected member of society, two-term MP, and the popular choice of his constituency. Was the constituency consulted before his alleged removal from his Miniority Parliamentary leadership?

The decision who should lead MPs in Parliament should be the MPs' own affair. Only three years hence, the PFP will have another chance to decide who should be in the party leadership for elections. The party must wait for that opportunity; meanwhile it should refrain from undue interference in MPs' Parliamentary affairs.

If the present Constitution should have a chance to operate properly, then it must be allowed to follow the traditions of its kind: MPs should do their work according to their own conscience and the feelings of their constituencies.

Most of all, the P.F.P. must offer itself as a clear alternative to the PNP before it comes to power. It should not accuse the PNP of faults against democracy and then commit those very faults itself.

Kwaku Baah should be allowed to have his big mouth heard; his constituency and all Ghanaians must be told what he has done against party discipline and loyalty.

For the time being, people are asking whether he has committed indiscipline and disloyalty against the P.F.P. for not speaking against the interests of the common people?

TSIKATA ALLEGED ASSASSINATION ATTEMPT--Captain Kojo Tsikata (rtd) has said that the squad of military intelligence personnel, who he had earlier alleged were harassing him for the past four months, attempted to kill him in an accident that occurred between Okponglo and South Legon in Accra. This is contained in a statement signed by him and released in Accra. He said after he escaped unhurt, one of the MI men said: "Next time we shall get you." Ex-Captain Tsikata said since no one was above the law, members of the Intelligence Service must not be allowed to take the law into their own hands and harass innocent and unarmed citizens. He noted that the squad had intensified its harassment on him since he filed a writ at an Accra court against the 19 officers of the squad in respect of their infringements of his constitutional rights over the last four months. Chief Inspector K. Owusu, in charge of the Legon Police Station, confirmed in an interview with the Graphic that the two cars, a Datsun and a Peugeot 504 with registration numbers GZA 7278 and GZ 9732 involved in the accident belong to the Military Intelligence (MI). He disclosed that the personnel of the MI who were in the car at the time of the accident promised to return to the police station to give their statement but had not done so up to the time of going to press. INADEQUATE CHINESE CUTLASSES--An assistant regional secretary of the Ghana National Farmers Council, Mr Anthony Kattah, has asked farmers to send their recently-imported Chinese cutlasses to local blacksmiths for reshaping. Mr Kattah, who is in charge of the Akim-Oda zone of the Eastern Region, said 50 of the "oddly-shaped" cutlasses had been successfully reshaped at a cost of "only ¢6 each." He advised the government to liaise with farmers before importing farming implements. He also asked for the remaining cutlasses to be allocated to the Farmers Council for reshaping and sale to farmers. He said when his efforts to convince farmers to buy the imported cutlasses failed, he had blacksmith's reshape them to local standards, after which farmers preferred them to those produced by the Crocodile Matchet Factory due to the superior metal in the Chinese cutlasses. Mr Kattah also recommended that the price for a sack of cocoa should be raised to ¢300 to help reduce smuggling by being at par with prices in Togo and Ivory Coast. CHEAPOO, GAYFLOR CLASH REGARDING POLITICAL PRISONERS' TRIALS

Cheapoo's Appeal

Monrovia THE REDEEMER in English 23 Oct 80 p 7

[Article by Mike T. James]

[Excerpt] Justice Minister Chea Cheapoo has jointed hundreds of humanitarian voices around the globe in calling on the PRC Government to institute "a speedy and impartial trial" for political prisoners being held in connection with their roles in the ousted "rampantly corrupt" Tolbert administration.

Mr Cheapoo said last Tuesday that he was making the appeal out of his "personal conviction."

Justice Minister Cheapoo is the second cabinet minister of the PRC Government to launch an appeal on behalf of the prisoners. First to enter a plea for the prisoners was Foreign Minister G Baccus Matthews who called for a general amnesty, pointed out that prolonged detention could make public sympathy waver in favor of the prisoners.

Speaking at a news conference last Tuesday, Justice Minister Cheapoo explained that the prolonged detention of the prisoners was due to the "inability of the Special Military Tribunal (which was instituted to try former officials) to conduct speedy trials.

He recommended that the government set up a "Special Commission" to continue the trials in a speedy and impartial manner.

Touching on the condition of the prisoners, the Justice Minister commended the PRC for "tremendously improving" the prison conditions by the provision of better feeding and other facilities.

Colonel Gayflor's Reaction

Monrovia THE REDEEMER in English 23 Oct 80 pp 1, 2, 7

[Text] The Co-Chairman of the Supreme Military Tribunal, Col. Alfred W. Gayflor, has reacted sharply to the recent statement made by Justice Minister Chea Cheapoo that the prolong detention of some of those arrested after the coup was due to the inability of the tribunal to institute their speedy trial.

Col. Gayflor's reaction came in a letter to the editor of the Liberia News Agency with a copy to this paper, rebutting Minister Cheapoo's statement which he described as derogatory.

The following is the full text of Col. Gayflor's letter.

I wish to rebut the derogatory announcement made by the Minister of Justice, Honourable Chea Cheapoo, against the Supreme Military Tribunal that the delay of the trial of the nine senior army officers, AFL and the former officials of the past administration has been due to the inability of the Supreme Military Tribunal.

This announcement is false and misleading the public in general. One of Mr. Cheapoo's reasons for understanding the Military Tribunal is that the Tribunal refused to act under his influences.

On several occasions, Minister Chea Cheapoo who is now blaming the PRC Government for not speedy trying both detainees, has instigated the Military Tribunal not to recommend release of certain detainees to the Head of State based on what the Tribunal considers as personal grudge.

During the heat of the coup, in my own presence, Minister Chea Cheapoo remarked in a Press Conference within the Ministry of Justice that Mr. Euphraim Smallwood who was on his farm when the coup took place, had to go to jail regardless of how long he remained on his farm.

He made this remark with some abusive words to Mr. Smallwood and definitely he did not rest until Smallwood went to jail where he is at present. Minister Chea Cheapoo feels that because he is the Minister of Justice, the Supreme Military Tribunal is amenable to him instead of the Head of State and the Co-Chairman, PRC. The power of the position of a Minister of Justice now in the hands of Minister Chea Cheapoo seems to be a razor blade in the hands of a crawling child who does not know the detrimentality of the razor blade.

The broadcast made by Minister Cheapoo underestimating the Supreme Military Tribunal is an indisputable condemnation of the confidence reposed in the Tribunal by the Head of State before he made the appointment of said Tribunal for which he Minister Cheapoo shouuld be held up.

In view of the foregoing and circumstances, I conceive no reason why Minister Chee Cheapoo should mislead the public by blaming the PRC Government for delaying trial of the present political detainees when in fact he knows that he substantially contributed towards the imprisonment of some of the said detainees because of personal grudge. The Military Tribunal has made Minister Chea Cheapoo to understand that the Tribunal cannot handle the affairs of the Nation with vindictiveness.

Kind rewards.

UNTIL COMPLETE VICTORY IS ACHIEVED, THE STRUGGLE CONTINUES!

Very truly yours,
Alfred V. W. Gayflor

OFFICIALS at the National Investment Commission (NIC) are of the belief that with necessary assistance, Liberian businesses can play a meaningful role in salvaging the Liberian economy.

NIC acting chairman Dew Tuan Wleh Mayson spoke lengthily recently of his commission's commitment to assisting the Liberian business sector.

Prof. Mayson said that Liberian businesses can help greatly if the Government utilizes more of their skills and services.

Mayson said plans were afoot to provide financial assistance and assist Liberian businesses in the area of management along with training in production techniques and skills.

He said it was in line with this aim that the Netherlands Development Association (FMO) had granted two and a half million dollars to the Liberian Government for assistance to small and medium scale enterprises in the country.

Another agreement for four million dollars from the World Bank is expected to be concluded soon to buttress the scheme, Mayson said.

With respect to restricting certain businesses to Liberians, Mayson said the problem at present was not one of legislating or decreasing laws to give priority to Liberians, but one of getting Liberians to fill the "vacuum" created by the flight of foreigners.

With reference to the financial squeezes applied by banking institutions, Mayson did acknowledge the presence of frustrations confronting existing businesses due to imposed restrictions.

He however said local lending institutions were not solely to blame as they are merely affiliates of multinationals waiting to see the trend of events before loosing strings.

PRC URGED TO ESTABLISH WATCHDOG COMMITTEE ON PRICES

Monrovia THE REDEEMER in English 23 Oct 80 p 2

[Editorial]

[Text] The spate of price increases, particularly those of basic consumer commodities, in the wake of the April 12 Revolution continues to be a source of public outcry, and calls for drastic policy decision and action.

Inspite of the sensitivity and resultant proclamations by responsible authorities within the PRC Government, some detractors and of the people's revolution continue to play deaf ears to the call for price stabilization. Notable among these are our foreign "friends," both African and otherwise, who import these items and tag inflated marked prices on them in the name of increased tariffs and worldwide inflation.

It is a matter of fact that in crisis situations, the economic pendulum of any given society swings precariously between inflation and recession. While the Liberian situation is not peculiar, the fact remains that the speedy return to normalcy after the revolution is a classic example of the determination to maintain economic stability and development in the country.

This, therefore, renders unjustifiable, unpatriotic and inexcusable the "jumping dances" of prices on the Liberian market; it also calls for keen monitoring of these prices by the PRC in the interest of the Liberian people.

While it is agreed that the Commerce Ministry is charged with power or authority to monitor and control prices, it would seem that this Ministry has acted as a catalyst in the recent spate of price increases by its own pronouncements; it was that agency of Government that first announced, the increase in price of bread and soft drinks, followed by other consumers goods without first setting up an investigative committee to verify prices forwarded to it by importers.

While the alertness and sensitivity of the PRC Committee on Commerce and other officers within the Council saved a confused situation, the fact still remains that the time has come for the People's Redemption Council to set up a watchdog committee that would coordinate the efforts of the Commerce Ministry in the area of pricing and price stabilization.

Importers' documents should be crosschecked and double-checked, and a minimum profit margin established by the watchdog committee in order to keep prices as low as possible, importers and traders found falsifying documents or going above the marked profit margin should be penalized severely.

After all, the country is in a revolutionary process and this calls for sacrifices from both citizens and foreigners alike to ensure the success of the revolution; our African, Asian and Middle-Eastern "friends" should be made to realize that inspite of the worldwide economic situation, Liberia still grants them total repatriation of capital and profits. This alone is sufficient incentive for them to help ensure the success of the revolution by stabilizing, if not actually cutting back on prices.

While we need our friends as partners in progress, it is imperative that we should neither compromise nor sacrifice the well-being of our people and the development of our country on the altar of "friendship."

"A friend in need is said to be a friend indeed," this is the time for those "friends" to show their worth; at the same time we, suggest that the PRC acts as watchdog over the price situation.

It must be remembered that a hungry man is an angry man, so also it is that an empty bag cannot stand; unless something drastic is done about the escalating price increases we might be allowing our exploiters a field day.

CITIZENS SHOULD IDENTIFY SABOTEURS--Labour Minister Fred J. Blay has called on Liberians and foreign residents to help the PRC Government identify the social ills in the society for speedy socioeconomic development. He said since the revolution was aimed at creating a better living standard for the Liberian people. This could only be achieved if "we identified those who sabotaged our efforts." Minister Blay made these remarks last Saturday when the citizens of Murraysville Township in Sinoe County residing here gowned him in appreciation of his appointment in the government of the PRC. He said despite the popularity of the Liberian revolution, citizens needed to be alert and ever cautious of false ideologies spreading over the world. AGRICULTURAL WORKERS UNION--The National Union of Plantations, Agriculture, Forestry and Allied Workers of Liberia has been recognized by the Ministry of Labor, Youth and Sports. In a message to the Union's General Secretary, Mr V. Budu Seton, Labor Minister, Lt Col Fred J Blay, said the recognition was based on the Union's Consitution which, he said, was in conformity with the Labor Laws of Liberia. The Union which represents more than 8,000 workers, held its first convention at the Ducor Hotel in Monrovia last month and elected its national officers. Commenting on the recognition, Mr Seton congratulated the PRC government for alleviating what he described as the "crippling restrictions" on trade unions imposed by the deposed government. Meanwhile, the General Secretary said he would organize members of the union to negotiate with managements in their areas of employment, in keeping with the economic structure and to educate them accordingly. The Union was formed last July in Bomi Territory following a pronouncement by Labor Minister, Fred J Blay that agricultural workers could organize themselves into a National Union. OFFICIAL STRESSES PORTUGUESE DESIRE FOR COOPERATION

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 1 Oct 80 p 3

[Text] "During our stay, we encountered a strong desire on the part of the Portuguese Government to resume relations between Mozambique and Portugal within a spirit of equality." Fernando Vaz, vice minister of health, so informed the press yesterday, speaking of the results of the discussions between the two governments following an official visit by this member of the Mozambican Government to Portugal.

The vice minister of health returned from Portugal day before yesterday. He was received during his stay by Portuguese President Ramalho Eanes and Prime Minister Sa Carneiro. Vaz arrived in Maputo Monday night. Speaking with our press, he stressed that he had had fruitful discussions with representatives of the Portuguese Government, affirming that "we reached agreement on new modes of cooperation in the health field, particularly with regard to sending higher level teachers and other highly trained cadres to work in Mozambique."

In accordance with this new model of cooperation between Mozambique and Portugal in the health field, it was established that Mozambique would contract highly specialized Portuguese cadres for a 6-month period and would send Mozambican students to Portugal to specialize in various branches of health care.

Referring to the Portuguese Government's readiness to reestablish sound relations of cooperation with Mozambique, the vice minister of health said both President Eanes and Prime Minister Sa Carneiro reiterated that "there is currently no problem that could prejudice normal relations of cooperation between Mozambique and Portugal."

Gulbenkian Foundation Prepared To Support Our Programs

Vaz emphasized the complete success of his meetings with the ministers of education and social affairs, which were also attended by the deans and directors of the major Portuguese universities, the secretary of state for health, and hospital directors. He reported that Dr Sa Machado, speaking for the Gulbenkian Foundation, said the foundation was prepared to support the projects presented by the People's Republic of Mozambique.

"We encountered a real opening of support for our projects from the Gulbenkian Foundation," the Mozambican Government officials added, referring to his meeting with the administrator of that major Portuguese foundation.

The vice minister of health also stressed his successful contacts with the Secretariat of State of the Portuguese Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the organ through which the signed accords are to be implemented. Vaz assured: "We really strengthened the relations of cooperation with Portugal, particularly those existing in the health field."

Accompanied by the national director of medical assistance, the Mozambican vice minister of health went to Portugal after taking part in a session of the WHO in Brazzaville. He is the first member of the government of the People's Republic of Mozambique to pay an official visit to Portugal since the interruption of contacts between the Mozambican and Portuguese governments.

MACHEL ADDRESSES GRADUATING AIRMEN TRAINED ABROAD

Beira NOTICIAS DE BEIRA in Portuguese 4 Oct 80 p 3

[Speech by President Machel of the People's Republic of Mozambique to Airmen Graduating From the First Air Force Specialists Course on 3 October 1980 at Beira Air Force Base]

[Excerpts] Marshal Samora Machel, President of the FRELIMO Party [Mozambique Liberation Front Party] and commander in chief of the Mozambique Armed Forces [FPLM] yesterday morning presided over the ceremony ending the First Mozambican Air Force Specialists Course at the Beira Air Force Base installations. Speaking to the new military cadres, President Samora Machel, accompanied by high party, government and Mozambican Armed Forces officials, specifically the minister of interior and resident-minister in Sofala, Mariano Matsinhe, and Minister of Security Jacinto Veloso, made the following impromptu speech:

"(...) Study demands sacrifice; it requires dedication; it requires patience. To study is difficult because it means the assumption of responsibilities; it means being responsible.

To study is not simply the accomplishment of study but rather the responsibility which falls on the men to whom the mission of studying is entrusted. And, particularly when we go to study outside our country, we represent all the people. Through us they see what the Mozambican people are. Every action, every gesture has a meaning. And those who go abroad many times represent the party. And when they represent the party they represent our ideology, our policy.

If we are mediocre, if we are adventurers, if we are superficial in our analyses, or if we are irresponsible, it is an reflection. That is why selection is strict.

If someone leaves the base without leave, he is lacking in discipline. If someone goes out looking for prostitutes, he is lacking in discipline; we have to treat him because he is sick. Because if he leaves without orders, some day he is going to take off in a MIG without orders. And when we question him he will say that he was trying it out.

This means that we have to record the past of everyone, the life of everyone, so that we can understand and watch the present and above all, the future of that man.

The concern of men who are sent abroad has to be great.

National unity is lived daily and constructed from day to day. Those men represent the government of the People's Republic of Mozambique. The building of socialism is the task of the government in all areas. Policy has to be the guiding force. Policy has to be lived, has to be an integral part of our life.

They also represent the Mozambican people.

We produce heroes, we produce you. That is why it is an obligation, a duty to maintain the glorious traditions of the FPLM, maintain the courage, heroism and determination of the Mozambican people. That is your duty.

The Secret of Victory

The secret of victory in an organization,and organization begins here. You went abroad to learn, to learn to fly, to learn to organize, to the enemy. These aircraft are not for killing buffalos or elephants. They are for use against the enemy, against men. They are not for bombing snakes, did you understand that?

When we overthrew the Portuguese colonialism we consolidated national unity. When we achieved victory we had liquidated tribalism. There are no tribes in Mozambique. There are Mozambicans, Mozambicans from various regions.

When we defeated colonialism, we killed tribalism. We were tribes and we are now a nation, the Mozambican nation. We killed regionalism. We killed racism. We killed ambition--ambition in a negative sense, because there is that ambition of curiosity, of wanting to learn. To be criminal to satisfy ambition, no!

We killed individualism. We killed elitism. We cultivated the pride of being Mozambican. We killed vanity. We killed elitism to create for ourselves the pride of being Mozambicans. Vanity was replaced by modesty.

The men who went to study to the Soviet Union had two tasks: to learn so that they would be useful and to learn so that they could be teachers; teacher-organizers, teacher-trainers, teacher-programers, teacher-trainers, teacher-disciplinarians, demanding teachers, all through their own behavior.

You have here our hard-working Soviet comrades. I wanted, in the name of the party and our government, for you to acquire the qualities they have as workers. They are great specialists. But they also know how to use a hoe, a pick, a broom. I saw what they did in the recovery of the nation.

Those who are finishing the First Air Force Specialists Course in several specialties have to know that now is the beginning. They acquired the necessary basic training and now there will be a weeding-out process. We shall expel from our army those who lack discipline, the disorganized, the loafers and the incompetents.

Incompetence has no place in the armed forces. Negligence, mental sloth, opposition to change and inertia have no place in the armed forces of Mozambique because they continue to be the vanguard force for giving vigor to the process of construction of socialism in Mozambique. We do not want to build socialism with a mediocre army.

We must primarily produce competent cadres as a guarantee of our army. That responsibility falls particularly on the captain, lieutenant, second lieutenant and sergeant candidate because they are the ones who are in permanent contact with the soldiers. It is from them that we are going to require a greater responsibility. Each one will produce in his own image. When a platoon is bad, it is not the platoon that is bad, it is the officer who is bad.

Primarily heroes in study. Study for what? To know how to fight, to understand and follow the development of military science and technology, to know the enemy because he has to be studied always. There is a direct confrontation between capitalism and socialism, and we represent socialism in this zone of Africa. That is why it is necessary to study so that we can be the best.

Then fight to vanquish poverty. I would like to see you well uniformed but with items produced by military personnel, with boots to your liking but produced by you so that when we come here we can see that these are pilots, those are mechanics, those are other specialists, each identified by his own uniform. You must be the ones to produce. It is not going to come from the sky. All this means struggle.

It means fighting against the physical enemy, fighting against the immoral enemy, fighting against political and ideological corruption, fighting against vices. And this because you are of various origins. Some come from the cities, others from villages and still others from the rural areas. And this is the center for changing man through collective living and work, through common thought, producing new ideas and abandoning the thatched hut mentality.

And above all there must be discipline. Discipline is a part of our life. It makes us proud. It led us to victory over Portuguese colonialism, racism, regionalism and the internal enemy--the reactionaries who tried to make of our struggle a pure and simple nationalist struggle. It was necessary to fight within FRELIMO and we have no apprehension in shooting when it comes to a reactionary. Periodic purging of our ranks is necessary because we do not want reactionaries in the armed forces.

Our armed forces--particularly the officers--have to be communists who defend our ideology, our oppressed and exploited classes and our people. The communists have the honor of being with our armed forces, of wearing the uniform we do.

We know that you did well and that the results will now be seen in the daily work you are going to perform. Obey the voice of command. I repeat here: Know how to obey the voice of command. And that means that at any time, under all circumstances, the voice of command must be obeyed. Each one must know his place within the military structure. In that way we shall grow. We want an army of heroes; heroes in combat, in the defense of the revolution, in the construction of socialism, in the defense of national unity, in the defense of sovereignty, in discipline and work.

PRIVATE ENTERPRISE ENSURES IMPROVED SUPPLY

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 2 Oct 80 p 2

[Text] Introducing the private Dionisio & Almeida warehouse approximately 4 months ago, as a purveyor for some hotel establishments in greater Maputo; namely, hotels, pensions and luxury first and second category restaurants, has noticeably improved the system of supplying foodstuffs to these establishments.

Indeed, since it began to supply the hotel industry in June 1980, the firm of Dionisio & Almeida has generally not had great problems in distributing supplies to its consumers, according to their quotas.

On this subject, it should be stressed that there is a shortage of some products, such as potatoes, onions, chickens and cleaning supplies, and it has been difficult to acquire them in adequate quantities to supply all customers.

The administrative and business managers of that firm told our reporter that work has gone smoothly basically because the factories and firms involved have regularly supplied goods to the warehouse and have met the quotas levied on them.

Moreover, those officials stated they have come to depend on the great help from the Ministry of Domestic Trade, through the respective provincial delegation, the entity with which they are in constant contact to solve one problem or another.

It should be recalled that previously the hotel industry was supplied by COGROPA [Wholesale Trade of Foodstuffs], a state company in the wholesale food business which, because it was so large, was not efficient.

Thus, the introduction of the Dionisio & Almeida warehouse as a purveyor to the hotel industry is part of the large plan to reorganize firms, aiming primarily to divide properly the tasks of food marketing firms and then to reduce COGROPA's customers so that this wholesale trade firm can do its work better.

Before becoming involved in this new endeavor, the firm of Dionisio & Almeida was geared mainly to marketing goods for the general trade (canteens and grocery stores). Now, as part of this new supply system, this firm will be divided into two sectors: the general one, which will continue its previous work and the hotel industry.

LACK OF AUTOMOTIVE BODY PARTS THREATENS PRODUCTION

Beira NOTICIAS DA BEIRA in Portuguese 7 Oct 80 p 2

[Excerpts] If quick measures are not taken for the acquisition of materials needed for its work, the INCAR Company, an industrial unit specializing in the construction and installation of vehicle bodies, is shortly going to come to a complete standstill after 2 years of constant struggling against difficulties a not-easily solved nature. Actually, for more than two years there has not been even the minimum amounts of material necessary in that factory: paint, glue, glass, among other accessories. There is neither fabric nor lumber for making the seats for buses. This situation has caused the work performed recently to be done with materials gathered from among those which some time ago had been classified as useless.

At a time when highway passenger service faces many difficulties, particularly in the cities where hundreds of thousands of workers use public buses for their movements, the situation of the body assembly and installation industry is particularly serious.

"Our work varies from day to day," was what the administrative office supervisor of the Body Industry Company was able to tell us on the subject, saying that since the beginning of the shortage of materials, the disorganization of production has been a problem. Even material which can be produced in the country is very difficult to obtain. Moreover, all national factories generally face that problem because there are no raw materials on a domestic level for production of the majority of the material we need.

It is emphasized that despite all the difficulties mentioned of underemployment due to the lack of materials of the nearly 400 workers the INCAR Company employs today, it was possible to install bodies on 44 chassis belonging to Urban Public Transportation, some of which are today circulating in the cities of Maputo and Beira. Other activities were also carried out, in body work on automotive vehicles for state long-haul transportation as well as in body work on vehicles belonging to private entities.
